Whoever maliciously shall strike any person with a weapon in the church or church-yard, or draw any weapon there with intent to strike, shall have one of his ears cut off; and if he have no ears, shall be marked on the cheek with a hot iron with the letter F. that he may be known for a fighter, or marker of fight; 5 & 6 Ed. 3. cap. 4.

Fabric-lands. Are lands given to the rebuilding, repair, or maintenance of cathedrals, or other churches, and mentioned in the act of Oblivion, 12 Car. 2. cap. 8. In ancient time every one almost gave by his will, more or less, to the fabric of the cathedral or parish church where he lived. And these were called fabric-lands, because given ad fabricam ecclesiae reparandum. In Dei nomine Amen. De Veneris ante feptun nativitatis Sancti Johannis Baptistae, Annae Domini 1423. Fatto. As no one person, whose trade is extensive, can tranfet all his own affairs; so it is necessary for him to depute another in his place, on whose ability and honesty he can rely; and such person so deputed is called a fator, who is in nature of a fervant, whose acts shall bind his master or principal, so far as he acts pursuant to the authority given him. Molloy 421.

If the commiffion be general, as to dipefes, do, and deal therein as if it were your own, hereby the fator is excused if a lofs happens; but if the commiffion be to fall and dipefes, hereby the factor is not enabled to fall upon tick, nor can he fell for any unreasonable time, as ten or twenty years, though there be the words as if it were your own, but must fell according to the usual time, for which credit is given for the commodities he dipefes of. Molloy 422. 1 Bully. 103.

In account the defendant pleads before auditors, that the goods for which he is to account were bona perturba, and notwithstanding his care in keeping them were worfe, and that they remained in his hands for want of buyers, and were in danger of growing worfe, and that therefore he fell them upon credit to a man beyond sea; this is no good plea, for a factor cannot fell, even bona perturba, upon credit, without a particular commiffion fo to do. 2 Med. 100.

In favour of trade and merchandize, an action of account lies at Common law against a factor as against a bailiff, in which he shall have all reasonable allowances. 9 Co. 90 b. 172 a. 11 Co. 90 a. 2 Rel. Abr. 161.

Also, if a man by obligation acknowledges that he has received money ad profitem et computandum, the obligee may either sue for the bond, or have an action of account at his election. 1 Rel. Abr. 118. Dyly 20. Crs. Eliz. 644.

If goods are configned to a fator, and upon arrival he makes a false entry at the Custom-house, or lands them without paying the customs, whereby they become forfeited, and are feized, whatever the principal hereby suffers, the fator must inevitably make good, altho' his commiffion were general; but if the factor makes his entry according to the invoice, or his letter of advice, and it falls out the same are mistaken, though the goods are lost, yet is the factor excused. Molloy 423. Crs. 76. 265. Lan. 65.

If a factor beyond sea be brought to account in equity, he shall be allowed the customs payable beyond sea, because he runs the venture; and if the goods had been lost by non-payment of such customs, he muft have answer'd the value of them. 1 Chan. 42. 25.

But if a home factor be brought to an account, he shall not be allowed the customs, unles he swear he hath paid them; because it were a matter of great scandal, that any thing should pass the allowance of a court of justice, that is gotten by defrauding the government. 1 Chan. 30.

The principal shall answer for his factor in all cases where he is privy to the act or wrong, and so in contracts, if a factor buy goods on the account of the principal, especially where he has been used fo to do, the contract of the factor will oblige the principal to a performance of the bargain. Molloy 423.

But if A. being poffeffed of certain artificial and counterfeit jewels of the value of 168 l. and knowing them to be such delivers them to B. his fervant, commanding him to transport the said jewels to barbary, and them to fell to the King of Barbary, or such other person as would buy them, it gives B. no charge to conceal their being counterfeit, and thereupon B. goes into Bar- bary, and knowing these jewels to be counterfeit, forwards them to C. for good and true jewels, and affirming to C. that they are worth 810 l. defires C. to fell them to the said King; whereupon C. does fell them to the said King for 810 l. which money C. pays B. who thereupon immediately returns to England, and pays the 810 l. to A. his master; and after the jewels being discovered to be counterfeit, C. is imprifon'd by the said King, till he repays replies the £10 l. out of his own effects; of all which matter C. gives notice to A. and demands satisfaction, &c., yet no action lies against A. for his, and A. says he had the said A. in tenement and certain value, and B. was not by A. particularly directed to C. and all that was done good C. was the voluntary act of the servant, for which the matter is not bound to answer.

It hath been ruled in equity, that the owner employs a factor, and agrees to the disposition of merchandise, and the factor receives the money, and dies indebted, to debts of a higher nature, and it appears by evidence, that this money was vested in other goods, and remains unpaid, these goods shall be taken as part of the merchant's estate, but not the factor's; but if the factor have the money, it shall be looked upon as the factor's estate, and must first answer the debts of superior creditors, &c., for as money has no ear-mark, equity can't follow that in behalf of him who employed the factor.

But if A. employs B. as his factor to sell cloth, and B. sells the cloth on credit, and before the money is paid, B. dies indebted to specially more of his aunts will pay; this money shall be paid to A. and not to the administrator of B. as part of his aunts, but thereof must be deducted what was due to B. for commission; for a factor is in nature only of a truce for his principal. 2 Vern. 638.

The plaintiff being a factor in Blackwell-Hall, advanced to his principal, relying, on the credit of clothes refting in his hands to reimburse himself; the clothier died, his administrator sued at law for the cloth, and the factor prayed that he might be allowed on account of the monies he had advanced, but was dismissed; for if there are debts of a higher nature, it would be a deficiency in the administrator to pay or discount the plaintiff's debts. 2 Vern. 117.

Where a factor at the Canterbury deserves money for factorage, he cannot bring an action for his factorage, unless the principal refuse to come to an account; and it appears that the factor has money in his hands, he may detain, and cannot bring an action for his factorage; but if he were directed to sell all the produce of his adventure in wines, then he may bring an action for his factorage and pains, because he cannot detain, and hath no other remedy. Per Holt. Cant. 349. Hertford v. Pettew.

Where a factor or agent of the affixes company had dealings in his account to his successor, according to the rules of the establishment, which were afterwards burnt by a late agent of the company, the Lord Chancellor ordered the plaintiff to swear that he left them with the successor, which should conclude the company. A factor took a bond in his own name, and died, and the obligor having failed, a bill was brought against his for an account; the Lord Chancellor put the font to prove that his father the testator gave particular notice to the plaintiff that he told on truth, and to whom. It was held by Lee Ch. J. that though a factor has power to sell, and thereby bind his principal, yet he cannot affect the property of the goods or pledgeing them as a security for his own debt, though there is the formality of a bill of parcels and a receipt. Stron. 1178.

Factorage, Is the wages or allowance paid and made to a factor by the merchant. The gain of factorage is certain, however the actual profits proceeds to the merchant; but the commissions and allowances vary according to the customs and distance of the country, in the several places where factors are resident: In the West-Indies, the common million runs at about 5 per cent. but in France and Spain, &c., not above 2 per cent. and in Holland but one and a half per cent. for a merchant.

Finus. A man's own act or deed. Pratrices were Williamus Polier per concordiam quinmet eurbe pacifico ab omnium diutum adcovinum — ut pactum per feolum jam. Mon. Angl. tom 2. p. 248.

Fautile, (Fatis.) As it is restrained from the original a saving or retention, to a particular understanding in law, is used for the privilege, or a conveyance unto a man by favour, indulgence and dispensation, to do that which by the Common law he cannot do; as to eat flesh upon days prohibited, to marry without banns first alched, to hold two or more ecclesiastical livings; the son to forde the father in a benefice, and such like. And for the same purpose to be allowed to the son of the archbishop of Canterbury, called The court of the faculties, and the chief officer thereof The master of the faculties, Magister ad facultates, whose power to grant as aforeaid was given by 25 H. 8. cap. 21. Cowell. edit. 1725.

The court of faculties is a court, altho' it holdeth no plea of controversy. It belongeth to the archbishop, and his officer is called Magister ad facultates. And his power is to grant dispensations, as to marry, to eat flesh on days prohibited, (and so may every diocesan;) the son to succeed his father in his benefice; one to have two or more benefices consecutively. It is called facultates in the statute of 28 H. 8. where they are allowed by a dispensation.

So that facultates (in this sense) dispensations & indulges, are forms. This authority was raised and given to the archbishop of Canary by the statute of 25 H. 8. 21. 4 Jef. c. 337. Godib. Report. 106. feot. 8.

Stat. 25 H. 8. 21. enacts, 'That the archbishop of Canterbury, and his suffragans, shall have power and authority to ordain, make and constitute a clerk, which shall write and register every licence, dispensation, faculty, writing or other instrument to be granted by the said archbishop, and shall find parchement, wax, and tinct laces convenient for the fame, and shall take for his pains such sums of money as shall be hereafter in this preferent act to him limited in that behalf for the same. And that likewise the King, his heirs and successors, shall by his letters patent under his Great seal ordain, depute, and constitute one sufficient clerk, being learned in the court of Chancery, which always shall be attendant upon the Lord Chancellor, or the Keeper of the Great seal for the time being, as shall make, write and enrol the confirmations of all such licences, dispensations, instruments or other writings, as be thither brought under the archbishop's seal, and be there confirmed and enrolled; and shall also intitle in his book, and enrol of record, such other writings as shall be brought under the archbishop's seal, not to be confirmed, taking for his pains and reasonable sum of money as hereafter by this act shall be limited for the same; and that as well the said clerk appointed by the said archbishop, as the said clerk to be appointed by the King, his heirs or successors, shall subscribe to their names to every such licence, dispensation, faculty or other writing that shall come to their hands to be written, enrolled and enrolled, sealed, signed, enrolled, and enrolled under authority of this act, in form as is before rehearsed.'

An exception was taken, that a faculty granted by the archbishop of Canterbury was not subfcribed by the archbishop's clerk of the faculties, but by his under-clerk, whereas his expressly required by the statute, 25 H. 8. that it should be subscribed by the clerk himself, which is very true; but the act is but directory, and 'tis not said that it shall be subscribed by the chief clerk himself; so that this being signed by his under clerk, and it being customary in this office for the under clerk to sign faculties, this exception is of no force. Lord Ely. 36 Gk. Jef. 457. King's Case 36.

Another exception was taken in the case above, that it was not subfcribed and enrolled by the King's clerk of the faculties in Chancery, as it ought, because he is impowered by the statute to tender an oath to the person who hath obtained it; which statute was made to refrain the extravagant grants of the pope in those days, and therefore should

should be fully and strictly performed by the clerks themselves, and not by their deputy clerks; and this must be intended by the legislators; for otherwise this act would have no weight, especially since there is a privity in the faculty itself, that it shall not be good till subscribed and registered by the clerk of the faculties in Chancery, which is in the nature of a condition precedent, and not to be signed or subscribed by his order. It was held, that where a man doth any thing by the express order of another, and, as it was done in this case, 'tis as good as if done by himself; as where one expressly orders another to sign a deed, which the person thus ordered did afterwards sign, this is good as one determinate act; but where the deputy doth any thing by virtue of a general deputation, it must be where a deputy may be made by law. The judgment was affirmed. 8 Mod. 364, 365. King v. Bishop of Chester.

The King by his prerogative, without the archbishop, may grant to a bishop to hold a church in commendam, notwithstanding the statute of 25 H. 8. c. 21.

For those poor terrified wretches were not only condemned to the penalties of excommunication, but as a faggot to such an appointed place of solomency, but for such a time that was they to have the sign of a faggot embroidery on one, and sometimes on each sieve. And the leaving off this bagge or faggot was often alluded as the sign of apotaxy.

Failure of record. Is when an action is brought against a man; who alleges in his plea matter of record in bar of the action, and aver to prove it by the record; but the plaintiff faith, nulli record, viz. denies there is any such record. Upon which, the defendant hath day given him by the court to bring it in; and if he fails to do it, then he is said to fail of his record, and the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover. Terms de la ley.

In a formen in defendant, a fine with proclamation levied anno 30 H. 8. was pleaded; and upon an issue of null record, the tenant brought it in at the day, but in the proclamations made in Trinity term, the year of the King was left out; but because those which were made in Exeter term before, and in Michaelmas term after were right, and the year of the King was exprassed in them, therefore the other were held to be right, for it must be in the same year.

Upon null record, the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff was outlawed; the plaintiff replied null record, and being at issue thereon, the tenor was brought in by mittimus, by which it appeared, that there was a variance between the day of the return of the exigent, and that where the outlawry was pronounced; and this was held a failure of the record. Dyer 187.

*In afflhe, the tenant pleaded, that before that time the now defendant had brought an afflhe against his father; who pleaded, that the defendant had made a feoffment to him, and the plaintiff was an heir of the feoffor; the defendant pleaded null record, and upon that issue the tenant brought in the record, by which it appeared, that the afflhe was brought against his father and mother; adjudged, that this variance did not make a failure of the record in Filler and Farsett's case. Hib. 55.

Upon another motion for non-joinder of persons, the defendant pleaded in bar a common recovery of the said manor against the donne in tail, who replied null record, and being at issue, the defendant brought in the record, by which it appeared, that the recovery was of the manor of Iffield, instead of Iffield; adjudged, that this being in a common recovery, it shall not be a failure of record for this small variance, but it shall be amended, it being the misprision of the clerk. 5 Rep. 46. Coke's case.

In debt upon an escape, the plaintiff declared, that he had obtained a judgment in an inferior court, upon which the party was taken, and the sheriff suffered him to escape; the defendant pleaded null record, and being at issue, the defendant brought in the record at the day, by which it appeared, that there were several variances in the continuances and process; but yet, because the plaint, count, and judgment certified, did agree with the plaintiff's declaration; adjudged, those variances made no failure. Hib. 179. Coachman v. Hally.

Upon another motion for non-joinder of persons, the defendant pleaded another information exhibited against him the 28th of April 13 J. ac. in the Exchequer, for the same offence; the plaintiff replied null record, upon which they were at issue; and upon the record certified it appeared, that the information in the Exchequer was exhibited the 29th of April in the same year, and it was right in every other thing; and thereupon this was adjudged no failure of the record. Hib. 209. Parv. v. Pari.

In afflhe, the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff was outlawed, the plaintiff replied null record, and being at issue, the defendant brought in the tenor by mittimus, adjudged, this was a failure of the record. Dyer 187.

The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was outlawed, who replied null record, and before the day in which the defendant was to bring in the record, it was removed by writ of error, and thereupon he brought in an exemplification, by which it appeared, without any fail; but that of the King's Bench; adjudged, that this was a failure of the record, and so it had been, if it had been reverted upon the writ of error, though there was such a record at the time of the plea pleaded. Dyer 227.

Upon non damniuration, the plaintiff pleaded, that he was indicted in Middlesex for the same offence; the plaintiff replied null record, and being at issue, the defendant took out a certiorari directed to the justices of peace, and at the day brought in the tenor of the record, certified by the cujus rotularum by mittimus, now, though this certificate was void, because it was not made by the justices of the peace to whom the certiorari was directed, and by consequence the defendant had failed to bring in the record at the day; yet because it was the award of the court, it was held to be no failure in the defendant. Hib. 135. Pie verius Thrill. Antea Certiorari (B. J.) s. C.

In audita querela the plaintiff set forth, that he was taken in and set upon a copy of lettum on an outlawry after judgment, and that the sheriff suffered him to escape; the defendant pleaded, that after the escape, and before the audita querela brought, the outlawry was reverted for error, and to null record. 8 Rep. 142. in Dr. Driver's cafe.
A recognition with condition will not vouch a recognition pleaded in person, and that record. 1 Lord Raym. 84.

A false action, (Fr. Faute.) Is a signified action, that is, such action as, that although the words of the writ be true, yet for certain causes he has no title to recover thereby. And a false action is whereby the words of the writ are false. Coke on Littil. fol. 301. yet sometimes they are confoundcd.

Fairs and markets. Fairs, (Fr. foire, Lat. mundana) A solemn or greater market, granted to any town by privilege. Though the more speedy and commodious provision of such things as the subject needeth, or the utterance of such things as we abound in above our own uses and occasions; both our English and French word seem to come from foire, because it is always incident to a fair by privilege, that a man may not be molested or arrested in it for any other debt, than what was first contracted in the fair, or at least to be promised to be paid there.

1. Of the right of holding a fair or market ; where, when, and how long to be held.

2. Of the duty and power of proprietors of fairs and markets; the toll and duties they are intituled to; and how for a sale in an open fair or market changes the property of a thing sold therein.

3. Of the right of holding a fair or market; where, when, and how long to be held.

The first institution of fairs and markets seems plainly to be for the better regulation of trade and commerce, and that merchants and traders may be furnished with such commodities as they require, at a particular mart, without that trouble and loss of time, which must necessarily attend travelling about from place to place; and therefore as this is a matter of universal concern to the commonwealth; so it hath always been held, that no person can claim a fair or market, unless it be by grant from the King, or by prescription, which supposes such a grant. 2 Inst. 221. 3 Mod. 123.

And therefore if any person sets up any such fair or market, without the King's authority, a quo warranto lies against him; and the persons who frequent such fair, &c. may be punished by fine to the King. 3 Mod. 127.

Also it seems, that if the King grants a patent for holding a fair or market, without a writ of ad quod damnum executed and returned, that the fair may be repealed by faire facias; for though fuch fairs and markets are a benefit to the commonwealth; yet too great a number of them may become nuisances to the publick, as well as a detriment to those who have more ancient grants. 3 Lev. 223.

So where a writ of ad quod damnum is decisively executed, as where f. S. intending to get a patent for a market every Tuesday in Chatham, which is within a mile and a half of Rochester, in which there is a market every Wednesday and Friday, took out a writ of ad quod damnum, which was executed the same day it bore sale, and thirty miles from Rochester, without notice to the mayor, &c. of Rochester, and the patent obtained thereupon was repealed by faire facias. 3 Lev. 220, 221. 2 Vent. 344. S. C.

Replevin. The question was upon the pleading between the Earl of Nottingham and the corporation of Durham, whether the King can grant a fair with the duchy of Lancaster, and out of the county palatine, under the Great Seal of England? And after several arguments at bar, it was adjudged, Pash. 10 Will. 3. C. 8. that he well might; because it is a new royal franchise of a new creation, and was not at any time an inheritance in the Duke of Lancaster. Nut 167, the café of Suffolk Walden. Regi. Entr. 324. Square impaled.

It seems clearly agreed, that if a person hath a right to a fair or market, and another erects a fair or market so near his, that it becomes a nuisance to his fair, &c. that for this detriment and injury done to him, an action on the cafe lies; for it is implied in the King's grant, that it should be free from prejudice to another. 3 Rel. Att. 140.

Also, although the new market be held on a different day, yet an action on the cafe lies; for this, by forefelling the ancient market, may be a greater injury to the owner, than if held on the same day with his. 2 Swain. 172. 1 Mod. 69.

If a person erect a fair or market, and a stranger disturbs those who are coming to buy or sell there, by which he losses his tell, or receives some prejudice in the profits arising from his fair, &c. an action on the cafe lies. 1 Rel. Att. 106. 2 Vent. 26, 28.

So if upon a fale in a fair a stranger disturbs the lord in taking the toll, an action upon the cafe lies for this. 3 Rel. Att. 106.

The King is the sole judge where fairs and markets ought to be kept; and therefore it is said, that if he grants a market to be kept in such a place, which happens not to be convenient for the country, yet the subjects can go to no other; and if they do, the owner of the fair which they resort to is liable to an action at the suit of the grante of the market. 3 Mod. 123.

But if no place be limited for keeping a fair by the King's grant, the grantees may keep it where they please, or rather where they can most conveniently; and if it be fo limited, they may keep it in what part of such place they like. 3 Mod. 168.

By the 13 Eliz. cap. 5. No fairs or markets shall be kept in churchyards.

By the 27 H. 6. cap. 5. "Fairs and markets on the principal feats, viz. Ascension day, Corpus Christi day, Whitsunday, Trinity-Sunday, and all other Sundays, the Assumption of our Lady, All Saints, and Good Friday, shall cease from all dealing of goods and merchandise, necessary viuclus only excepted; upon pain of forfeiture of their goods flowed, the four Sundays in harvest excepted; and the fairs or markets, which are granted to be holden on these festivals may be holden within three days before or after."

But by the Statute 1 Cor. 1. cap. 1. and 29 Cor. 2. cap. 7. by which it is enacted, That no persons whatsoever, above 14 years old, shall exercise any worldly labour, business, or work of their ordinary calling, on the Lord's day except works of necessity and charity, and the dressing and selling of meat in an inn and victualling house, for those who cannot otherwise provide a Sunday's entertainment, and be free of the said day, and no person shall publicly cry or expel to fale any goods whatsoever on this day (except milk, which may be sold before nine in the morning, and after four in the afternoon) on pain of forfeiting the same.

By the Stat. 2 Ed. 3. cap. 15. it is established, That it shall be confined to all the berthers of England, and elsewhere, where need shall require, to cry and publish, within liberties and without, that all the lords which have fairs, be it for yielding certain form for the fame to the King, or otherwise, shall hold the fair for the time that they ought to hold it, and no longer, that is to say, such as have them by the King's charter granted them, or for the time limited by the said charters; and also they, that have them without charter, for the time that they ought to hold them of right; and that every lord, at the beginning of his fair, shall there do, cry and publish, how long the fair shall endure, to the intent that merchants shall not be at the same fairs over the time so published; and upon pain of being grievously punished towards the King; or the said lords shall not hold them over the due time, upon pain to feize the fairs into the King's hands, there to remain till they have made a fine to the King for the offence, after it be duly found, that the lords held the same fairs longer than they ought, or the merchants have continued above the time so cried and published.

And
And by the 5 Ed. 3. cap. 5. reciting, That by the above mentioned statute 2 Ed. 3. called the statute of Northampton, there is no certain punishment ordained against the merchants; if they fell after the time, it is added, "That the said merchants, after the said time, shall close their boots and stalls, without putting any manner of ware or merchandise to sell there; and if it be found that any merchant from henceforth sell any ware or merchandise at the said fairs, after the said time, shall forfeit to our Lord the King the double value of that which is sold; and every man that will sue for our Lord the King shall be received, and also have the fourth part of which shall be left at his suit."

2. Of the duty and power of proprietors of fairs and markets; the toll and duties they are intituled to; and how for a sale in an open fair or market changes the property of a thing sold therein.

If the King grants unto one a fair or market, he shall have, without any words to that purpose, a court of record, called a court of piepowder, as incident thereto, for the tryal of causes of expounding justice, and for the supporting and maintenance of the fair or market. 2 Inf. 320.

Owners and governors of fairs are to take care that every thing be sold according to just weight and measure, for that and other purposes may appoint a clerk of the market, and pay for his maintenance, and for his duty herein can only take his reasonable and just fees. See 4 Inf. 274. 1 Mas. 523. 1 Salk. 372.

Fairs and markets are such franchises as may be forfeited, as if the owners of them held them contrary to their charter, as by keeping a longer time than the charter admits, by diversifying, and by extorting fees and duties where none are due, or more than are justly due. 2 Inf. 220. Finch 164. 3 Mod. 108.

Toll payable at a fair or market is a reasonable sum of money due to the owner of the fair or market, upon the sale of things falling within the fair or market, for stallage, package, or the like. 2 Inf. 222. 2 Jon. 207.

Toll is a matter of private benefit to the owner of the fair or market, and not incident to them; therefore if the King grants a fair or market, and grants no toll, the proprietors can have none, and such fair or market is counted a free fair or market. Cro. Eliz. 558. 2 Inf. 320. S. P. 2 Lat. 1336. S. P. resolved.

Alfo if the King, at the time he grants a fair or market, grants a toll, and the fair is outrageous and excessive, the grant of the toll is void, and the fair becomes a free fair or market. 2 Inf. 222. 2 Lat. 1336.

But the King, after he grants a fair or market, may grant that the patentee may have a reasonable toll; but this must be in consideration of some benefit accruing from it to those who trade and merchandize in such fair or market. 2 Inf. 221.

No toll shall be paid for any thing brought to the fair or market, before the fair is, unless it be by custom time out of mind, and upon such fale the toll is to be paid by the buyer; and therefore my Lord Coke says, that a fair or market by prescription is better than one by grant. 2 Inf. 221.

And by Weym. 1. cap. 31. "Touching them that take outrageous toll, contrary to the common custom of the realm in market towns, it is provided, that if any do in the King's town, which is let in fee-farm, the King shall seize into his own hand the franchise of the market; and if it be another's town, and the name be done by the lord of the town, the King shall do in like manner; and if it be done by a bailiff, or any mean officer, without the commandment of his lord, he shall restore to the plaintiff as much more, for the outrageous taking, as he had of him, if he carried away his toll, and shall have forty days imprisonment." But where by custom a toll is due upon the sale of any goods in a fair or market, and he who ought to pay it refutes, an action on the cafe lies against him. 1 Rel. Abr. 123, 104, 126. But see 3 Lev. 400. where this point is doubted, because toll is quid pro debt, for which del or an affirmans lies.

If goods or wares be brought into a market, the owner of the ground cannot disfrain them damage-fojeant, because stallage, &c. is not tendered; as appears from the following case. The plaintiff brought an action of trespas, for taking with force and arms 7 Aug. 1731. his goods and chattels, vis. 100 bullocks of beasts, 20 cabbages, &c. at Golspornt in the said county of Southampton, and carried them away, to his damage of 40L. The defendants are without force and arms, &c. pleaded Not guilty; upon which if-fue was joined; and as to the right of the trespass they justify, as bailiffs to Richard lord bishop of Winchester, the taking the beans, &c. in a piece of ground called The Market-Place, at Golspornt in the said county of Southampton, on the day of the 7th day of August, 1731, without the will and command of the bishop, and there and there damage-fojeant, as a diftrefs, &c. The plaintiff replied, that King George the First by his letters patent dated the 10th of April in the third year of his reign, granted to Jonathan then lord bishop of Winchester and his successors, that they might have and hold three days fair every Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, in every week for ever at Golspornt aforesaid; for raising and selling flesh, fifth, and other provisions, and all manner of goods and merchandizes commonly bought and sold in markets, with all tolls and other profits to those markets belonging. Then he sets fouts, that before the time when, &c. viz. Saturday, the 7th of August, did bring into the said piece of ground called The Market-Place at Golspornt aforesaid, into the said fair market there as aforesaid thereof, the goods in the declaration, being goods commonly bought and sold in markets, to expound them to sale and to sell them; and the said goods in the said piece of ground in the market then there held did expound to sale, as he well might; which goods were in the said piece of ground in the market aforesaid fo by the plaintiff exposed to sale, until the defendants of their own wrong afterwards, viz. the said 7th of August, during the said fair market fo as aforesaid held, the said goods in the said piece of ground in the said fair market fo as aforesaid exposed to sale, took and carried away, &c. The defendants, after having prayed and had over the said plaintiff's amends without any merit and repula-

tion, by which the markets were granted to Jonathan bishop of Winchester and his successors, with general words of all tolls and other profits to the said markets belonging, rejoin and say, that the plaintiff, before and at the time the said goods were taken at Golspornt aforesaid, unjustly and without any pretense of damage-fojeant, brought the said goods into the said piece of ground called The Market-Place into the said fair market there held and to be held, and to lay them upon the ground there, and to expound them to sale and fell them in the said fair market, without payment of any toll for the same, and absolutely refused to pay any thing to the said plaintiff; whereas the defendants as bailiffs of the said bishop of Winchester at Golspornt aforesaid requested the plaintiff to carry his said goods in the declaration mentioned out of the said piece of ground called The Market-Place; but the plaintiff then and there refused to do; per quod the defendants, as bailiffs of the said bishop of Winchester aforesaid, and consequently the plaintiff exposed them there to sale and to sell them: that in publick markets all subjects have right to bring in their goods; and though where toll is due they will be obliged to pay the toll, yet if they do not, that will not make them trespassers for bringing in their goods, nor can the owner of
of the market disfrain them damage-foajant.

Cra. Eliz. 75. The Mayor of Lancington's cafe; and Cra. Eliz. 628. Sauyer v. Wilkinfor, where it was held by the court, that the ox-hide bought into Londonhall market and sold, could not be said damage-foajant. And as to the matter infalted upon in the rejoinder by the defendants, that they took the goods for not paying of toll; Mr. Draper infalted, that the rejoinder could not be supported, because they did not know, that any and what toll was due, which ought to be set out, that the court might judge whether the toll was reasonable. 2 Inf. 222. And that toll was only payable by the buyer without special custum, which was not pretended in this case. 2 Inf. 220, 221. 2 Lattu. 1379, 1376. Light v. Pym; but not that any toll was demanded by the defendants in the plaintiff in particular. And Mr. Jerjeant Bifkfield, who was countel for the defendants, gave up the rejoinder as naught, and not to be maintained; but then he took ex-ceptions to the replication, that that had not avoided the matter pleaed in bar, because he inferred upon it that the plaintiff ought to pay flallage, or f fleece that he had ten-ded it, otherwise he could not bring his goods into the market; and cited 2 Vul. 155 f. B. R. N. Cathkyn's cafe; where it was held, if A, has a fair in a place, there who have their houses next adjoining to the fair, cannot lawfully open their shops to sell their goods in the fair, but flallage is due for it, for they cannot take any benefit of the fair without paying the duties which belong to him that has gained the free fair, and a flallage is a part of the carriage to the fair to the market fair, More 474. Heddy v. Wheelbye: and therefore it appearing by the defendant's plea, that the place where, &c., was the bishop of Winchester's freehold, and that the plaintiff brought his goods into the market; yet since it did not appear, that he had paid or tendered flallage, the defendant relied lawfully taken them as a diffeins for damage-foajant, for the plaintiff was thereby become a trepfafer ab initio.

But to this Mr. Draper for the plaintiff answered, that the defendants have no where fhewn, flallage was de-manded and refused, but rely only upon non-payment of toll in their rejoinder; and further, that if it was due and demanded, yet the not paying it would not make the plaintiff a trepfafer ab initio. So is Six Carpenters cafe, 8 Co. 146. b. that nonfeasance, where a man does an act by authority in law, as in this cafe where the plaintiff carried his goods to fell into market, will not make him a trepfafer ab initio; but if flallage was due, the de-fendants ought to have demanded any pretence for that, and not diltrain the goods damage-foajant. And as to the principal cafe, he relied on the cafes in Cra. Eliz. 75 & 628. as in point; of which opinion were my brothers Page and Prays, and myself, brother Lee being abient for ficknes; and judgment was given for the plaintiff, nisi, &c. Juse the 16th this term. But it was never moved again. Lord Raym. 1589.

If the King or any of his progenitors have granted to any to be dicharged of toll, either generally or specially; this grant is good to discharge him of all tolls to the King's own fairs or markets, and of the tolls, which together with any fair or market have been granted after such dicharge, a bill of exchange or other paper for that, and not for tolls fer-merly to be paid to cajuets either by grant or prescription. 2 Inf. 221.

Also the King hiself shall not pay toll for any of his goods; and if any be taken, it is punihable within the statute Wythen, 1. cap. 31. 2 Inf. 275. Alth. 15. 8. 2 Vul. 72. and 2 Inf. 221.

But this privilege does not extend to him who is a merchant, and gets his living by buying and selling, but is limited only to such tolls as are of feep and sale, and of the land, and of such things which do grow and are the produce of the land. F. N. B. 228. 2 Leom. 191.

Cra. Eliz. 227. 2 Inf. 221. 1 Rul. Abr. 321-2.

For the encouragement of trade, and to render con-tracts in fairs and markets secure, by the Common law, every fale made in a fair or market overt transfers a complete property in the thing felled to the vender; so that however injurious or illegal the title of the vendor may be, yet the purchase is good against all men. Lath. 144. 2 Inf. 713.

But this general rule, that a fale in a market changes the property, must be understood with the following re-ftrictions: 1. That this sale in a market overt shall not bind the King, altho' it bindeth all others, as infants, feme, clerks, &c., or under age, for in pilton, and whether they were possifed of them in their own right or as executors or administrators. 2 Inf. 713.

2. That although fairs and markets are overt, yet the fale must be in feme open place, as in a fhop, and not in a warehoufe, or other private part of the howe, so that people who go along may fea what is doing; and therefore if the fhop door or window be flut, that the goods cannot be fen, this alters no property. 5 Co. 83. 3. The things bought must be of the nature and quali-ty of things which are made in them, and therefore if a plate, &c. are brought in a scrivener's fhop in London, this alters no property, and the true owner may maintain trover for them. 5 Co. 83. cafe of market overt, de-termined at the Old Bailey, by Popham, Egerton, Ander fon, Brien, and others. Poph. 84. S. C. and S. P. Cra. Eliz. 360. S. C. and S. P. as the law is the fame, if horses are fold in Cliefne, or flop-goods in Smithfield, *Cra. Tuc. 68, 90. Taybor and Bander, S. P. adjudged.

And by the 1 Yar. 1. cap. 21. it is enated, That no fale, exchange, pawn, or mortgage of any jewel, plate, apparel, houhold fuff, or other goods, of what kind, nature, or quality forever the fame shall be of, and that shall be wrongfully or unjustly purloined, taken, robbed or follen from any perfon or perfons, or bodys politic, and which at any time hereafter shall be foul, uttered, delivered, exchanged, pawned, or done away within the fity of London, or liberties thereof, or within the city of Welfington, in the county of Middleter, or within Southurk, in the county of Surry, or within twelve miles of the faid fity of London, to any broker or brokers, or pawn-takers, by any ways or meanes whatsoever, directly or indirectly, shall work, or make any wrong change of the property of other, or from any perfon or perfons, or body politic, from whom the fame jewels, plate, apparel houhold fuff or goods, were or shall be wrongfully purloined, taken, robbed or follen.

4. The goods must be fold, and a valuable considera-tion actually paid for them. 2 Inf. 713.

5. If the buyer knows at the time of the fale that the owner has not the absolute property; this will not bar the right owner. 2 Inf. 713. 2 And. 115. and 3 Co. 78. b. S. P.

6. The fale must be without covin, or any combina-tion between the buyer and feller, to defraud the true fuch. 2 Inf. 713. 2 And. 315. and 3 Co. 78. b. S. P.

7. If a fale be made of goods by a stranger in a mar-ket overt, whereby the right of A, is bound; yet if the feller acquireth the goods again, A. may take them again, because he was the wrong-doe, and he shall not take ad-vantage of his own wrong. 2 Inf. 713.

8. There must be a fale and contract, and therefore a fale to a man of his own goods in market overt bindeth not; and likewise a fale in market overt by an infant of such tendernes of age, as it may appear to the buyer that he is within age, or by a femer covert, if the buyer know her to be a covert, can not found her as such as the usuall covertes for, or by the consent of her husband, bindeth not. 2 Inf. 713.

9. The contract must be originally, and wholly made in the market overt, and not to have the incidence out of the market, and the consummation in the market. 2 Inf. 713, 714.

10. The false must not be in the night, but between fun-rising and sun-set; but a false made in the night is good to bind the parties, but not a stranger. 2 Inf. 714.

Here also we must observe, that at Common law there was no restitution of goods on any profession whatever, except on an appeal of larceny; but to remedy this inconvenience, and to encourage the prosecuting of felony by the party to whom the goods belonged, it was prescribed that if any felon or felons do rob, or take away any money, goods or chattels from any of the King's subjects, from their persons, or otherwise within this realm, and thereof the said felon or felons be indicted, and after arraigned of the said felony, and found guilty thereof or otherwise attainted, the same shall be and is true and perfect, and shall be verbally, by the party to whom the goods were robbed, or owner of the said money, goods or chattels, or by any other by their procurement, that then the party so robbed, or owner, shall be restored to his said money, goods and chattels; and that as well the justices of gaol delivery, as other justices before whom such felon shall be for trial, and otherwise attainted by reason of evidence given by the party so robbed, or owner, or by any other by their procurement, have power by the said act to award from time to time writs of restitution for the said money, goods or chattels, in like manner as tho' any such felon or felons were attainted at the suit of the parties in law against the said offender. 5 Co. Litt. Mark. P. C.

Since this statute it has been the practice to restore the goods stolen, upon the conviction of the offender, to the protector of the indictment, notwithstanding any false of them in a market overt; but he can be restored to no goods but those mentioned in the indictment. 3 Bl. 355. 2 Inf. 714.

2. To the changing the property of horses by a false in a fair or market overt, the said is provided against by the 3 & 3 P. & M. cap. 7. and the 31 Elia. But more especially by the 31 Elia. cap. 12, by which it is enacted, "That no person shall, in any fair or market, sell, give, pay for, or convey, any horse, colt or filly, unless the toll-taker there, or where no toll is paid the book-keeper, bailiff, or the chief officer of the said fair or market, shall and will take upon himself perfect knowledge of the person that so shall sell, or offer to sell, give, or exchange any horse, &c. and of his true christian name, surname, and place of dwelling or residence, and shall enter all the said horse's knowledge in a book there kept for sale of horses, or else that he be folletting or offering to sell, give, exchange, or pay away any horse, &c. shall bring unto the toll-taker, or other officer aforesaid, of the said fair or market, one sufficient and certain receipt, or bond, or shall thereon, or at his toll, certify, and declare unto, and before said toll-taker, or other officer, that he knoweth the party that so shall sell, giveth, or exchange, or putteoth away such horse, &c. and his true name, surname, mystery and dwelling place, and there enter, or cause to be entered in the book of the said toll-taker or officer, as well the true christian name, surname, mystery, and place of dwelling or residence of the person that so shall sell, or offer to sell, give, exchange, or pay away any horse, &c. unless he do indeed truly know the same party, and shall truly declare to the toll-taker, or other officer, as well the christian name, surname, mystery, and place of dwelling and residence of himself, and of the person from whom he shall receive money, either in kind or avouchment; and that no toll-taker, or other person keeping any book of entry of any sale, gift, exchange, or putting away of any horse, &c. unless he knoweth the party that so sell, giveth, exchange, or putteoth away any such horse, &c. and his true christian name, surname, mystery and place, or the party that shall and will certify, or make perfect knowledge of the said horse person so sell, &c. and such horse, &c. and his true christian name, &c. and shall make a perfect entry into the said book, of such

Falla, action, if brought against one whereby he is called into prion, and dies pending the suit, the law gives no remedy in this case, because the truth or falsity of the matter is not known before it is tried. And the plaintiff be barred or nonsuitet, at Common law, regularly all the punishment is amentee. 1 Ten. Cont. 161.

Falla, action, where a man claims more than his due: As the prior of Lancaster, by reason of a charter, had the tenement of a foale, but the tenant could not get the possession of it, because it was in corvo: And because he made a false claim, and said that he ought to have the tenth of all venison within the forest of Lancaster, as well in carne as in corvo; therefore he was in misericordia de decimo venationum sui in corvo non perhibentur. King Edw. 6. incorporated the town of St. Albans, and gave the right of making by-laws; the term was kept there, and the mayor, &c. with the assent of the plaintiff, who was one of the burgesses, assemled every inhabitant in a certain sum, for the charges in erecting courts there, and if any one refused to pay, that he should be imprisoned; the plaintiff refusing to pay, &c. was committed, and in action of false imprisonment brought against the mayor, he justified under this by-law; but it was ad-
In false imprisonment against a justice of peace, the defendant justified, for that on the 27th of September 9 face a minister came into the church of St. L. in R. to preach, and that the plaintiff had a warrant against him, together with the churchwardens, laid violent hands on the minister, and hindered his preaching, against the form of the statutes, for which, offence he was brought before him, being a justice of peace, and being thereof convicted by sufficient witnesses, he committed him to prison; and this was held a good plea. 2 Buffle. 14. Crefwick v. Refekyll.

In false imprisonment against a mayor, who justified, for that he being a nigriffare, the plaintiff said he was a fool; adjudged, that the plea was ill, for he cannot justify, if he had called him fool whilst he was in his fear, or in the execution of his office; for in such case, where a man speaks, what is not part of his officio, he cannot take in execution of his authority, or which might disable him to execute his office (if true) he may commit the party. Mor. 247.

In false imprisonment, the defendant justified, for that he having a warrant to arrest J. D. he (the defendant) demanded of the plaintiff what his name was, who answered J. D., whereupon he arrested him; and upon a demurrer to this plea the plaintiff had judgment, because the officer is to take notice of the right party at his peril. Mor. 457. Cost v. Lighthous.

A co. fa. was delivered to the sheriff, who on the same day made a warrant to his bailiff to arrest the party, and when he came to the place, there was a crying error, delivered also to the sheriff, of which the bailiff had no notice, who afterwards arrested the party, and he escaped, and the bailiff having afterwards notice of the error, he arrested the party again, and was adjudged as such false and malicious, and the imprisonment was brought, and adjudged well brought. Mor. 577. Prince v. Allington (A.) 4. S. C. Cr. 918. S. C.

In false imprisonment, the defendant justified, for that he was sheriff of London, and having taken one T. S. he escaped, and being in pursuit after him in Felon- try circa baram manum, in the night, he met the plaintiff, who used him ill; and that the defendant, having given him scurrilous language, and thereupon he being wounding in the street, in the night time, and misbehaving himself, the defendant committed him; and upon a demurrer to this plea it was objected, that it was ill, because circa bonum manum was uncertain as to the time; besides that it was not a time to be committed for a nightwalker, it being usual for men at that time of night to be about their busines; then the using him uncivilly is too general, and the thrashing him against the wall night by night accident; sed per curiam. Taking it altogether it was good, and the defendant had judgment. 1 Rol. Rep. 91.

Judgment against baron and some, and the wife being taken in execution upon a co. fa. and a capi corpus being returned by the sheriff, the same was brought to the bar, and committed by the court, in execution to the marchal; but no committer being entered on the roll, the court brought an action of false imprisonment, and because this was a default in the clerk, it was moved, that it might be altered and amended; sed per curiam. There is a difference where a man is brought into court by an abbas corpus, and by the return of a capi corpus; for in one case an entry is made in the office book of the commitment; but if he is committed, upon the return of a capi corpus, without a abbas corpus, then there is a special entry of his commitment made on the roll; and in the principal case the omission was amended. 2 Rol. Rep. 112. Allington's case.

Upon the return of an abbas corpus, it appeared, that the party was committed by a warrant from the Lord Chancellor, and that the sheriff having matter concerning the same there to remain till delivered by him; adjudged, that the return was too general, for it doth not mention the cause; and likewise uncertain how long he might remain in prison, for it may be during life, if the Lord Chancellor will not deliver him. 2 Cr. 519, Addis's cafe. Chamer's cafe. 5 Gcr. S. P. ipsa Hocbus Corpus. (D. 8.)
The defendant was committed by the justices until he should obey an order for taking upon himself the office of constable of such a place; he denied, that he was an inhabitant within the hundred; adjudged, that he ought not to be imprisoned; and being tendered upon his refusal to take the office; and if upon the indictment he was found to be an inhabitant in the hundred, he should have been fined, and committed upon non-payment of the fine.

Crawfey's case, Cre. Cas. 490.

In false imprisonment, the defendant justified by virtue of a warrant for his arrest to arrest the plaintiff, and that he ought to be required to affit in doing it, and detaining him till discharged by the sheriff; and upon demurrer to this plea it was objected, that the process being executed, it ought to be returned, otherwise the justification is not good, which is true in respect to the sheriff, if the action had been brought against him, but not in respect to his servant, as the defendant was. Cre. Cas. 332.

Garling's case.

In an action of assault, &c. and false imprisonment, the defendant justified, for that the plaintiff being a common cheater, played with the defendant with false dice, and cheated him of his money; thereupon he molested his hands upon him, and had, upon a convex, a warrant for a voluntary fine. Upon an action of false imprisonment his plea was held ill; for to imprison a man for a quodam contemptus is too general; 'tis true, the officer is to obey the order of the court, but that is where the court hath jurisdiction; and by this plea it doth not appear, that the court hath any jurisdiction of the cause. March 117. Dey v. Dilbe.

Alderman Langham was committed to Newgate by the Lord Mayor and court of Aldermen, who brought his habas corpus; and upon the return it appeared, that there is a custom in London, if a freeman be elected Alderman, he ought to take an oath to serve in that office, and that if he refuses, he shall be committed till he doth; that Langham was a freeman of the city, and that he was dekto modo cetero, that is, he was dismissed from the court, he appeared, and the oath was tendred to him, which he refused to take. In contemptum curiae, & contra confederationem, &c. whereupon he was committed by the court. It was objected, that a custom to imprison was not good, because 'tis against Magna Charta; but adjudged, that 'tis incident to a court of record to imprison, and this being such a court, they might justify the imprisonment without a custom; but a fortiori, where there is such a custom, and especially when that custom is confirmed by act of Parliament. March 179. Alderman Langham's case.

It will not vitiate a writ, as where quod ei defcribat was brought against two tenants, and it was quod ei reddat in the singular number. 38. Cr. Eliz. 543. 8. P. So in a declaration by the sheriffs of London against the defendant quod reddat ei in the singular number. 6b. 70. Cr. Eliz. 877. S. P.

Debt against the defendant brought by the sheriffs of London, the declaration was, (viz.) Quarrator de N. B. in mediantibus datos, alias de N. B. in medietatis declaratum; and it was agreed that this declaration, the defendant had judgment in B. R. but it was reversed upon a writ of error in the Exchequer, upon the authorities above-mentioned. 1 Lutw. 854. Raymond v. al ferus Barbon. In trespass against two defendants, for taking a hoghead of cyder, the defendants ven & defendem, &c. but the judge and f耶ffy committit per dicti, &c, and so pleaded in abatement, that the plaintiff is outlawed; and upon demurrer it was objected against the plea, for the falsa Latin, (viz.) Quod ipsi, when there were two defendants; and this was held a good exception, the plaintiff having demurred specially, and flied it for cause; and that it would have been ill upon a general demurrer. 2 Lutw. 1529. Ford v. Edgcomb & al.

In an appeal for murder, the declaration was, that at Cleeham, in the county of Surr, causam praebat "Johannes & quidem Daniel Sobley meli definent;" and upon demurrer it was objected against the plea, for the sentence falsa Latin, yet it would not abate the bill, for it did not at Common law. 1 Salt. 328. Bent v. vertus Presten. See 5 Rep. Long's case, and 10 Rep. 173.

On a writ of error brought, it was assigned for error, that the sentence falsa Latin was given against an defendant, but it was held well enough, for it may be the sufficient tenor of the verb affides, and there is not so much strictness required in verdicts as in pleading, because those are the words of a lay jury. 1 Salt. 328. Redward v. Gaward.

In debt on a bond, if the obligation be falsa Latin, the declaration ought to be good Latin; as if the obligation be viginti, the declaration ought to be viginti; and the court is to construe if it be a variance. 2 Show. 155. Falle Latin was held to be cured by a verdict. 8 Mod. 380. See English, Latin. Falle oat. Till the statute 3 and 4 Hen. 7, which gave power to examine and punish perjuries in the Star-Chamber, there was not any punishment for any false oath of any witnesses at Common law; and now there is a form of punishment provided for perjuries by 5 Eliz. yet before the statute 3 Hen. 7. The King's counsel used to assemble and punish such perjuries at their discretion; and there was no punishment for perjury as Common law, but in case of attainit; as appears D. 772. but in the spiritual courts, pro lesfane fidi, they use to punish them. Cr. E. 540. Mich. 38 and 39 Eliz. C. B. Danport v. Simpson.

If he makes a false oath, the party is punishable for it by an action on the case, if it be not perjury for which he may be indited; there is a difference between a false oath and perjury; for one is judicial, the other is extra-judicial. And the law inficts greater punishment for a falsa oath made in a court of justice than elsewhere, because of the preservation of justice. Per Roll Ch. J. 5134. 2 Eliz. 327. in case of Henrell v. Tenant for life, remainder in tail, reversion in fee to the heirs of the devise; Tenant for life suffers a common recovery, in which he in remainder was vouch'd, and the use declared to him, who was to remain in tail; adjudgment and this recovery all remainders or reversion were barred, for no statute made any provisions for those who had remainders or revocations upon an estate tail, and therefore they could not falsify this recovery; the statute of Wills, 2. cop. 3. provides for him, who hath a reversion after partible of the estate, and the statute 35. H. 8. for those who have revocations or remainders alter an estate for life, 16 Rich. 43. fenning's case.

An infant brought an affize in B. R. pending which action the tenant brought an affize against the infant in the C. P. for the same lands, and had his day or plea by the fact from the infant to the affize brought by the infant, who fret forth all this matter in his replication, and that the demandant, at the time of the second writ brought, was tenant of the land, and prayed, that he might falsify this recovery; and adjudged he might. Gough. 271. "Print's case; because he could not have a writ of error to attain it.

He in reversion suffered a common recovery, and declared the use; adjudged, that his heir shall not falsify it by pleading, that his father had nothing at the time of the recovery suffered, because he is ejected to fay, that he was not tenant to the praevia. Gough. 183. "Duke v. Smirke."

Tenant for life, remainder in tail, join in a lease for years to Brifc. afterwards, in the life-time of the tenant for life, the tenant in tail suffered a common recovery, and the recoverors turned the lease for years out of possession, and made a feoffment in fee to Lincoln college in Gown; then the tenant and heir of the tenant in tail, in the life-time of his father, released to the college with warranty; the lease for years re-entred, then both the tenant for life and tenant in tail died, and the issue in tail made a distress on the cattle of the lease damage-free, who brought a replevin, and adjudged, that the taking the cattle was not wrongful, and that the person in tail was not barred by the recovery; 'tis true, where there is a tenant for life, and he in remainder in tail suffer a recovery in the life-time of the tenant for life, he is ejected to say, that he had nothing in the freehold, and the heir is liable to this eftoppel, as well as he is inheritable to the land; and the reason why the father or founder is here excluded, is, because the father, who falsified this recovery, is fupposed to have a real recompence in value from the common vouchet, but here he had no real recompence, but only in eftoppel, and thus himself was ejected, yet, by the re-entry of the leeqe for years, the eftate for life, and the remainder, were again reduced to the tenants in tail, but because neither the remainder in tail, nor his son and heir, had any thing in interest, when the releas was given to the college, therefore that releas should not enure to that body of men, nor the warranty; for 'tis the nature of a warranty to keep one out of possession who never had it, and therefore it ought to be made to one who is in possession; and because the tenant in tail in this case was never out of possession, in inte eft, but only in eftoppel, neither the releas or warranty shall discontinue the tail; so that the issue in tail is not barred by this recovery, but he may falsify it in a null-flory action; as this is. Mor. 245. Brifc. v. Chamber."

Tenant in tail made a feoffment in fee to his own son, who was then of full age, and afterwards he diffided him, and then levied a fined, but before the land proclamation the fon entred, and made a feoffment, then all the proclamations were made, and afterwards both the father and son, before the time of the son made a lease to RC. and died feied, and the issue of the tenant in tail brought a formaudo against the heir of the said feed fucces, who was in by defect, and recovered against him by a feint defence of his title, and then he turned the leeqe for years out of possession, and thereupon brought an ejectment; adjudged, that he might falsify the recovery had by the issue in tail, because the issue in tail was bound by this fine; but because it appeared by the pleading, that the fine was levied by the father to that to every person, to whom the leeqe of the son had granted this lease for years, and who was not aware of it, and it is not being averred to be levied to any other use; therefore his lease was extinguished, and he was incapable to falsify the recovery obtained by the tenant in tail. Mor. 391. King v. Hunt.

See Fines and recoveries, and 12 Vin. Abc. tit. Falsify your recovery.

Falsifying a verdict. Wherever in any real action, there is a verdict against tenant in tail, the issue can never falsify such verdict in the point directly tried; but only in a special manner, as by saying that some evidence was omitted, Sc. Lord Ryna. 1550.

Fardel of land, (Fardella terra,) is, according to some authors, the fourth part of a yard-land; yet others, in his Complete Lathys... pag. 57, will have two twelfths of land make a nook, and four nooks make a yard-land.

Fartinga-drl, (Sax. fard, i.e. quarter, & dol or ded, part.) Alias farndle of land, quadranta terra, being the fourth part of an acre, Gram. for. fol. 220. Quadrantia terra is read in Reg. And in P. 299 fol. 22, we find that these words stand for "rent real and rents," which argueth it to be so much land as yields twenty shillings per annum. See Furlong. Farter, He who rents a farm, or is leasee thereof. Termes de la ley. And it is said generally every lessee for life or years, although it be but of a small house and land, is called farmer, as he is who occupieth the farm. As this word implies no mystery, except it be that of husbandry, husbandman is the proper addition of a farmer, 2 H. 7 Sir. 74. By law, 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. Farting, (in Sax. farthing.) Was the fourth part of a Saxon penny, and frequently in use among them. See Penny.

Farting of land, (Sax. farthing.) Seems to be a great quantity, and differs much from farthing-deal; for in a book of Survey of the manor of West Shapton in com. Devon, there are an entry made: By Ser. 25, for farthings of land at 3½d. per annum. See Farthings-deal. Forthing always importeth the fourth part; and therefore quarter-right, or pieces of gold that paid for two shillings and sixpence, the fourth part of a real car-Justices cannot order a maintenance for a child to be paid by the father, without adjudging that the child is poor, or likely to become chargeable. Lord Raymond, 699.

Children not demanding their legacies of their father when they come of age, or after, is no discharge of them; and the father is bound to manage them during their minority, and their portions given by a fiancer are not to be admitted to them if they had not any; and where they lived to be fit for service, and served their father; their service was more worth than the interest of the legacy (which was 50 l. specie) and fo interred was allowed.

But were one of the daughters married and a year's board after marriage, the father must allow for it, unless an agreement be proved to the contrary. Pescb. 7 Ann. 3 Ch. R. 168.

Strickland v. Hudfon and Mofon.

Ad. 250 l. to his fon, and made his wife executrix, who married another husband. On a bill brought against them by the son, the legacy, the defendants would have discontinted maintenance and education; but the court would not permit it so as to diminish the principal sum; for it was said, that the mother ought to maintain the child. 2 Vent. 353; Mich. 33 Car. 2. Annu.

But a sum of money paid for the binding him out apparently was allowed to be discounted. 2 Vent. 353. Annu.

And the mother was decreed a reasonable allowance for maintenance of her fon from two years of age, when the father died, to 18, when the fon died; the he having received the rents of 33 l. per annum deferred from the father on the son, as heir at law. Pescb. 7 Ann. 3 Ch. R. 164. Walfic v. Everard.

A father prepared a bond conditioned for payment of 120 l. a year for life by his fon, to whom a very large estate had been devised, and upon proposing to it the son, he refused to execute it, saying it was more reasonable and depended upon his honour. Upon which the father left the bond with the son, saying, if he would not sign it he might let it alone. But afterwards in the father's absence the son figgled it just before he went to travel, and directed, that it should be delivered to his father. Id. Ch. Parker said, that those words might be sleek fo, as to amount to a threatening, and to intimidate; but it might also be otherwise, and the father feared to acquitse under the fon's answer, and for ought appeared it was his free act, and what he thought himself obliged in honour to do, and therefore without any proof to impeach it, it should not be set aside in equity. Wmd. Rep. 602, 607. Hill. 1719. Blackhall v. Edgley.

If it should ever appear that the power of a parent over a child has been abused, as by his gaining a releafe of the child's on-hangage parts by threats, &c. a court of equity will certainly set aside a releafe thus unacquiesly gained. given to a man and the heirs of his body; the reason whereof is given by Littleton, lib. 1. cap. 2, because a man feied of land by such a gift, if he marry one or more wives, and have no issue by them, and at length marry another by whom he hath issue; this issue shall inherit the land, whereas if a man and his wife are feied of lands to them and to their two bodies. The reason is given likewise by Littleton in the same place, because in this case the wife dying without issue, and he marrying another by whom he hath issue; this issue cannot inherit the land, being specially given to our forefathers. This fee-tail hath the original from the statute of Westminster, 2 Ed. 1. yet fee Britton, lib. 2. cap. 5. num. 3. in his Verbis. Item quaedam obiitata & quaedam stita & coarctata sunt certis heredibus. To whom add Plowden, fol. 235. Wilson’s case; for before that statute, all land given to a man was certain; the general or special, was accounted in the nature of a fee; and therefore a man might be so firmly in him to whom it was given, that any limitation notwithstanding, he might alien, and sell it at his pleasure, much like which the Civilians call num- dum praesumptum, binding rather by counsel and advice, than by any actual grant. But this seeming unreasonable to the wisdom of our realm, that a man might alienate that thing well to this or that poverti of himself, or his friends, might be forthwith devised of his intention; the said statute was made for redress of that inconvenience, whereby it is ordained, that if a man give lands in fee, limiting the same to another, by whom it is granted, with a reserve to himself, or his heirs, for default, etc. that the form and due meaning of his gift shall be observed: He then that hath fee, holdeth of another by some duty or another, which is called service; and of this service, and the diversity of it, fee Chivulry and Service. Sec- ondly, This privilege is only to be used within us for the compacts or circuit of a manor or lordship. Britton, lib. 2. cap. 5. in eadem villa & de eadem feenda. Thirdly, It is used for a perpetual right incorporeal, as to having the keeping of priors in fee, Old Nat. Brev. fol. 41. Fother in fee, ed. fol. 6. rent granted in fee, ed. fol. 8. Sheriff in fee, in Ed. 1. fol. 3. cap. 6. Lastly, It is taken for a reward or wages given to one for the execution of his office, as the fee of a forester, of a keeper of a park, or of a sheriff for serving an execution, limited by 20 Eliz. cap. 4. And also for that consideration given a feer, as a law or counsellor, or a physician, for their counsell in the suit of the process, which, as it is well observed by Sir John Davis, in his_TRAITORS, Reports, is not properly near, but honorarium; yet in the law language it is called a fee. Cowell, edit. 1727.

FEO, FEO, FEO,

Is a compound of feed and service, and signifies in a legal sense land held of another in fee, that is, in perpetuity to himself and his heirs, for so many years, rent, and in a reasonably worth, more or less, so that in one part of the world, with our homage, fealty, or other services, other than are specially comprised in the feudum; but by Fitzherbert, in his Nat. Brev. fol. 210, it feemeth, that the third part of the value may be appointed for the rent, or the finding of a chamberlain, and the fourth, as the nature of it is thus, that if the rent be behind, and not paid for the space of two years, then the sojourner, or his heirs, have an action to recover the lands as his demesnes. Britton, cap. 66. num. 4. but observe, that Wills, in his Symbol. part. 1. lib. 2. sect. 459, says, that the feudo, fide, and livery, are a part of court, as well as rent, and in Termini de la Ley, that therefore feudum.

Kings of England from their ancient demesnes, were many of them alienated from the crown in the reign of King Charles the Second. But how doubtful men are of the title to alienation of any nature, is evident from this, that whilfe those rents were exped to fall for ready money, scarce any would deal for them, and they remained unfold, till the method of doubling orders did a little help; but that which made men earnest indeed to buy them, was the floup upon some of his Majefly's other payments, which made men ready to return to this the most chafing bar confiderance. Cowell, edis. 1727.

To encourage purchasing fee-farm rents, this act gives the purchafors the fame power of diftraits not only on the land out of which the fee-farm rent ifues, but on any other of the lands of the tenant as the king had. Hill. 1715. 2 Vern. 713. Att. Gen. v. Mayor, &c. of Cowper.

Fee-farm rents, when granted by the King, become rent-feeck, and therefore not to be extended. Arg. 9 Med. 72. cites Cro. E. 616. — Fee-farm rent is extendible upon an elegit, and yet the words of the fature, which gives the fcriführ authority, are only land, viz. medullia terre. Arg. 10 Med. 526.

A. claims a fee-farm rent under this fature, and there is a fqueffer from the land, out of which the fee-farm rent ifues; the court cannot order the fequeftor to pay the arrears out of the money in their hands, but declared the grantee might take his remedy at law notwithstanding the fequeflation. Per Cooper C. Hill. 1715. 2 Vern. Att. Gen. v. Mayor, &c. of Cowper. The court left him without remedy, as he diftrained for his tenant, without incurring any contempt in equity, and that no leave or effate derived under the fequeftors, fhould be made use of in evidence against the claimant of the fee-farm rent, to prevent the diftraits. Win's Rep. 308. S. C. Tho' the King might diftrain on any other lands of his tenant, as well as on tho' out of which the rent ifues; yet, if the tenant alien or leafe at will only his other lands, the crown cannot difstrain on thofe lands. So, if there be an extent upon an elegit of fuch other lands, the court will not extend the rents, and the fale by virtue of the fatur'd will not be extended for this is a greater extent than an effate at will. Per Cooper C. affi'd by Ch. J. Parker and King. Win's Rep. 307. S. C.

As to the cafe of the Att. Gen. v. The Mayor of Cowper, the Reporter fays, that afterwards Ch. J. Parker informed him, that he thought it might have been proper to have determined that the fequeflation was as the hand of the court upon the effate, and where a right to a fee-farm rent appear'd to be prior and indifputable, the court might reasonably enough have order'd payment, elle A. for aught appear'd, would be in a worse condition, than if there had been no fequeflation; for till the fequeflation there was no payment made the rent voluntarily, and now are disabled purely by the fequeflation; and putting A. to diftrain was putting the charge of the suit upon the effate; whereas nothing appear'd to the contrary, but that the corporation was fensible of A.'s right to the rent, and defir'd it might be paid. Win's Rep. 308, 309.

By 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. f. 2. All purchafers of fee-farm rents are to be kept harmless from all incurrences made by the trufts.

Sed. 9. enachts, That rent not usufally paid by the larger space of 40 years latt past, shall not be infribed in fuch letters patents, and tenants shall hold their lands discharged of any rent, referred by virtue of any patent of concealment, or compifion of defective titles, and usufally paid.
paid by the greater force of 40 years, until the fame shall have been recovered by due course of law.

And by 19. 14. So much as is due for any uses out of the premisses to be settled upon trustees shall continue to be paid; and the trustees are hereby authorized to convey, for performance of such uses, fees of the said fee-farm rents, &c., as shall amount to the sums charged, after which conveyance the purchasers of the retitle to be discharged thereof.

This act allowed to a clerk who have to do with the administration of justice, as a recompence for their labour and trouble; and there are either ascertained by acts of parliament, or established by ancient usage, which gives them an equal function with an act of parliament. 2new Agr. 493.

1. In what cases fees shall be due, and how much.

2. At what time fees shall be due, in what court to be recovered, and pleadings in actions for fees.

1. In what cases fees shall be due, and how much.

At Common law no officer, whole office related to the administration of justice, could take any reward for doing duty, unless he was to receive from the King.

Ca. Lit. 368. 2 inst. 175. 268. 9.

And this fundamental maxim of the Common law is confirmed by Wis. 1. cap. 26. which enacts, "That no officer, or other King's officer, shall take any reward to do his office, but shall be paid of that which they take of the King, and that he who doth shall yield twice as much, and shall be punished at the King's pleasure." This statute comprehends ecclesiasts, coroners, bailiffs, gaolers, the King's clerk of the market, sulinoger, and other inferior ministers and officers of the King, whose offices do any way concern the administration or execution of justice.

And so much hath this law been thought to conduce to the honour of the King and welfare of the subject, that all previsions whatsoever, which have been con-for any sheriff, under-sheriff, bailiff of franchises or liberties, nor for any of their, or either of their officers, ministers, servants, bailiffs or deputies, nor for any of them, by reason or colour of their, or either of their office or offices, to have, receive or take of any person or persons whatsoever, and without the due and proper induction or any extent or execution upon the body, land, goods, or chattels of any person or persons whatsoever, more or other consideration or recompense than in this present act is and shall be limited and appointed, which shall be lawful to be had, received and taken; that is to say, twelve-pence of and for every twenty shillings and six-pence of and for every twenty shillings, over and above the said sum of 100. l. that he or they shall fey or extend, and deliver in execution, or take the body in execution for; by virtue and force of any such extent or execution upon payment of the act, that all and every sheriff, under-sheriff, bailiff of franchises and liberties, and their and every of their ministers, servants, officers, bailiffs or deputies, which at any time shall directly or indirectly do the contrary, shall be and forfeit to the said parties, his, her, their or the moiety thereof to our Sovereign Lady the Queen, her heirs and assigns; and the other moiety thereof to the party or parties that shall sue, for the fame, by any plural, action, suit, bill or information, wherein no effion, wager of law, or execution, shall be allowed.

"Provided always, that this act, or any thing therein contained, shall not extend to any fees to be taken or had for any execution within any city or town corporate."

In the construction of this statute the following points have been held:

1. That though the words of the statute are, that it shall not be lawful for the sheriff to take any more, or greater fees, than by the act is limited, &c. that herein by implication at least, if not by express words, a right is given the sheriff to demand those fees mentioned in the statute; and consequently that he may, as in all cases where a statute creates a debt or duty, maintain an action of debt for them. Mor. 853. Latch 19. Poph. 175. Palm. 400. 1 Salk. 331. S. P. admitted.

2. It hath been adjudged, that the sheriff shall have a hilling per pound for the first hundred, and six-pence per pound for every hundred and upwards exceeding a hundred, and ten shillings per pound where the whole debt happens to exceed a hundred; for by this construction the sheriff would have left where the debt was 199 l. if it were but 100 l. And the intention of the statute was to allow sheriffs such reasonable fees as would encourage them to discharge this branch of their duty, so much favoured by the law, with vigour and success; who before were backward and intimidated, by reason of the dangers they run from eapes, &c. from engaging herein; and therefore it has been held the most reasonable construction to allow them their fees in proportion to such danger. Poph. 173. Latch 17, 18, 52. Palm. 399. 1 Salk. 331. S. P. adjourned.

3. It hath been resolved, on the proofs of the said statute, that it shall not extend to any fees to be taken for any execution within any city or town corporate; and this must be intended of executions on judgments given in those courts; and that therefore where a sheriff executes a judgment given in Westminster Hall to a city or town corporate, he is as much intituled to his fees, pursuant to this statute, as if the execution had been done in any part of the county at large; for herein the sheriff runs as great a risk, and his trouble is as great; but where both the judgment and execution are within a city or town corporate, it can't be properly, for be attended with equal difficulty; and therefore the proofs in the statute excludes them. Latch 17, 18. Poph. 173. Palm. 399. 400.

4. It hath been resolved, that the bailiff of a liberty, with extend a judgment given in Westminster Hall, is entitled to the fees, within the words and meaning of the statute; and not the sheriff of the county who directs his precept to him. Latch 19, 52. Poph. 175. 1 Salk. 331. Dallt. Ser. 526. S. P.

5. It seems agreed, that if a sheriff makes an extent, and before the liberate a new sheriff is chosen, the new sheriff is not entitled to the extent, by the statute. Winch 50, 51. Dallt. Ser. 526.

6. It hath been resolved, that the statute does not extend to real executions, such as habeas facere sejusnum, or poissimus, but only to executions in personal actions; also it is said, that the statute and does not extend to executions upon execution after recognition, &c. that, and that the act is to be understood of cases where the judgment, rediturus in invitum, and not by the voluntary confession of the party; but 22. Salk. 331.

7. That for executing a capias uti legatum, or for a warrant to execute it, no fee is due to the sheriff, because this is at the suit of the King. Heley 52. 2 Brow. 282.

8. It seems to have been resolved, that upon a capias ad satisfaciendum, the sheriff shall have his fees for the whole debt; also if in one execution dies, and a fieri facias lies against his goods, the sheriff shall have his fees for the whole of the execution of the fieri facias; for his trouble was as great as at first. 1 Salk. 331.

2. At what time fees shall be due, in what court to be recovered, and pleadings in actions for fees.

It is extortion for any officer to take his fee before it is due; and therefore where an under-sheriff refused to execute a capias ad satisfaciendum till he had his fees, the court held, that plaintiff might bring an action against him for not doing his duty, or might pay him his fees, and then indit him for extortion. 2 Gil. 668. 10 Co. 102. a. 1 Salk. 330. Officer must oblige a writ, though fees unpaid. Stran. 814. Proces must be obeyed though fees are not tendered. Stran. 1262.

If an abatus corpus ad satisfaciendum be directed to a gaoler, he must bring up the prisoner albeit his fees were not paid him; and he can't excuse himself of the contempt to the court, by alleging that the prisoner did not tender him his fees. 1 Esp. 272. pl. 57.

Alfo it is no excuse for not obeying a writ of abatus corpus ad satisfaciendum & recipiendum, that the prisoner did not tender him his fees. March 89. 2 Esp. 280. 2 Esp. 179. but 1 Esp. 566.

But this brings upon the prisoner by virtue of such abatus corpus, the court will not turn him over till the gaoler be paid all his fees; nor, according to some opinions, till he be paid all that is due to him for the prisoner's diet; for that a gaoler is competent to find his prisoner sufficiency. See 1 Rol. Rep. 339. Co. Lit. 295. 9 Co. 87. Plowd. 60. a. 2 Rol. Abr. 32. 2 Jon. 178.

If a person pleads his pardon, the judges may in the usual fee of gloves to themselves and officers, before they allow it. Fitz. Creon. 294. Pulten. De Pace 88. Keling 25. 2 Jon. 56. 1 Salk. 452.

If an erroneous writ be delivered to the sheriff, and he execute on it, he have his fees, though the writ be erroneous. 1 Salk. 332.

It seems to be laid down in the old books as a definition, that upon an extent of land upon a statute, the sheriff is to have his fees, so much per pound according to the statute immediately; but that upon an ejectment he is not to have them till the liberate. Poph. 156. Winch 51. S. P.

But where the sheriff, having executed an ejectment, brought an action of debt for his fees; and it was objected, that this was not within the statute, the execution not being complete, for the plaintiff could not enter but must first have a claim; and it was held by Holc, that there was the same reason for the fees for executing an ejectment, as for an ejectment the sheriff returns, that he has taken an inquisition, extended the lands, and delivered them to the plaintiff, and that there is a liberate in the body of the writ of ejectment, or the return of which the plaintiff may enter; yet by the return he becomes comes tenant by eleviz, and may maintain an ejectment, and assign his interest upon the land; but the defendant continuing in possession after the return of the writ turns the plaintiff to a relitigant, and therefore he must enter to affiavit, and his being put to an ejectment is no reason, for in case of an extent upon a flateau, where the liberate is distinct, he can't enter by force; it is true he may without force, and fo he may here; and Powell said, that extent generally is the word of the flateau 26 Eliz. and that an extent upon a flateau was an extent within the flateau, as well as an extent upon a flateau: 1 Salk. 333.

A solicitor in Chancery may exhibit his bill for his fees for busines done in that court; and fo he may where the busines is done in another court, if it relates to another demand other than that which makes in Chancery. 1 Fern. 203. 2 Chom. Cat. 153.

But it hath been held, that chancellors, registrers and proctors who are officers of temporal profit, and whose fees do not relate to the jurisdiction of the spiritual court, can't sue for them in the spiritual court. See 3 Lorn. 268. 2 Rol. Rep. 59. 1 Mad. 167. 2 Kel. 615. 3 Kel. 393. 441. 515. 4 Mod. 253. 5 Mod. 249.

As where the registrer in the ecclesiastical court libelled there for 4. d. for his fees, and proceeded to excommunication; and the defendant sugetted, and moved for a prohibition, which was granted; for the court hath no power to compel the party to pay fees to their officers, but they must either have their quantum meruit laid on their office be a freehold, they may bring an affize; for the denial of just fees is a diffiicul: although it was objected, that this case differed from that of a proctor, because a registrar is a mere officer of the court, and the court may appoint a reasonable fee to the offices that attend them. 1 Salk. 333.

So a prohibition was granted to play a suit in the archdeacon of Litchfield's court, against churchwardens for a fee for swearing them, and taking their preffents: because no fees could be due but by custom, or for work done, in which case a quantum meruit lay. 1 Salk. 350.

So that where the manager and chapter of the cathedral church of Exeter, having the freehold and inheritance of the said church, had by prescription 10 l. for every corps that was buried in the said church; and the defendant's tenator being buried there, without their licence, the defendant refused to pay the 10 l. for which they sued him, in the Ecclesiastical court; and the defendant was no reason why a prohibition should not, it was urged, that none can prehieve to have a burying-place in a cathedral church, for the parioners have nothing to do with it, nor pay any tithes to it; but in the parish church to which they pay tithes and other duties, there such a prehieve is allowed, and in the churchyard there they have a right to be buried without a prescription; but the court held, admitting, that no person could prehieve to bury in a cathedral church, and admitting, that this fee, like that of 20 l. which is usually paid for burying in the cathedral church of Westminster, is reasonable, yet it is not of spiritual cognizance, but is in nature of a licence, on which a quantum meruit may be brought, and the conffant usage to pay so much is given in evidence; and therefore the prohibition was granted. 2 Bar. Abr. 468. Hil. 5 Ann. Dean and Chapter of Exeter v. Druc. 1 Salk. 334. S. C.

A prohibition was moved for to the nonconfent of the court of the bishop of London, to play proceedings in a suit commenced there by a parish clerk, for dues, according to a rate agreed to by the parish. Against the prohibition, it was said, that he is to be choos by the parson, and that his office is ecclesiastical, and consequently his fees are of ecclesiastical conffance. On the other hand it was urged, that such as were done for him, his office is merely temporal, and the profits of it itself be fo likewise, and especially in the present case, where they are demanded pursuant to a rate. Per Car.

The questions who has the right of nomination, and what efface the clerk has, whether at will only, or for life, are quite immaterial in the present case. The Law is certain, that his office is temporal, it was so determined in 2 Beavon. 38. And if fo, his salary, or whatever is given for the service of that office мүAtt of conffance be of temporal conffance. But whether his office be temporal or spiritual, if the matter in question is tempora-ral, the ecclesiastical court can have no jurisdicton. Now here the demand is in pursuance to a rate agreed to by the parish, and there is no doubt but that he may bring his action upon that agreement; and accordingly a prohibition was granted. 12 Fin. Abr. 155. Hill. 12 Gr. 2. C. B. Pitts. 25 Co. 22c.

If A. delivered an execution to the sheriff at his suit against B. and in consideration that the sheriff without any fee will execute it, he promised the sheriff to pay him a certain sum, which was the same as the sheriff was allowed to take by the flateau of the 28 Eliz. Gland. d. held the consideration not good; for at Common law he would not to take any fees, but it was excepted, which the flateau is only to discharge the sheriff from; but the other judicier and barons held it to be a good conffance, and were of opinion to have affirmed the judgment. But another error being asigned, viz. that the toles de circumstantialis was returned by the plaintiff who brought the action by the name of the sheriff of the same county, and therefore judgment was re-

In the setting a dispute, whether the warden of the Fleet might return a non effi inventus whereupon to found a fequestration, or that such return must be by the jer
tain at arms before a sequestration could go, Lord Chancellor ordered the sheriff to look into precedents, and certify him, how the practice had gone; but said, that if the jermain at arms was intituled by the ancient course to a fee by the caption in such cafes, it could not be altered without an aet of parliament. felo de se, or felon of himself, is a person, who being of sound mind, and of the age of discretion voluntarily killeth himself. 3 Inf. 54.

If a felon or felon of himself, intending to be felo de se, and die not within the year and day after the wound, he is not felo de se. 3 Inf. 54.

A person who wilfully detruits himself is termed a felo de se, and is said to be guilty of the worst sort of murder, as he acts against the first principle of reason, which is to preserve the species. Plow. 261. Dame Hul's case. Yet in some cases it is considered as a different offence from murder; and therefore if the King pardons all crimes, except murder, this offence shall be pardoned; for though in a strict sense it may be called murder, yet according to the usual interpretation of words, the offence of a person who murders another, and that of felo de se, are considered as different offences, and as such are distinctly treated of by authors who have written of these matters, as Stann. P. C. 185, 572. Besides, the end of excluding murder seems to be, that the offender might be brought to justice, and that the law of God and nature, which require blood for blood, might be satisfied; but the discharging a chattel, or pardoning a forrefture, is not of any such consequence; also it hath been held by divines, that pardoning murder draws periculum animarum with it, as being contrary to the law of God, which requires blood for blood. The King ver. Ward. 1 Lev. 8. 1 Sid. 150. 1 Keb. 66. 548. S. C. also in certain cases and in particular sense taken as a different offence from other felonies; and therefore a grant of bona & catalla felemum will not carry the goods of a felo de se. 1 Sid. 420. 1 Vent. 32. 1 Sand. 274. adjudged.

No person can be felo de se, who is under the age of discretion, or non comus at the time he commits the fact; and therefore if an infant kill himself under the age of discretion, or a lunatic during his lunacy, he cannot be a felo de se. Crom. 30, 31. H. P. C. 28. 3 Infj. 54.

In 3 Med. 100. it is said to be the prevailing opinion, that a person who kills himself must be non comus of course, on this supposition, that it is impossible a man in his fenses should do a thing so repugnant to nature; but in 1 Hawk. P. C. 67, and in Comb. 22, 3. this notion is justly exploded; for if this doctrine were allowable, it might be applied in excuse of many other crimes as well as this; as for instance, that of a mother murdering her child, which is also against nature and reason: And this consideration, that it is impossible a man in his senses and of a sound mind, could make it a crime at all; for it is certain a person non comus mentis can be guilty of no crime. 1 Hawk. 67.

Not only he, who deliberately kills himself, but also he, who maliciously attempting to kill another happens to kill himself, is a felo de se; as if A. discharging a gun at B. with an intent to kill him, and the gun burthes or kills A. or if A. strike B. to the ground, and then hastily falling upon him, wound himself with a knife which B. has to happen in his hand, and die; in these cases A. is felo de se; for he is the only agent. Bre. Coram. 12, 14. Dall. c. 92.

A man be be killed by hastily running on a knife or sword, which a person assaulted by, and driven to the wall, holds up in his defence, he shall not be adjudged a felo de se, but the other shall be adjudged to have killed him se defendendo. Stann. P. C. 16. H. P. C. 28. Pult. 110. b. Crom. 28. cont. 3 Infj. 54.

If one person kills another, and the by his desire and intent the perfon killed is not a felo de se, but he who killed him is as much a murderer as if he had killed it of his own head; for every affent of that kind is void, being against the law of God and Man. Keilu. 130.

But if two persons agree to die together, and one of them at the percussion of the other, buys ratbane, and mixes it in a potion, and both drink of it, and he who bought and made the potion survives, by using proper remedies, and the other dies, it seems the better opinion, that he who dies shall be adjudged a felo de se, because all that happened was originally owing to his own wicked purpose, and the other only put it in his power to execute it in a particular manner. Mor. 754. pl. 1081. 1 Hawk. P. C. 58.

No person can be a felo de se before he is found fuch by some inquisition, which ought regularly to be by the coroner super visum corporis, as the body can be found, H. P. C. 29. 3 Infj. 54.

But if the body can't be found, fo that the coroner, who has authority only super visum corporis, can't proceed, the inquiry may be by justices of the peace, who by their commision have a general power to enquire of all felonies, or in the King's Bench, if the felony were committed in the county where the fact court fits, and such inquisitions are tradervable by the executors, &c. 5 Inf. 54. H. P. C. 29. 2 Lev. 141. 1 Hawk. P. C. 89.

But it was formerly held, that with regard to the high credit which the law gives to inquests found before the coroner, that no such inquest found before him could be traversed; but this has been ruled otherwise of late, and it seems now settled, that such inquest being moved into the King's Bench by certiorari, may be there traversed by the executor or administrator of the person deceased, or by the King or lord of the manor, &c. Bre. Coram. 151. 2 Lev. 141, 152. 2 Keb. 859. 2 Ion. 198. 1 Feni. 278. 3 Keb. 504, 566, 604, 800. Slim. 45.

All inquisitions of this offence, being in the nature of indictment, is regularly and certainly to be tried in the circumstances of the fact; as the particular manner of the wound, and that it was mortal, &c. and in the conclusion add, that the party in such manner murdered himself. 1 Salis. 377.

And therefore if either the premises be insufficient, as if it be found that the party thought himself into the water, &c. &c. is ipsum energit, which is non fene, because emerges signifies only rise out of the water; or if there be wanting the proper conclusion &c. fes ipsum murdravit, the inquisition is not good. 3 Lev. 140. 3 Med. 100. Yet if it be full in substance, the coroner may be Served with a rule to amend a defect in form. See 2 Lev. 153. 1 Sand. 225, 345. 1 Kel. 907.

A felo de se forfeits all chattels real and personal, which he hath in his own right, and also all such chattels real whereof he is possessor, either jointly with his wife, or in her right; and also all bonds, and other personal things in action, belonging solely to himself; and also all personal things in action and of some interest to another, the possession on which he was intituled jointly with another, or any account, except that of merchandise; but is it said, that he shall forfeit a moiety only of such joint chattels as may be severed, and nothing at all of what he was possessor of as executor or administrator. Stann. P. C. 188, 189. H. P. C. 29. Plew. 243, 262. Crom. 31 a. 3 Infj. 55. Rym. 7.

But the blood of a felo de se is not corrupted, nor his lands of inheritance forfeited, nor his wife barred of her dower. Plew. 261.

Also no part of the personal estate is vested in the King before the fell-murder is found by some inquisition, and consequently the pardon取决于 the offence before such finding. 5 Co. 110. 3 Infj. 54. 1 Sand. 302. 1 Sid. 150, 162. 2 Med. 53. 3 Med. 100. 241. cont. 1 Lev. 8. 1 Keb. 67, 68.

But if there be no such pardon, the whole is forfeited immediately after such inquisition, from the time such forfeiture is thereby declared, and all subsequent alienations are avoided. Plew. 260. 5 Co. 110.

Felons goods, (Bona fugitivorum) Are the goods of a felon, who fleith for the felony, and are not forfeited till 'tis found by indictment, that he fled for the felony, and therefore they cannot be claimed by prescription; but a man may preferibe to have wains, eddias, treys, trouts, which by reason of the trove, wreck of the sea, because they may be gained by usage without matter of record. 5 Rep. 109 b.

The flat. de Praerog. Rec. (17 Ed. 2, c. 1) grants to the King, among other things, the goods of felons and fugitives.
The archbishop of Canterbury had felon goods in the manor of R. and afterwards he committed treason; then the King made a general grant to the almoner of the goods of felo de fe; Hales, a leafe for years, was found in the manor, and nowwithstanding this grant to the lord almoner, the King granted the term for years to B. G., adjudged, that he should have it, and not the almoner, because the almoner had no property, but only an interest as a minister, and the grant to him need not be recited in the last grant to B. G. 2 Man. Dyer 107.

Where the King granted to a man and his heirs, felon goods, &c. within such a place, the grantee cannot devise them, nor leave them to devise for a third part, upon the statute '32 H. 8, because they are not of any yearly value; but if a man is feized of a manor, to which a leer or wall, or eftays are appendant, tho' they are of no yearly value, the feize of the manor, with the appurtenances, because the statute which enables the tenant to devise the manor, by consequence enables him to devise all the incidents which belong to it. 3 Rep. 31, in Butler and Baker's cafe.

If a felon feals goods, and hides them, and afterwards by these goods are not searched, and wastes in law; for those are when the felon hath the goods about him, and being closely purfued, leaffeth them for fear of being taken, and that he may more readily get away; in such case the goods are forfeited, but in the other case the owner may take them wherever he finds them. 5 Rep. 100, Flexo's case.

Suo supere sedes, &c. for claiming felon goods; the defendant pleaded, that the abbot of Strata Marcella lawfully had and enjoyed them till the dissolution of the abbey, and then they were given to the King by the statute '27 H. 8. and then pleaded the statute '32 H. 8. cap. 10. by which all the privileges lawfully used by the abbots, were revocd and vested in the King; who being seised of the said privileges and franchises, to have felon goods in the, he granted the manor of W. in R. parcel of the possessions of the abbey to B. G. & tot, taifa & tanta privilegia as the late abbot had, under whom the defendant claimed the said manor by seiftom, &c. & warranta clamat libertates & franchos tanquam manoris prae feteftan'; adjudged, that because the defendant had conveyed to himself a title to the manor, &c. by seiftom, which he pleaded generally, without setting forth the deed, he did not convey to himself a title to the felon goods, for they were not paft without a deed; but if the King had granted lands & tenem & bena & castell & felonia which any merio feteftan', they paft, tho' they cannot be appendant to a manor. 9 Rep. 235. Abbot de Strata Marcella. Mm 197. S. C. by the name of The Queen v. Vaughan.

The plaintiff being committed upon suifition, that he committed felony, the money which he had about him was taken away with the conviction of him, and he was caught an act of trCHAFT, and declared for feizing his money, &c. and this was upon the 1 R. 3. cop. 3. by which 'tis enacted, That no perfon shall have the goods of another, &c. After a verdict for the plaintiff, it was moved in arreft of judgment, that this cafe was not within the statute because money was not goods; but it was adjudged to the contrary; and that same term. Raym. 414, Optras v. Wendlall. See Flight.

Felony, (Felonia.) Is derived, according to Sir Henry Spelman, from the Saxon word seof, a reward, or an eftate, and the German las, price; because this was formerly a crime punished with the price, that is, the los of estate; for before the reign of King Hen. 1. felonia were punished with pecuniary fines; he being the first, who ordered felons to be hanged, about the year 1108. Spelm. Giff.

Felony, lays Lord Coke, Ex vi termini signifies quidlibet crimine capitale fello animo perpetra tdrum, i.e. every capital crime committed in which the offender is found to have been guilty of pernicious and capital felony is to be treated as such. And in ancient times this word felony was of so large an extent, that it included high treason; and therefore in our ancient books, by the pardon of all felonies, high treason, or counterfeiting of the Great seal, and of the King's coin, &c. was pardoned. But afterwards it was reolved, that in the King's pardon or charter, this word felony should only extend to common felonies, and that high treason should not be comprehend ed under the same, and therefore ought to be specially named, and yet that a pardon of all felonies should extend to petit treason; wherefore by the law at this day under the word felony in commiisions, &c. is included petit treason, murder, homicide, burning of houses, burglary, robbery, rape, &c. chancemelied, &c. and petit larceny. For such of these crimes for the which any shall have this judgment, To be hanged by the neck till he be dead; he shall forfeit all his lands in feste-siple, and his goods and chattels for felony by chancemelied, or fe defendants, or petit larceny, he shall forfeit his goods and chattels, and no lands of any effect of freehold or inheritance. And all by felony shall pass and be a good and just punishment according to the course of the Common law, are either by the Common law, or by statute. Co. Lit. 31t.

Felony is always accompanied with an evil intention, and therefore shall not be imputed to a mere mistake or misinmadversion; as where pertons break open a door to execute a warrant, which will not justify such a proceeding; Affilia enim tua nonem imprimit operi tu: item crimen non contradictur nisi memendi voluntas intercedat. But the bare intention to commit a felony is so very criminal, that at the Common law it was punishable as felony where it mitigated itself through some accident, which no way lessened the injury offended; but if seems agreed at this day, that this felony shall not be imputed to a bare intention to commit it, yet is it certain that the party may be very severely fined for such an intention. 1 Hawk. P. C. 65.

Féalty under colour of law. A man came to Smithfield market to sell a horse, and a fellow inquired of the owner delivered his horse to the jockey to ride up and down the market to try his prices; but instead of that, the jockey rode away with the horse: this was adjudged felony.

Coming into a house by colour of a writ of execution, and carrying away the goods, is felony. 2 Port. 64. cites Farr's cafe—Sid. 254. Psief. 17 Cor. 2. B. R. The King v. Farr. A. comes into a seamstress's shop and Cheapens goods, and runs away with the goods out of the shop, openly, in her fight; this is felony. Regn. 276. Chiffer's cafe. So, under colour of outlawry, to take, when there is no color of felony. — So by ejectment fully obtained getting into possiflion of a house, and converting the goods. Psief. 31 Cor. 2. in Suet. Regn. 276. in Chiffer's cafe.

A special truth prevails the felony, until such special truth is determined. Psief. 8 Ges. 2. 3 Mol. 76. King v. Melon. But while that truth is determined, the party may be guilty of felony; as where a carrier carries goods to the place appointed, and after carries them away, and defpofes of them, this is felony; because by the law they are bound to deliver them to the buyer; if he brings them determined, and the defpofition is then in the first owner. King 23. cites 13 Edw. 4. 9 b. — So, if one delivers goods to a porter in London to carry to a certain place, and he takes them and carries them away to another place, and there opens and defpofes of them; this is felony; which fur confused is supposed to be committed in the 13 Edw. 4. 9. ibid. Feme flete, (Fr.) A woman alone, that is, single or unmarried. See Barn and femc.

The office of reaper or mower of the manor of D. was granted to a feme with a fee of 20 quarters of corn yearly, for excifling the fafe office for term of her life. Br. Grants. pl. 127. cites 30 Aff. 4. A woman may be a commissioner of fowers, and the ordinances and decrees of fowers made by her, and the other officers of fowers are not to be impeached for the caufe of her fex. Callis of Sweors 201. 202. cites Counter of Worwich's cafe.

The custody of a caflle was granted to a feme to be excifled per se et deputation femm. and held; that it may be good, tho' it was objected, that it appertains to the ward, and to be executed by men only. Mitch. 1 Taco. B. R. Caf. 7. 18. Lady Roffell's cafe.

A woman was appointed by the jutfices to be governcr of a workhouse at Chelford; and it was moved to quaff the order, because it was in the nature of a house of correffion, and to the office was not fitufible to her fex. But it was refufc to be altered. To a good appointment, and the may be capable of exercising the office, either by herfelf, or deputy, as the Lady Broughton did, who was keeper of the Gatehouse at Weftminster. 3 Salk. 2 cites Mitch. 2 Ann. Ann.

In an affiftant, for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, tried in London, coram Lee Ch. J. the following cafe was made for the opinion of the court of B. R. vla. That upon the death of Robert Bly, fefton of the parish church of St. Batholph's without Aldergate, two candidates offered themselves to be elected in his room; vla. the widow of the fefton deceased, and the plaintiff; the other were the books, the plaintiff appeared to have a majority of male votes, but that afterwards, the widow polled 40 women, and then he had the majority; that the widow, and all the female voters were housekeepers, paying foot and 1/2, and to all parish rates and aflaffims. And the first question was, if a woman was capable of this office; yea, Whether women could vote in such election. After three arguments at bar, it was resolved, that the office of fefton was no public office, nor a matter of skill or judgment, but only a private office of trufl, viz. to take care of the church, the wellfare of the minifter, and the books, viz. of the church; and that the widow had only a personal tie to the office, very proper to execute it, and if there was anything to be done in this parifh by a fefton, not proper for a woman, (as in every place the office varies in some respect or other,) the court faid, the cafe was defive in not fettling it foorth. And fecondly, it was resolved, that being a matter of no public concern, and only relating to themfelves and the reft of the parishioners, women have like- wise a right of election of fuch officer; for they have an equal interest in the church; St. as the male parishioners, and therefore ought to have an equal right to appoint a fecton to be elected in it. 13 Fid. Ars. 159. Trin. 13 Ges. 2. B. R. Oliva v. Bape. Feme fole merchant, is where the feme trades by hcrfelf in one trade, with which her husband doth not meddle, and buys and fells in that trade; there the feme shall be fuid, and the husband named only for conformity; and if judgment be given againft him, execution fhall be only againft the feme. Gra. Cas. 69. Psief. 3 Cor. C. B. Langh. 183.

Such a feme may sue for an action without her husband; per Wyat Ch. J. Psief. 31 Eliz. B. R. Le. 131. in the cafe of Chamberlaine v. Toorp.

Every feme fole, which trades in London, is not a mo. chargeable to fuch fume. A writ of execution the sheriff returned, that the plaintiff brought his action in the sheriff's court in London againft the defendant; and his wife as a feme fole merchant, and had a verdict; and how that by custom in the city of London the Lord Mayor is Chaffellor, and may call caufes before him out of the fhiriff's court, and rule them according to equity; and fiews how that the Lord Mayor had called this caufe before him, and ordered the plaintiff fliould have judgment, and that the defendant fhould pay costs within 14 days; and that the fume fhould be paid by 50. quarterly, or else that execution fhould go; and that this was the reafon why he could not make execution: The court held the return fufficient, and the custom rafoonable, tho' it had of late been abufe. Skem. 67. Mich. 34 Cor. 2. B. R. Barns v. Barns. Cafe was brought in the Mayor's court upon an indeb. off. for 57l. according to the custom of the city. The evidence was, that the defendant traded in fome office, or other way for her life; the jury fuded, that defendant had been a ferman, but left off his trade 20 years before, and turned diflinguifed teacher, but the wife lived apart from him within the liberty of the city, and exercised the art of making gin, lace, and the husband no ways intermeddled; that the said her mother, kept no fhop but worked in the garret; that the husband got the goods of the plaintiff to carry her trade, amounting to 57l. and that after her death the defendant promised payment; judgment was given by Rider for the defendant, and be declared, that Tryby was of the fame opinion. Mich. 2 W. & M. Show. 183. Favelon v. Piant.—The Reporter who argued this cafe for defendant, makes a quare, and says it deferves confideration, if fuch a feme fole trader dies, and leaves an estate, and the husband poiffeffes himfelf of it, if he fhould not be aferverable for her debts.

If the husband relin qué, or become bankrupt, or be overtaken by another trade, or new incumblance with her trade, the is within the custom. Show. 184. in the cafe of Favelon v. Piant. cites Het. 9. 10.—or if both execute the feme trade difcilily by themselves, and not intermeddled with one another, Het. 9. 10. Psief. 3 Cor. C. B. Doust v. Langbam. A woman, who being a wife, and the husband had left her above twelve years before, and had carried on a trade in her own name as a widow, and gave receipts in her own name, being fued for a debt contracted in the way of her trade, gave co- venture in evidence, and gave evidence of her husband's being lately alive in Ireland; and Hold Ch. These grants, to whom lands in fee or fee were granted from a superior lord, were called generally in Latin, bonitus, men, or bonamors, and in some other writings are termed valets, feuds, and feudatories. At the first infliction of beneficia, or fees (as they were afterwards called) they were revocable at the will of the lord, patron, or donor, when he pleased. Afterward they were granted for a year, and then for the life of the feodatory or valet, then in process of time they became irrevocable to the heirs male, and by degrees hereditary to the female. Feoffment, (Feoffamentum,) by the opinion of Sir Thomas Smith de Repub. Anglor. lib. 3. cap. 8. and Wolf, part 1. Symb. lib. 2. fett. 280. is defended from the Gablew word feudam, which we interpret fee, and signifieth dominacione feudal. But (as the Gablew Wolf adds) it signifieth in our common law any gift or grant of any honours, causes, manors, messuages, lands, or other corporeal and immovable things of like nature, unto another in fee simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin, and the possession of the thing given, and the title must be proved by deed or writing. And when it is in writing it is called a deed of feoffment, and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue of the same, feoffee, feoffiteur. And littleton faith, That the proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor giveth in fee sempiternum, the fee for ever, but the donor doth not; and it is the ancient and most necessary conveyance, because solemn and publick; and also because it cleareth all different abatement, subterfions, intrusions, and other defeentries, by which the entry of the feoffor is lawful, which neither fine, recovery, nor bargain or sale by deed indented and infeoffed above him in this. See Co. en Litt. lib. 1. c. 1. f. 1. Couvill, edit. 1727.

As all property in lands began by occupancy, so it seems the first method of transferring property was by investiture; for as no man could originally appropriate, but by settling himself in the possession and application of it to his own use; fo no man could transfer but by a solemn public publication of the trust which the possession, and the ceremony used in such act of delivery is in our law called livery and scin, and is thus defined, Salamens rei fluidalis traditio sub praestatione fidem coronis titulils vavalis foata. Spelin, Gloss. 510.

The end and design of this institution was, by this form of ceremony or solemnity, to give notice of the transfer of the feud from one hand to another; because if the possession might be changed by the private agreement of the parties, such secret contracts would make it difficult and uncertain to discover in whom the estate was lodged, and consequently the lord would be at a loss of whom he might claim the rents and services of his manor, who by feoffing equally perplexed to discover against whom to commence actions for the profession and recovery of their right; to prevent therefore this uncertainty, the ceremony of livery and sein was instituted. 2 Bayl. Abr. 482.

This method of conveyance was made use of before men were acquainted with letters, and therefore was it required to be on the land, or near the land, that the other tenants of the manor might be witnesses of it, who in those days were called to the lord's court, to determine all controversies relating to such transfer; and after the use of letters a charter of feoffment was introduced, by which their recerciments were tended to the authentication or evidence of it; and so our law determined, before the statute of frauds and perjuries. 2 Bayl. Abr. 483.

For the better understanding this manner of conveyance, it is thought proper to consider,

1. The several sorts of livery, viz. livery in deed, and livery within view, or in law.

The livery in deed, is the actual tradition of the land, and is made either by the delivery of a branch of a tree, or a turf of the land, or some other thing, in the name of all the lands and tenements contained in the deed; and it may be made by words only, without the delivery of any thing; as if the feoffor being upon the land, or at the door of the house, says to the feoffee, I am content that you should enjoy this land according to the deed, or Enter into this house or land, and enjoy it according to the deed; this is a good livery to pass the freehold, because in all these cases, the charter of feoffment makes the limitation of the estate, and then the words spoken by the feoffor on the land, are a sufficient indicium to the people present, to determine in whom the freehold resides during the extent of the limitation; besides, the words being relative to the charter of feoffment, plainly denote an intention to enfeoff. Co. Lit. 48. a. 9 Co. 137. b. Thorowgood's case. 6 Co. 26. Sharp's case. 2 Roll. Abr. 7. and see Gro. Jus. 80. which seems cert. But if a man without any charter, being in his house, says, I here demise you this house, as long as I live, paying you 5s. per year, he hath only an estate at will, because the word demise denotes only the extent of the limitation of the estate intended to be conveyed; but bare words of limitation, without some act or words to deliver the intention of the feoffor to deliver over the posseslion, are not sufficient to convey the freehold; for if a charter of feoffment be made to a man and his heirs, this, without some other act, or word to give the possession, only passes an estate at will, because the act of delivery is requisite to the perfection of the charter;
but besides the charter of feoffment, there must be some act or words to deliver over the possession, before the feejee can enjoy it pursuant to the charter. 6 Co. 26. 2 Roll. Abr. 7. Co. Lit. 48. Cr. Litiz. 482. 9 Co. 138. Mor. pl. 43. 2.

If the feejee had delivered the charter upon the land in the name of fein of all the lands comprised in the deed, this had been good to execute the deed, and to give livery also; because the bare delivery of the deed or any other thing, in the name of fein of the land, is sufficient to give the same, and makes the feejee as, only to discover to all persons in whom the freehold is lodged; and this end is as effectually answered by the delivery of a deed, or any thing else in the name of a fein, as of a turft or a twig, the one being equally as visible and notorious as the other. 9 Co. 137. b. 138. a.

2. A being feized of land in fee borrows 20l. of B, and for repayment agrees to affio him the land; and thereupon they both went to the place, where A said to B, I am indebted to you 20l. and if I don't pay you before Michaelmas, then I bargain and sell this land to you; and if I don't pay you, with all my lands and goods, and that puts B in possession of the land; this was held a good livern, because here the possession was actually delivered pursuant to the agreement of affuring the land for the security of the money, which possession was to be reveld on the payment of the money by A the feejee. 2 Roll. Abr. 7. 10 Co. 26. 3.

The livern within view, or the livern in law, is when the feejee is not actually on the land, or in the house, but being in fight of it pays to the feejee, I give you vendor vogue, or land, go and enter into the same, and take possioon of it accordingly; this sort of livern seems to be made at first only at the court barons, which were anciently held sub dis, (that is, in the open air) in some open part of the manor, from whence a general survey or view, might have been taken of the whole manor, and the parts curi easily distinguished that part which was then to be transferred to the security. 2 Roll. Abr. 7. 10 Co. 26. 4.

But this sort of livern is not perfect to carry the freehold, till an actual entry made by the feejee, because the possession is not actually delivered to him, but only a licence or power given him by the feejee to take possession of it; and therefore, if either the feejee or feejee do enter, and take possession of the land, according to a perfeft intendment to the freehold, and this livern within the view becomes ineffeclual and void; for if the feejee dies before entry, the feejee can't afterwards enter, because then the land immediately depends upon his heir, and consequently no perfon can take possession of his land without an authority delegated from him who is the proprietor for the benefit and use of the heir of the feejee, because he is not the perfon to whom the feejee intended to convey his land, nor had he an authority from the feejee to take the possession; besides, if the heir of the feejee were admitted to take possession after his father's death, he would come in as a purchaser, whereas he was mentioned in the feejee to take as the representa- tive of his ancestor, which he can't do since the eftate was never vested in his ancestor. Co. Lit. 48 b. 2 Roll. Abr. 37. 1 Pent. 186. Mor. 85. Pollex. 48. 5.

But if the feejee, in such case, dare not enter into the land without peril of his life, he may claim the land, as near as he may safely venture to go, and this shall be sufficient to vest the possession in him, and render the livern within view perfect and complete; for no-body is obliged to expose his life for the security of his property; but when he has gone as far as he may with safety, the land is in his possession, and looks upon such intendment to be as effectual as the act itself; for otherwise it would be a power of a man, by his own act of violence, to deprive another of his right, and thereby to receive an advantage from an unlawful act. 2 Roll. Abr. 3. Co. Lit. 48 b. 6.

If a man delivers a charter of feoffment to his feejee, within view, and says, I will that you have the land that you see there, the which are comprised in this charter, according to the purport of the charter, this is a good livern within view; for the charter of feoffment fully denotes the intention to enfeoff, and the words are a licence to the feejee to enter into the land, and to take the possession thereof, according to the charter. 2 Roll. Abr. 7. 7.

But if the feejee had only delivered the charter of feoffment within view, and only flawed the feejee the lands, without paying any thing, the feejee had actually entered, and taken possession, and the other agreed to the entry, yet this, it seems, is not a good feoffment, because the bare shewing of the lands to the feejee implies no authority or licence from the feejee to take possession; and consequently the entry being without any authority, can't vest the freehold in him, because there was no written act, nor any public declaration made by the feejee, by which the parts might discovery a real intenion to change the possesion, and the subsequent agreement of the feejee can never support an act which was originally void; for tho' the feejee, after the delivery of the charter, might have the usufructory possession as tenant at will, yet the freethold makes still continued to the feejee; for that can't pass from one to another, without some solemn or publick declaration, that the parts may, upon any dispute, determine in whom the freehold reftes. 2 Roll. Abr. 7. 2 Co. 55 b. 8.

If a man makes livern, within view, to a woman, and before she enters the feejee marries her, and afterwards never claims any thing, but in right of his wife, this is a good execution of the livern; for the husband claiming the land in right of his wife, shall be sufficient to reduce the lands actually into her possession, since he is the proper person to transfer for her; therefore it is to be presumed to have parted with and delivered up the possession to her, since after the covariance he claimed the land only in her right. Perk. tit. 214. 2 Roll. Abr. 3. Era. Feoffment. 57. 1 Vent. 186. Pollex. 53.

So where two tenants were joint-tenants in fee, and one of them made a feoffment to a man, and livern within view, by saying, Go enter and take possession, and before the man entered he married the feejee; his entry after the marriage is a good execution of the livern, because by the livern within the view, an interefj paffed to the feejee, which was not revocable by the feme; and his entry after the covariance makes the utmost notoriety the thing is capable of, to discover in whom the freehold is lodged, and this entry shall be intended for his benefit; and therefore shall have a retrospect to the livern in view, to make it a perfect feoffment. 1 Mod. 91. 2 K. 894. p. 180. 1 Pent. 186. Parfons and Pears. Pollex. 45 to 53.

The livern within view may be made of lands in another county than where the lands lie, because the transmission of the feud was often made at the court-baron, in the presence of presse curi; and these courts being held sub dis, the feejee could have a view of every part of the manor; and therefore it was proper to attend this sort of livern in every part of invetiture, tho' the lands were in a different county, for notwithstanding that, they might have been part of the same manor for which the court was held. Co. Lit. 48 b. 9.

2. The effeéft and operation of livern, viz. the effeéft thereof to pass a future interest; the operation thereof where the feejee is out of possession; in what cases several parcels will pass by one livern, or where several parties may take by livern to one.

This ceremony was first instituted, that the parts of the county may, upon any dispute relating to the freehold, determine in whom it is lodged, and from thence be the better enabled to determine in whom the right is. Hence therefore it is, that if a man makes a feoffment, or lease for life, and the lessee dies, whereby his executer makes by it very immediately, the livern is void, and only an effeéft at will passes to the feejee; for the design of the investiture would fail, if such livern were effectual to pass the freehold; for it would be no evidence, or notoriety of the change of the freehold, if after the livern made, the freehold still remain in the feejee, the use of the investiture would rather create than prevent the uncertainty of the freehold, and in many cases would put men to fruitless trouble and expense in pursuit of their right; for for by that means, after a man had brought his præcipit against a person, whom he supposed to be tenant to the freehold, and had proceeded in it a considerable time, the writ might abate by the freeholder's vesting in another, by virtue of a livery made before the purchase of the writ.
Another reason why such future interest, or any interest in the life of a livery was, because no man would be safe in his purchase, if the operation of livery might create an estate, to commence many years after the livery was made; and though they have allowed a future interest, to commence by way of livery, yet that had no such ill effect in making purchases uncertain, because a tenant under the power of the freeholder, who by recovery might destroy them; and now, unless such leases were made upon good considerations, they are fraudulent against a purchaser; and 'tis not to be presumed, that leases at such distances should be purchased for value.

Cor. Eliz. 451. 2 Fent. 204. Co. Lit. 217. 5 Co. 94. b.

Hence, by the way, we may account why a freehold
in reversion or remainder can't be granted in futuro, though there no livery is necessary to pass it; as where
A. is tenant for life, remainder to B. in fee; A. makes a lease for years to C. afterwards; and D. has freedman, co. and where belides, feoffment

the livery, because such future grants create an uncertainty of the freehold, and the tenant of the freehold being the person who is to answer the stranger's præcipit, and where he takes this grant for the service, was not sufficient to permit him, by any act of his own, to prevent or delay the prosecution of their right.
Cor. Eliz. 451. 2 Fent. 204. Co. Lit. 217. 5 Co. 94. b.

But where a man makes a lease to commence from Michaelmas, and after Michaelmas makes a livery and seisin, this is sufficient to pass the freehold, because in this case, at the time of the livery made, the postridge and freehold were actually transferred to the leiffe, and did not remain in the leiffe, after the notary's month, which gives notice of transferring the freehold.

Hob. 314.

3 Bald. 290. Smith and Bale.

Yet if the feoffor had made a letter of attorney to give livery, the attorney could not give livery after Michaelmas, without the livery and seisin being contained for it; because the natural import of such authoricity is to give livery immediately, and the authority of the representative can't extend beyond the delegation.

Cor. Jac. 563.
Hob. 314.

A. by indenture demised to B. habendum, a die datâ (with the date of June) indenture præcipit, for his life, with a letter of attorney to make livery; the atorney made livery the 23d of July following, and the livery was held to be void, because the effe in life being by the indenture to commence the 10th of June, the attorney had no authority to change the commencement of the estate; and therefore having not purfued his authority, by not giving livery to the freehold commence, according to the deed, what he did afterwards was without any authority, and consequently void; but in this case, if the deed had not been delivered till after the day of the date, and the attorney had given livery at the time of the delivery of the deed, this had been a good livery, because the deed of feoffment was to govern the livery, but the deed itself had no effect till the delivery; and therefore the attorney making the livery at the time the deed of feoffment began to operate, which was to govern it, seems to have been well enough executed.

Cor. Jac. 153. Harington and Fau-chardin. Mor. pl. 876. Cr. Eliz. 873.

If a man makes a feoffment to commence after his own death, or makes a feoffment in this manner, being upon the land; I do here, referring an effe in my own and another's life, give you thefe my lands, to you and your heirs; these are void feoffments, because the postridge is not delivered at the time of the notoriety made;

and therefore if such feoffments were allowed, the investiture would be so far from being an evidence, to discover in whom the freehold is lodged, that it would often mislead the juries in such inquiries; besides, it were asfo to suffer a man to revere a particular effe to himself, and therefore the general inheritance be allowed under such a feoffee.

conveyed to B., but this livery can't be made to B.

for that belongs to A. during the term; the livery therefore must be made to A. who is to receive the postridge, and such livery actually vests the freehold in B. because the presumption is, that every man accepts of a gift, which is, for his interest; and A. is looked upon as the free-

If a leafe for years be made to A. remainder to the right heirs of B. and livery and seisin is made to A.
yet the freehold does not pass from the leiffe; and therefore the livery is void, because there was no person in being at the time of the livery made, in whom the freehold could vest, and the livery must not excite such future operation of the investiture, because it would create an uncertainty of the freehold, which would necessarily perplex and delay all proceedings against the freehold.

Co. Lit. 217. a.

If a leafe for years be made to begin at Michaelmas, remainder to B., and livery and seisin is made,
the livery is void for the former reason; but a lease for years may be made to commence in futuro, because the freeholder, who is to answer the stranger's præcipit, is, notwithstanding such future interef, certain and known, and therefore not within the reason of the former case.

Pead. 156. a. Co. Lit. 217.

If A. makes a leafe for five years to B. upon condition, that if B. pays him 10l. within two years, then he shall have a fee-fimple in the lands, and makes livery and seisin to B. this passes the freehold immediately, and
B. has a fee conditional, because if the freehold were not to vest in B. in the condition performed, it would be dif-cult to determine in whom the freehold is, for such conditions may be infringed in deeds, which are perfed privately between the parties, and therefore not to proper to govern the postridge and seisin of the freehold, as the folemn investiture by livery, which is made in the public view of the court freehold; therefore this formality was first appointed to give notice of the transferring the freehold, it follows, that from the reason of the investiture the freehold must pass at the time of the seisin made, or not at all; but if A. had made a leafe for life, upon like condition, to have fee, the livery made thereon shou'd not pass; and therefore this formality might be dispensed with because there pass a certain freehold, in all events, to the leaffe, and the livery gave notice in whom it was lodged,
If a lease for years be made to A. and B. the remainder to C. in fee, and livery made to A., in the absence of B. whether the conveyance be by deed, and without the livery, 'tis good to vest the remainder in C. because by the bare demise, A. and B. have an interest in the land, during the term, without any farther ceremony, and each being equally invited to the possession, either may invest himself of the possession by entry, or receive the possession from the lessor by the solemnity of the livery; and therefore when the whole livery is delivered by the lessor, and livery made to A. in the absence of B. in the name of both, this livery is sufficient to vest the remainder in C. because, if A. had as much power to receive the possession of the whole, as the lease for years had been made to him only, he and B. being joint tenants by the demise, and thereby feised per my & per tuit. Co. Lit. 49. 5 Co. Lit. 94. 2 Rol. Abr. 8.

But if the lease for life had been made to C. to commence immediately, and C. had appointed A. and B. his attorneys to take livery from the lessor; the livery made to one of them alone had been ineffectual and void, because one only, without the other, had no authority from the delegation to receive the possession, and consequently to vest the remainder, because a tenant in common, by the authority of the principal, is a nulity, and void; but afterward it is, if the letter of attorney had been jointly and severally to receive livery. Co. Lit. 49 b. 5 Co. Lit. 94 b. Palm. 23.

Thus if there be livery for years of a house and severalclothes, and the lessor and all his servants being in the house, the lessor enters into one of the clothes, and makes a feifment of it, and gives livery, this is a void seifment; because the possession of part of the thing demised is the possession of the whole, for the impossibility, that a man should be in the actual possession of every part of the land at the same time; and consequently the lessor can not take possession of the clothe, which was filled by his lessor; and therefore the livery must be void, because the seifment had been made to A., whereas the livery was made to B. Co. 31 b. Bettsworth's cafe. Mar. pl. 397. 2 Rol. Abr. 4. Co. Lit. 48. Dyer 18 b.

So it is if the livery for years himself had not been in the house, or any part of the land, yet if his wife, children or servants had been on any part of the land, that part would be void. Co. Lit. 48. Upon the land, without either wife or servant on the land, does not fill the possession as to prevent the lessor from entering and making a good livery to pass the freedom, because the castle can't be said to continue upon the land annuis poftelidibus, for the benefit of their master, as a servant may, and duty ought to do. Co. Lit. 48. 2 Rol. Abr. 4. Dyer 18 b. Bro. tit. Feoffment 66, but Mor. 11. 1.

But if a man makes a lease for life of lands, and afterwards makes a seifment of the same lands, and makes livery and seifmen upon the land, by the assent of the lessor, and in his presence, this is a good livery to pass the inheritance, because the lessor's permitting the seifor to come upon the land, and make livery, is a sufficient quitting of the seifment to him, either by way of surrender, or to create a tenant in fee. And at the same time, to make the seifment and livery more effectual and valid. 2 Rol. Abr. 5. Shepherd and Greg. Bro. tit. Surrender 48.

But if the servant of the lessor were only on the land, the livery of the lessor the seifor, though with the servant's permission, had been seen in the whole livery continued in possession at the time of the livery made; for while the servant continued in possession, it must be only for the use and benefit of him that placed him there; and consequently the possession of the servant must be looked upon as the possession of the master; and therefore the livery must be void, because it could not deliver a possession which was still filled by the master, and which the master never conformed to part with; and the permission of the servant will not admit of such a contravention as was made in the precedent case, because the servant having by interest, by which the lands were feigned, as the echief of the Queen, and make a surrender, or a tenancy at will to the seifor.

2 Rol. Abr. 5.

But it has been held, where a man made a lease for years of a house, and afterwards made a seifment of it, with a letter of attorney to make livery, and the attorney made the seifment, that the servant, whose position in the house, and finding nobody in the house but the servant of the lessor, who quitted the possession of the house at the demise of the attorney, and then the attorney made livery, which the master approved of at his return, saving his term, that this was a good livery; because here the servant actually quitted the house, and thereby the attorney had a vacant possession to deliver to the seifor; to, if the attorney found the house himself upon the house, and had entred and oufet him, and then made livery, that had been good to pass the freeloard; for though a seifment had been made to the lessor, the possession became thereby vacant, and consequently by the livery might be delivered to the seifor. Dyer 303 a. 2 Rol. Abr. 5. Mor. 91.

A. feid of land in fee, held of the Queen in fowage, did, and it was found by officer, that he died without heir, by which the lands were feigned as the echief of the Queen, and B. the heir of A. traversed the office, upon which issue was joined, and pending the issue, B. made a deed of seifment, with a letter of attorney; and afterwards the issue being for B. judgment was given que le missa est R. fecis amns, and then the attorney made livery, after which there was no grant of the seifment: this was held a good seifment and livery; because, by the judgment against the Queen, her poftession was defeated, and B. was restored to his right of poftession, which he might have placed himself in at his pleasure; and therefore the right transfer that to another which he might actually invest himself in at pleasure. 2 Rol. Abr. 5. 6. Terry v. Brown.

Thus if land descends to J. S. who enters but into part of it, and makes a seifment of the whole, and livery in that part, in which he entered in the name of the whole, it is good. 1 Rol. Abr. 23. In this case, an entry into part may be conveired an entry into the whole, the seifor having a power to take the whole into his actual poftession at his will, the very act of poftession, with the livery, in all these cases, may reasonably be taken to be a determination of his will to take the whole; if a servant was in the possession, the seifment and livery would be invalid unless he were in possession. 2 Rol. Abr. 5.

If there be A. livery for years of fix acres, and he makes a seifment for years of three acres to J. S. and he in reversion enters upon J.'s, and makes a seifment with livery, this shall pass the three acres, because by the demise of A. for years, the possession became separate and personal, divided, which was united and one under the lease to A. himsclf; and therefore A.'s continuing in possession of his own three acres could never be in possession of the other three, which he had no right to during the demise 1 to 7. S. but if A. had only made a lease at will to 7. S. of three acres, the entry and livery of the rever- fioner had not pulled them, because he had not so purpo- sed, but had only made a lease for three acres, since he may enter into them when he pleases, by the determination of his own will; for no man can be actually upon every parcel of the land, yet the possession of one acre is very reason- ably confined to be the possession of the whole. 2. Co. 32. 100a. Dyer 18.

So it is in the case of a tenant at sufferance: as if ten- ant in tail makes a feoffment in fee to the use of him- self in fee, and afterwards makes a lease for years, and dies, by which the issue is remitted before entry, and consequently the estate of the fee for years is deter- mined in fee simple, and enters into the tenant at sufferance, because by the fee simple, out of which it was derived, is vanished by the remitter; and the issue enters into part of the land, and makes a feoffment of the whole, and gives a livery of that part into which he entered, in the name of the whole; this shall pass all the lands to which the issue was remitted, tho' the tenant at sufferance was in possession of part, because that possession may be reasonably supposed to be in me, which I may actually place myself in at my pleasure, and therefore the livery in that part, in which the issue had actually entered in the name of the whole, shall pass all the lands.

If A. be feoff for life of Black-Acre, and being like- wise feised in fee of White-Acre, makes a feoffment of both, and gives livery in White-Acre, in the name of both, this is a good feoffment of both Acres, because A. had the freehold and possession of both Acres, and therefore might well deliver them over by the infeftment; or by- wise if A. had been only feoffed of Black-Acre for years, for then it should not pass by the feoffment, because the charter of feoffment passes the interest in the term before the livery made, and a feller eftate by right shall be fup- pofed to pass, rather than a great wrong be done in the first instance, if the freehold in both Acres, no- thing passes till the livery was made; and therefore the livery must operate to pass the fee in both Acres, secundum formam charte, or else it can pass nothing. 2. Roll. Abr. 6. 9 Hen. 7. 25. 6.

But if A. had been feoffed of Black-Acre for years, in enter arius, as guardian to an infant, and had made a feoffment of both Acres, and given livery in White-Acre in the name of both, that had pulled both Acres to the feoffee; because the term being vested in the infant, the guardian could lawfully transfer it as if he had been in possession of it in his own right; and therefore the infant as such fee, in the manner of a fee simple, the husband life time, to the freehold in both Acres, no- thing should pass by the livery, and the livery must operate to pass the fee in both Acres, secundum formam charte, or else it will have no effect at all. 2. Roll. Abr. 4.

If a man makes a lease for life to A. and afterwards makes a feoffment to A. of the land in lease, this is a good livery and feoffment; for tho' the land was in lease to A. yet his acceptance of the feoffment and livery amounts to a furrerent, ut res magis valeat, and consequently the feoffor has thereby poffeffion to transfer by the livery to the feoffee. 2. Roll. Abr. 495. Dyer 338. Mor 636.

If A.'s wife was feoffed in fee in the land, and the husband makes a feoffment of the whole, the wife being upon the land, yet the livery shall pass in the name, because the husband had the whole feoffie, either in his own right, or in right of his wife; and therefore could deliver it over by the infeftment, tho' the wife disapproved to it. 2. Feq. & Tit. 223.

If the Queen be lefsee for years, and be in reversion enters upon the land, and makes a feoffment in fee, this is void; because the law prefers the feoffment for the Queen, who by constantly attending the business of the publick, is presumed not to have leisure to take care of her own interest; but if the Queen had made a lease of years to 7. S. and he in reversion had entered and ousted him, and made a feoffment, that had been good; because the Queen had no right to the possession during the lease to 7. S. and the reverfioner having gained the possession by his ouuting 7. S. might consequently deliver it by the infeftment. 2. Roll. Abr. 5. and see 2. Co. 53.

If a man be feoffed of two acres, and being difeased of one, makes a feoffment of the other, and livery in the acre in possession, in the name of both, this had not pulled both Acres, because the possession of one acre was still out of him, and the feoffment could not be any determination of the will of the difeisor. 2. Roll. Abr. 6. Dyer 18.

But if a man be feoffed of two acres, and makes a lease at will of one, and after enfeoffs 7. S. of both acres, this shall pass, because the very feoffment and livery is a determination of the fate as well, and consequently the feoffor has thereby reftored the possession in order to convey it by livery, otherwise a lease for years, because the possession is in the termor during the lease. Dyer 15. 2. Roll. Abr. 5.

If a man be feoffed of two acres, and makes a lease for years of one of them, and after makes a feoffment of both acres, and livery of the acre in his possession, in the name of both, the livery is void and inefficual to pass to the lease in fee, because that being full of the livery, the feffor had not the possession to transfer by the livery; yet such feoffment is a good grant of the reversion of the former interest, and makes the feffor an attorn for attorneys in Title, every man's act is construed most strongly against himself: and there- fore the feffor shall not be admitted to claim any thing in either of the acres, since the possession of the one was actually transferred by the livery, and the reversion of the other in lease by the deed of seffment, which, with the attornment of the tenant, amounts to a grant. Co. Lit. 49. a. 2. Roll. Abr. 56. Plow. 162.

But if there be a lease for years, remainder to B. for life, and C. the reverfioner in fee makes a feoffment in fee, with livery to A. this is void as a feoffment, because C. had no possession to transfer by the livery, that being already in A. and the freehold in B. by the former lease; and the acceptance of the livery by A. was neither a fur- render, nor an attornment; as in the former case it could not amount to a surrend, because of the intermediate freehold which was in 7. B. nor did the feoffment amount to a grant and attornment; for tho', according to the former case, every man's conveyance is construed against himself, and the act of the grantor shall be construed against himself. If a grant is inefficual, for want of attornment; for A.'s acceptance is not an attornment, because he shall not bring B. within his fenity, by any act which was not in its original intention designed to be prejudicial and injurious to B., by dis-puting his remainder. 2. Roll. Abr. 4. 56. 1. Roll. Abr. 191. 2. Roll. Abr. 111.

It seems, that anciently the feoffment and giving li- very was performed before the partes of the manor, when the lands lay; but this being found too much to frighten the transferring the possession, it was found necessary to admit the testimony of strangers, and this came afterwards to be established by the convenience of it; and because all men of the county assemled at the county-court, in order to determine disputes relating to the whole county, as the tenants of the manor did at their court-baron; and because there lay an appeal from the court-baron to the county-court, so that the partes of the county were thereby ultimately determined of all things relating to the par- ticular manors, it seemed the more reasonable to admit the partes commatis to attend the infeftment thur' any particular manor, and indirectly thur' the whole county; and from hence it came to be admitted, and to the law continues, that if a man feoffed of lands, in several villages in one manor, a feoffment of two acres, if the tenant of the feoffment or the head of the fett was fcin of parcel of the lands in one town, in the name of all the lands in that town and in the other towns, that all the lands of the feoffor lying in that county shall pass, as well as if there had been livery given in each town. Co. Lit. 523. a. 2. Roll. Abr. 11.
FE O

But if a man having lands in two counties makes a feoffment of both, and gives livery of the land in one county, in the name of all, the land in the other county shall not pass, because there was no relation or dependence between one county and another, as there was between the several manors and the county-court; for one county having no power or jurisdiction over another, the parce pass and consequently there having been no notice given to the parcels of the other county, by any feoffment being void, and the feoffment must refuse where it was placed by the last in-verfiture. Perk. 253. a. 2 Roll. Abr. 11.

But if a man extends into two counties, and a feoffment be made of the whole manor, and livery only in the part lying in one county, in the name of the whole manor, yet the whole manor shall pass, because the inverfiture is a notoriety equally to all the parcels of that manor of the transmutation of the polfleeion; and tho’ they lie in different counties, yet they reside in extant tenures, and that in the day of the seft preferred to be conmult of every thing done within the territory or manor to which they belong. Perk. feft. 220.

But if the manor of Dale extends into the counties of D. and S. S. feoffed to him, by his tenth of the parcels of Dale in D. and livery and feft in D. nothing pass by this livery but that part of the manor which lies in D. because the feoffment being confined to the manor of Dale in D. nothing can pass that does not lie in the county of D. Perk. feft. 218.

If a feoffment be made to A. and B. by deed, and livery is made to A. in the absence of B, in the name of both, the livery is good to pass the estate to both; but if the seftment had been made without deed, and the livery given to one, in the name of both, it should operate to him only, because the parties are united in a deed, they all take as one of the seftment, in the name of the reft, is an actual delivery to them all, but without deed they are not so united; and therefore the delivery to one, in the name of several, is no actual delivery to the reft, but the whole estate must refuse in him to whom it is delivered, and a subsequent affent can’t take it out of him, such affent being not necessary. But if the reft, in the case of the seftment by deed, A. may be looked upon as the attorney of B. to receive livery; and therefore the estate shall immediately vest in B. because every man is presumed to affent to a grant for his advantage. But if the seftment without deed will admit of no such construction, because no man can receive livery as attorney to another, without an appointment by deed.

3. Who may make a seffment, and of making it by letter of attorney.

If a person nen compus makes a seffment, and gives livery himself, this is allowed on all hands to be good to bind himself, so that he can by no process or plea avoid the seftment, and refine himself to the polfleeion; the same law of an ideot; and the reason is, because the inverfiture being made before the pares curiae, their seftmen tatulation could not be defeated by the person himself, because it is presumed they are competent judges of the ability of the seftor to make such seftment. 3 Roll. Abr.
and see tit. Treats and Innuances.

But if an infant makes a seftment, and makes a livery himself, this shall not bind him, but he himself may avoid it by writ of dam nullat infra etatatem; yet the seftment of the infant shall not void in itself, as well because he is allowed to confept for his benefic, as that there ought to be some act of notoriety to relate the polfleeion to him equal to that which transferred it from him. 4 Ca. 125.
2 Roll. Abr. 2. 8 Ca. 42. 43. Whittington’s cafe.

But if an infant makes a seftment, and a letter of attorney to make livery, that is void; so if a person nen compus makes a surrender or release, this is void in law;
so if he makes a letter of attorney to give livery; but the pares at law allow, and consequently there having been no notice given to the parcels of the other county, by any notoriety of the transferring of the polfseeion, the polfseeion must refuse where it was placed by the last in-verfiture. Perk. 253. a. 2 Roll. Abr. 11.

As the infant’s seftment is voidable by dam nullat infra etatatem, when the infant is of full age, so it is voidable by him by entry during his nonage, but his letter of attorney is merely void; and the same law seems to be of a fine convet; for if he makes a seftment upon the land, ‘tis voidable by her husband; but if she makes a letter of attorney to give livery, ‘tis absolutely void in law; and the title is, because the contracts of those that are disabled by law to contract were void contracts; but their infedations were not in themselves void, because they were made coram paribus curia, who were presumed not to attest contracts of persons disabled by the law to contract, especially since such contracts were made for military or fagage service; but if there were the same causes of wealth; and by these infeonations a (ranager was directed to bring his prargue against the person that was actually invested in the land, wherefore the infant’s seftment was good till it was avoided by an act of equal notoriety, to the parties. As in the case of the seftment, the parties must appear to do it with an act of equality of livery with the act of seftment, or by bringing an act of livery at full age, when the law had enabled him; by action in a court of record, to set aside the seftment that he had made during his minority; but the law enabled him by entry to set aside the act coram paribus during his minority, because the person might unde what was done in pais; but the courts of justic refuse not to destroy the act in pais till the infant, by his own discretion, had chosen to avoid them, because it was derogatory to the dignity of the courts of justice to set aside the felonum acts in pais, till the infant had come to such age of discretion, as might make it fully appear that the seftment was made during his disability; for the infant was not received to disable himself during the time of his disability; but during such disability he might, by equal solemnity in pais, disable himself, since such an act was only coram paribus, in the same manner as the seftment itself was made; but the perfect and express consent of the infant bound him, and such act was void, and therefore such feoffice was a difficil, as

If an infant had been committed to the attorney by the courts in pais, he was not admitted to affidavit himself, because there was no stated time, and his posture was not expressly bound to evidence and therefore they could not bind; but it was to be convicned and to be conscious themselves of their own follies or deffects; but the King, who had the care of all his subjects, might,
by solemn office found, avoid such acts of infancy, and so might the heir at law after his death. 4 Ca. 125.
2 Roll. Abr. 2. 8 Ca. 42. 43. Gar-diner and Norman. Perk. feft. 183.

A man may either give or receive livery by letter of attorney; for since a contract is no more than the content of a man’s mind to a thing, where that content or concurrence appears, it is most unreasonable to oblige such person to be present at the execution of the contract, therefore it may as well be performed by any other person deleagated for that purpose by the parties to the contract.
Ca. Lit. 52. 2 Roll. Abr. 8.

But such delegation or authority, to give or receive livery, must be by deed, that it may appear to the court, that the attorney had a consideration to represent the parties that are to give or take the livery, and where the authority was purveyed. Ca. Lit. 48. b. 52. a. 2 Roll.
Abr. 9. 2 Polfinam and Grasie.

For if the letter of attorney be to make livery upon condition, as to make a seftment conditional, and the attorney delivers falsly in law, the livery is not void, because the authority is not to create an absolute fee-simel; and
...and therefore such absolute feoffment shall not bind the feoffor, because he gave no such authority; and hence in some books the attorney is called a diffirett. 11 H. 4. 3. 2 Rull. Abr. 90. Co. Lit. 258. Perk. fett. 189.

But if the letter of attorney had been to make livery absolutely, and the attorney had made it upon condition, this forms a good execution of his power, and the feoffment good; because when the attorney had once delivered possession, he fully executed his power; and the condition annexed to it, being without authority, is void; and therefore shall not destroy the operation of the livery. 26 Aff. 39. 2 Rull. Abr. 8. Co. Lit. 258. Perk. fett. 192.

So if a warrant of attorney be given to make livery to one, and the attorney makes livery to two, or if the attorney had authority to make livery of Black-Acre, and he made livery of Black-Acre and White-Acre, tho' the attorney has in these cases done more, yet there is no reason that should vitiate what he has done pursuant to his power, since what he did beyond it is a perfect nullity, and void. Perk. fett. 189.

But if the attorney were to deliver seisin to two, and he had made seisin only to one, that had been void; because he had no authority to deliver the whole possession to one exclusive of the other, and therefore 'tis void for the whole. Perk. fett. 188.

An attorney cannot make a livery within view, because such a livery is not in words, instead of the act of delivery; besides, the power of the attorney is to deliver the possession, but that power is not executed by the livery, because the possession is not in the seisin till actual entry made by him, and consequently the attorney has not executed his authority. Co. Lit. 51. a. 2 Rull. Abr. 9.

If a letter of attorney be given to two jointly to take livery, and the seoffor makes livery to one in the absence of the other, in the name of both, this is void; because they being appointed jointly to receive livery are considered as one person. Co. Lit. 49. 2 Rull. Abr. 8.

But if a seoffment be made to A. and B. and the seoffor gives a letter of attorney to deliver seisin, and J. S. gives livery to A. in the absence of B. in the name of both, this is a good livery; for though the intire seoffment be delivered to one only, yet they being jointtenants, the delivery of seisin to one makes no alteration or change in the seoffment, because, if the livery had been made to both, each had been placed in the seoffment; besides that, every man being presumed to accept a gift for his advantage, A. is looked upon as the attorney of B. to receive the seoffment for him, and therefore the livery to A. ensues to the benefit of B. till he disages to it. Co. Lit. 49. 2 Rull. Abr. 8.

But if a letter of attorney be made to three conjunctimi & divisiim, and two only make livery, this is not good, because not pursuant to their authority, for the delegation was to them all three, or to each of them separately; yet if the third was present at the time of the livery made by two, though he did not actually join with them in the act of livery, yet the livery is good; because when they all three are upon the land for that purpose, and two make livery in the presence of the third, there is his consent to the act, though he did not join in it actually, since he did not dissent to it. Dyer 62. 1 Rull. Abr. 326.

If a letter of attorney be given to A. to make livery of lands already in lease, the attorney may enter upon the lease in order to make livery; because while the lease exists, the seoffor cannot deliver the seisin of it; and therefore to execute the power given him by the letter of attorney, it is necessary he should have a power to enter upon the lease; but by Roll, it is the safer way to infer a clause in the letter of attorney for the attorney to enter to 'other assises side expellense' Co. Lit. 52. b. Poph. 103. Dyer 131. a. 340. a. 2 Rull. Abr. 9.

If A. be divisited of Black Acre and White Acre, and gives a letter of attorney to enter into both, and make livery, if the attorney enters into one acre only, and makes livery, secundum formam chartae, this is not good, because the attorney has not purposed his authority; for the effete of the diffirett cannot be defeated without an entry into every one of the estates, and if the effete the attorney cannot execute his power in the manner it was delegated; and therefore what he did in this case was void. Co. Lit. 52. a. 2 Rull. Abr. 9.

If A. makes a lease for years to B. and after makes a deed of seoffment with a letter of attorney to B. to deliver seisin, and B. makes a livery for the same purpose, this shall not extinguish or affect his term, because the livery was made to pass the freehold, and that he did as representative to the lefessor; and therefore since the seoffice can claim nothing from the lefessor, the interret of the lefessee remains as it was, unaffected by the seoffment. Co. Lit. 52. a.

If lefessor for life make a deed of seoffment and letter of attorney to his lefessor to deliver seisin, if the lefessor makes livery accordingly, 'tis a good seoffment; but the lefessor, notwithstanding he gave livery himself, may enter for the forfeiture of the tenant for life; because the freehold being in the tenant for life, the lefessor was only his representative to transfer it; but if the tenant had been only leffor for years, and the lefessor had made livery, that had been no forfeiture of the term, because the freehold being in the lefessor, he could not be the representative of the tenant for years, for what the tenant had not; and therefore the freehold, which passed by the livery, must proceed from the lefessor himself, and consequently shall bind him. Co. Lit. 52. Perk. fett. 200.

There are few or no perons excluded from exercising this power of delivering seisin, for monks, infants, persons convicted of felony, and excommunicated, villains, aliens, &c. may be attorneys; for this being only a naked authority, the execution of it can be attended with no manner of prejudice to the persons under these incapacities or disabilities, or to any other peron, who by law may claim any interret of such disabled persons after their death. Co. Lit. 52. Perk. fett. 187.

A person at law may be an attorney to deliver seisin to her husband, and so may he in remainder be an attorney to make livery to the tenant for life. Co. Lit. 51. a. Perk. fett. 196.

This power of the attorney must be executed during the life of the person that gives it, because the letter of attorney is to constitute the attorney my representative for such a purpose, and therefore can continue in force only during the life of me, that am to be represented. And hence it is, that if J. S. make a letter of attorney to deliver seisin for life to A., and J. S. dies before A., he can't deliver seisin during my life, for that were plainly without any authority from me; nor can he do it after my death for the former reason. 2 Rull. Abr. 9. Co. Lit. 52. Perk. fett. 188.

This authority to give livery may be delegated by deed indented, though the attorney be not party to the deed, because the attorney takes nothing by the deed, but has only a naked authority delegated to him; and therefore a man may take an estate in remainder, though he is not party to the deed, a forti et uno not party to the deed may take an estate by power or by livery. 2 Rull. Abr. 8. 9. and wide Co. Lit. 52.

But if any corporation aggregate, as a mayor or commonalty, or dean and chapter, make a seoffment and letter of attorney to deliver seisin, this authority does not determine by the death of the mayor or dean; but the attorney so well execute the power after their death, because the letter of attorney is an authority from the body aggregate, which subsists after the death of the mayor or dean, and therefore may be represented by their attorney; but if the dean or mayor be named by their own private names, and die before livery, or be removed, livery after forms not good. 14 H. 8. 3. 11 H. 2. 19. North part is called a Tack, in Lancashire a Farm-bolt, in Eire a Hille. We may conjecture, that both the French and English word came from the Latin firmus; for we find locare ad firmam to signify with others as much to do or set to farm with us; the reason whereof may be in respect of the sure hold they have beyond tenants at the great foot of the Land. In the terms of the Law it is derived from the Saxon saman, which signifieth to feed or yield virtual; for in ancient time the resevations were as well in virtualls as Feud, See Fred. Fred, Feudus.

Feudus. See Feudal.

Feudal baronies. Feudal baronies were, when the King, in the creation of baronies, gave a certain estate to the baron, he held it of the King, for the defence of the realm. Per Holt Ch. 1. There is no feudal barony remaining at this time, except Arundel. 1 Saiz. 253. Lord Gerard v. Lady Gerard.

Feudus. See Feudary. Feudary, is a recompence for engaging in a feud or faction, and the contingent damages; it having been the custom of ancient times, for all the kindred to engage in the kingman's quarrel; according to that of Tacitus, De moribus Germanorum, suffjære tam intimitias feu patri, feu propteriu, gam amicitias miscet eft. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Feuds. (Feoda.) Estates in lands were originally at will, and then they were called Munera; afterwards they were for life, and then they were termed Beneficia, and for that reason the livings of clergymen are so called at this day; and afterwards they were made hereditary, when they were called Feoda, and in our law fee-simple. Rel. Spel. 9. When Hugh Capet usurped the kingdom of France, about the year 947, to support himself in such usurpation, he granted to the nobility and gentry, that whereas till then they enjoyed their honours for life, or at will only, they should from henceforth hold them to them and their heirs; which was imitated by William called The Conqueror, upon his accession to the crown of England; for till his reign fees or fees were not hereditary, but only for life, or for some determinate time.

Fiction of law. (Flatio juris, ) is allowed of in several cases: it must be framed according to the rules of law, and what is contrary in the conceptions of man; and there ought to be equity and possibility in every legal fiction. There are many of these fictions in the Civil law; and by some Civilians, it is said to be an assumption of law upon an untruth, in something possible to be done, but not done. Geuthrin and Barri. The feim of the confuence in a fist, is but a fiction in our law; it being an invented form of conveyance only. 1 Lill. Ab. 610. And a common recovery is fictio juris, a formal act or device by convey, where a man is defirous to cut off all the world, remains, &c. 4 Rep. 42. By fiction of law, a bond made beyond for, may be pleaded to be made in the place where abroad, in fiction in the county of Middlesex, &c. to try the fame here; without which it cannot be done. 1 Lev. 281. b.

There are five forts of fictions in law, abeyance, remitter, relation, presumption, and representation; per Dadderidge J. Js. 73.

Fiction is never admitted where truth may work; as where edes qua uhs, and his feejoin in a jfectament, it shall be the fecondament of the feujoin. Hill. 15 Jac. 2. 4 Rep. 126. in the case of Hackett v. Weart.

The law never shall make any fiction but for necessity, and to avoid a mischief; per Care. 3 Rep. 30. in the case of Butler v. Baker. — Ibid. 36. per Dadderidge J. 2 Roll. R. 502. in the case of Sheffield v. Radcliffe. — Js. 73. 5. C. and to avoid abuttedness, and prefer the right of a stranger; per Dadderidge J. 42.1. Cas. v. Pipsw. 1 Cas. in Cam. Suce. The law often makes fictions for prevarication of rights; per Gould J. 2 Med. 290.

Fictions of law must not be of a thing impossible, for the law imitates nature; per Dadderidge J. 2 Roll. R. 502. in the case of Radcliffe v. Sheffield.

You shall never make a man subject to the penalty of a statute, a fiction of law. Arg. Godl. 528. cites 11 Rep. 51.

No ecape can amount to a capital offence, unless for the crime, for which the party was committed, were actually such at the time of the escape; for it is not sufficient that it become such afterwards, from the beginning by a fiction of law; as where one is committed for having given a dangerous wound, and escapes, after which the party dies. 2 Haw. Pl. C. 135. f. 75.

All ficions of law are to certain respects and purposes, and extend only to certain perils; as the law supposes the vouchee to be tenant of the land, where in re verteite he is not; but this is as to the demandant himself, and to enable him to do things as to the demandant, which the demandant may do to him; and therefore a fine levied by vouchee to the demandant, or fine or relie from the demandant to the vouchee is good; but fine levied by a stranger to a stranger, or he made to him by a stranger, is void; per Care. Mch. 32. 43. Eliz. B. R. 3 Rep. 29. b. in Butler and Baker's case.

The King is not to be answered, bound, or defeated by ficions; and therefore he would have been bound in this provision, or remainder by a feigned recompence upon a common recovery, or warranty collative, without true and actual effects, &c. 502. in the case of Sheffield and Radcliffe, cites 6 Ed. 5. 56. and 1 Rep. 43. Altmore's case.

These things are properly ficions of law, that have no real effect in their own body, but are acknowledged and accepted in lieu of some special purposes. Hub. 222. cites Co. Lit. 265. b.

 fict. Which we call fict, is in other countries the term for the fict. law, which is taken in the conceptions of man, and that the fiction of law is contrary to chattels. In Germany certain divities are called fict.

Fisci, Fisci. In a writ judicial, that lieth at all times within the year and day, for him who hath recovered in an action of debt or damages, to the sheriff, to command him to levy the debt or the damages to the goods against whom the recovery was had. This writ had

Upon a former relief the Sheriff cannot deliver the defendant goods to the plaintiff in satisfaction of his debt; nor ought he to deliver them to the defendant against whom execution is; but the goods are to be sold; and in flitting the money is to be brought into court.

Cra. Eliz. 504. Law. 589. S. P.

But it has been held, that upon a fieri facias goods may be sold to the plaintiff, who pays out the writ, tho' not actually delivered to him. Cumb. 452. and see Carth. 419.

If the defendant dies after the execution awarded, and before it be served, yet it may be served upon his goods in the hands of the executioner or administrator; for by the execution awarded the goods are bound, and the sheriff need not take notice of his death.

Cra. Eliz. 181. 1 Med. 188. S. P.

That this was clearly so before the 29 Car 2, before which statute the goods were bound from the title of the writ, but by this statute they are bound only from the time of delivery of the writ to the sheriff; but even since the statute, the execution feems good in this case, for the statute was made for the benefit of strangers, who might have a title to the goods between the title of the writ of execution and time of delivery to the sheriff, and not for the benefit of the party, or his executors or administrators. See Cumb. 33. 2 Vent. 218. 1 Salk. 322.

So if the plaintiff dies, the execution does not abate, and the sheriff may, notwithstanding, proceed in it, and cause the goods to be delivered more to the plaintiff; for by the writ commands him to levy and bring the money into court, which the plaintiff's death does no way hinder; besides, an execution is an intire thing, and cannot be superseded after it is begun. 1 Salk. 322. per cur. 3.

In trespass the sheriff justified, that by virtue of a fieri facias out of the Exchequer for the Queen's debt, he took the plaintiff's bealls, being levant and couchant upon the land of the debtor, and fold them for the Queen's debt; and adjudged that it was not lawful, for they were not to be sold as the goods of the debtor, but they might have been disolved for the Queen's debt.

Civ. Et. 431. 57 Eliz. 2 Bull. Ab. 159. S. C.

If a fieri facias is awarded to the sheriff, upon which he takes an intire chell, and sells it for 40l. and returns the fieri facias with the 20l. into court, he may deatn the furpillage till the defendant comes to demand it of him; for he is not bound to search for the defendant; Per. Popham, and agreed.

Ney 59. 38 Eliz. Howde v. Cole.

But if a fieri facias is awarded for 40l. by force of which the sheriff takes five oxen, every one of the value of 5l. and sells them all, it is clear that the defendant shall have action of trespass against the sheriff; per Gesow; which was agreed.

Ney 59. in case of Howde v Cole.

On a fieri facias the sheriff may not break the outer door of the house, and enter; but if that open he may enter, and then may and ought to break the door of an entry or chamber which is locked, and break open any chell, and take the goods in it, in execution, and if he does it not, and leaves the house liable against him. Brown. 50. Trin. 44 Eliz. Annu.

This writ, though mentioned in the statute W. 2. 18, is a writ of execution at Common law, and is called a fieri facias, because the words of the writ directed to the sheriff are Quod fieri facias de bonis & catallis, &c. and from these words the writ takes its denomination.

Civ. Et. 290. b.

The property till sale remains in defendant. Brown. 41. Trin. 6 facet. Annu.

The property of goods is vested by the delivery of the fieri facias, and an extent afterwards for the King comes too late, and that on the statute of frauds and piracy; per Holt. Cumb. 123. Trin. 1 W. & M. in B. R. Lern- mers v. Thoroughgood.

The King grants an annuity for 40 years to B, to be received by the hands of the receiver of the court of wards. This is a rent-ch,ge, and may be sold by the sheriff upon a fieri facias of the goods of B. It is otherwise of an annuity for years granted by a common person. Resolved in the court of wards by the two Juliets.

Ch. Batun. Jenk. 312. pl. 97. 3 Jac. Alyit Yor'a cafe.

Debt against the sheriff lies for money levied on a fieri facias; before the return of the writ, he might take advantage of the execution; 2 Salk. 579. pl. 63. Trin. 31 Car. 2. B. R. Cabram v. Wedly. Payment to the sheriff on a fieri facias is a good plea, but not so to the garage. 2 Let. 262. Trin. 29 Car. 2. B. R. Taylor v. Belon. If the sheriff on a fieri facias doth sell a lease or term of a house, whereas it must not put the person out of his possession, and the vender in, but the vender must bring his ejectment; per cur. 2 Show. 85. pl. 74. Hill. 31 & 32 Car. 2. B. R. The King v. Dean and Bird, &c. At law when the officers are once in a house on a fieri facias they may break open any chamber doors or trunks for doing their execution. Agreed per cur. 2 Show. 85. pl. 78. Hill. 31 & 32 Car. 2. B. R. The King v. Bird. Goods of the wife vested in trulutes on the marriage, but the husband to have the use of them for life, were fixed on an execution for the debt of the husband, and the assignement adjudged fraudulent as to the creditors or assignees, per cur. Act. 32. 376. pl. 221. Mich. 1601. Underwood v. Merdant.

Upon a fieri facias the sheriff may take any thing but wearing clothes; if the party has two gowns he may take one of them. Per Hey Ch. 3. Salk. 359. Eliz. 8 W. 3. 2 Black. 101. v. Buckland.

Two or three 'facias were delivered the same day. Hale Ch. J. inclined that the sheriff had election to prefer either, but ordered it to be made a case. See quare now the late statute.

Execution may be left first, first is good, but the Sheriff in the first may take action against the sheriff, unless he bid the sheriff play execution, or to that purpofe. 1 Salk. 320. Smalven v. Buckingham. In Salk. is a N. B. that he who brought the first writ told the sheriff that he was not in hale, and so took out no warrant, nor left any fees; and this inclined the opinion of the court more strongly against him.

Carth. 419. S. C. And after several debates the judges were of opinion for the plaintiff who had taken out his execution laft, to which they rather inclined, for that it appeared that the other creditor did not demand an execution of his writ. And by Hale Ch. J. the ven- encr of the goods in such case has good title to them, which cannot be defeated by a subsequent execution of that writ which was first delivered; but the party concerned in such writ is put to his action against the sheriff; for otherwise it would be dangerous to make such pactsches of sheriffs, and that might make writs of execution of no effect. 5 Med. 376. S. H.

Hale Ch. J. took notice that the party paid to the sheriff, "You may let it lie, it requires no hafe," and therefore defires no warrant, nor leaves any fee, and to the face upon the second fieri facias, good, and not to be avoided. And though the second fieri facias had been delivered a fortnight after, yet it is not the Sheriff's execution shall be good, and the party's remedy is only against the sheriff.

effate of several men is uncertain. And in that regard, a fourteenth seems to be a rate anciently laid upon every town, according to the land or circuit belonging to it: Whereof Camden in his Bell makes frequent mention, particularly pag. 168, of Wells in Somersbury, thus: Qui tempore, ut testost certant Angioris lingue, eptichus ip- sum opidum semet, qui pro quorquintae hitis geldavit. And pag. 172. of Bath, Geldatu pro viginti hidis quando febris geldatos. Thirdly, pag. 181. Old Sarum or Salis- bury, and all their inquest and writs, were taken out of Donegal-hook in the Exchequer. So that in old time this seems to be a yearly tribute in cer- tainty; whereas now, though the rate be certain, yet it is not levied but by parliament. Cowell, edit. 1727.

5. Even after a fine is from the fund divided into a fine executed, and a fine executory. A fine executory, is such a fine, as of its own force gives a preprevision (at the least in law) unto the conuers, so that he needeth no writ of habere facius feipsum for the execution of the fame, but may enter of which fort is a fine for cujus præterea de droit came conquit ad facis feipsum, that is, upon acknowledgment that the thing mentioned in the concord be jus ifius cognizantii ut iila quia idem habet de dans cognizorius. Well, sect. 57. And the reason of this feemeth to be, because this fine palett by way of releance of that thing, which the conuoure hath already (at least in law) declared, and hath given in execution, as far as their own force do not execute the poflcffion in the conuores, as fines for conuense de droit tantum, fines for dons, grant, release, confirmation, or render; for if such fines were not made in the fecond or third day after the writ of facias, or if the parties who are in poflcffion at the time of the fines levied, the conuores mult neede fues writs of habere facius feipsum, according to their several caues, for the obtaining of their poftcfffions, except at the levying fuch executory fines, the parties unto whom the effeate is by them limited, be,
in poftcfffion of the lands passed thereby, for if such fines do enforce by way of extinguishment of right, not altering the effeate of poftcfffion of the conuores, but perhaps bettering it. Wifh, ubi supra, fect. 20. Touching the form of these fines, we consider, upon what writ their force is, and fuch a fine is after the concord to be made,
that no poftcfffion, or fuch a fine is after the concord to be made,

Fines seem originally to have been invented and allowed of for different ends and purposes, than they are now applied to; for they were at first no more than a friendly composition and determination of the matters in dispute, and did not require the presence of a judge; and this way of composing differences was generally admitted in those days, because the fuitors of the court, who were judges of all suits, were by these amicable compositions the sooner discharged from their attendance at the court; nor did the lord of the manor suffer by them, because on these agreements, the parties litigating paid him a fine for his ende counters, as they do to the King at this day, which was equivalent to an indemnity, which were paid him in adversary suits. 2 Bac. Abr. 520, 521.

1. The several sorts of fines; and of the several parts of a fine, and when they begin to operate.

2. Of what things a fine may be levied, and by what name.

3. Who may levy fines; and of taking cognizance by declination.

4. Statutes, with notes and adjudications upon them, concerning the manner of levying fines; exceptions to fines; non-claim of fines; who shall be bound by fines levied, and their operation in barring the issue in tail.

5. Of the operation of a fine in barring strangers, or those who have but an uncertain interest, as for a term of years, or for other assignable interest.

6. The remittis given to strangers by claim and entry for the preservation of their rights; and of erroneous fines, and the manner of reversing them.

1. The several kinds of fines; and of the several parts of a fine, when they begin to operate.

There are two sorts of fines, viz. one executed, and the other executory. Executed, that is, of the present estate enfeated unto, or is supposed in the conveyee; for such a fine is a fequester of record, as this fine came, or as fines, or for reliefs, or confirmation, or for forrengder; executory, as when no estate is vested in the conveyee, until it be executed by entry or admission, as fines for grant & render by the conveyee, which must be made upon a fine come eco, or for reliefs, or for an other fine which is executed; or otherwise the conveyee could not make any grant and render of that land, &c. which he had not. 2 Inst. 513. It is not called executed, because the conveyee is in possession; but because the fine is executed between the parties; so that the conveyee cannot re-enter, because the fine itself is supposed to be executed. A fine which is not called executory, because the fine does not suppose any execution, but the conveyee may execute it, either by entry or by the writ. 2 R. in Fines 4.

Of fines there are four kinds: 1. A fine for cognizance de droit come eco; 2. A fine for cognizance de droit come eco, que il ad de fordone, i.e. upon an acknowledgment of the right of the cognitor; as that which he had of the gift of the cognitor. It is a single fine, and admit the possession (at least in law) of the land, by virtue of a fequester or former gift of the cognitor, and works as the fine for executory, a fee simple fullng without the word heirs, and nothing being rendered back to the cognitor. This is the principal and surest fine, and is a fine executed, so that the cognitor may presently enter. Wood’s Inj. 240.

2. A fine for done, grant & render, which is a double fine, to a man, two fines, viz. the fine for cognizance come eco, &c. and a fine for forrengder, &c. and where the cognitor, after a relase and warranty made to him by the cognitor, doth grant and render back to the cognitor, the lands, &c. limiting oftentimes thereby to remainders to doffers, not named in the writ, if the party is in possession; this fine is executed, otherwise he must enter, or have the writ of habeas facias etiam, &c. Wood’s Inj. 240.

3. A fine for cognizance de droit tantum, which is commonly used to pass a revocation. It may be expressed in such fines that the particular estate is in another, whom the cognitor is willing should have the revocation. Sometimes it is used by tenant for life, to make a grant and relase to him in revocation. In a fine for cognizance de droit tantum, the cognitor hath a freehold in law in him before he enters. Wood’s Inj. 240.

4. A fine for forrengder, which is that the cognitor is lessee of the lands contained in the fine, and the cognitor hath no freehold therein, but it passeth by the fine. It is commonly used to grant away estates for life or years. And if the cognitores are not in possession, they must enter, or have a writ of habeas facias etiam, &c. Wood’s Inj. 240.

There are five sorts of fines, of which three are executed, viz. for cognizance de droit come eco, &c. for rel ease, and for forrengder; and two executory, viz. for cognizance de droit tantum, and for grant and render. Fines upon forrengder are, multitude expressly so, or amounting to a forrengder. A fine upon a forrengder is, where the fine granted is for life, or for another’s life, or tenant in tail after possibility, tenant in dower, or by the curtsey, by fine forrender their eftates to him in revocation; and the form of the fine is such in effect, as the fine for cognizance de droit tantum seems to be the most ancient; for the conveyance of the land in the place of the judgment, which was always executory in adversary suits, the demandant was obliged to follow the rules of the law, and sue out execution; but in time, when these fines became the common and best way of purchasing, the purchaser, to prevent the trouble of suing out execution, had often given him by livery in the country, and for his further assurance obliged the vendor, by covenant, to levy a fine; and thus the fine for cognizance de droit come eco, &c. came in use, which supposes a precedent gift, by which the conveyee was put into possession, and consequently there might be no execution of what he had already. Co. Read. en Fines, 45, 5.

All fines are either executed, as fines for cognizance de droit come eco, &c. fines for rel ease, and fines for forrengder; or executory, as fines for cognizance de droit tantum, and for grant & render. The fine for cognize de droit tantum seems to be the most ancient; for the conveyance of the land in the place of the judgment, which was always executory in adversary suits, the demandant was obliged to follow the rules of the law, and sue out execution; but in time, when these fines became the common and best way of purchasing, the purchaser, to prevent the trouble of suing out execution, had often given him by livery in the country, and for his further assurance obliged the vendor, by covenant, to levy a fine; and thus the fine for cognizance de droit come eco, &c. came in use, which supposes a precedent gift, by which the conveyee was put into possession, and consequently there might be no execution of what he had already. Co. Read. 4.

This fine come eco, &c. is most commonly used, being the forrengder for the purchaser; in which it is to be observed, that this fine and that de droit tantum convey a fee simple to the conveyee, without words of inheritance; for when the conveyor acknowledges the land to be the right of the conveyee, *his repugnant and contradictory to his own acknowledged, to claim any right or intereat to the land in reverson or remainder; besides, in every judgment a fee simple being recovered, and the conveyance coming in lieu of the judgment must be sufficiently import as much, unless the express acknowledgment of the parties qualify it. Co. Litt. 9, b. Co. Read. 4, 7.

Upon a fine for cognizance de droit come eco, &c. the conveyor can’t retaine a rent, because the conveyance supposing a precedent gift, he can’t charge the inheritance which he has given intirely away; and to the reddendum comes comes too late when the fine has mentioned before an absolute precedent gift, without any such clause of ren-}ersion. {Br. tit. Fine, 30. 3 Rob. Atr. 18. 2} and for forfeiture of a rent comes see, &c., can't be leved to and their heirs; for the end of fines being not only to fettle the possifion for the present, but for ever, the admiflion of such a fine would not anwer the end; besides the uncertainty which of admitted, it might ferve and enjoy the land, the fine itself can't operate anfwering to the limitation; for the furrivor, by the privilege of jointancy, shall enjoy the whole, and for ever exclude the heirs of the other conuife; besides, the fine being equivalent to a judgment, ought to decide and fettle the right of the fee. {1 Roll. Atr. 19. Ca. Reading 5. 6.}

For the former reafon the judges will not, or at leaft ought not, to admit of a fine upon condition, becaufe such a fine does not positively determine and fettle the right of the fee, it being uncertain whether the conuifee will enjoy the land according to the fine, since that depends upon the performance or non-performance of the condition; but my Lord Coke tells us, that if fuch fines be admetted by the judges they are valid and fhall fand; the rule, quad fieri non debet fed factum valet, obtaining in this cafe; because fines being the privy agreement and concord, it were to trifle with the authority of the court to contra without previous ferve, to fuffer another party to recede from their contraft, after their solemn composition acknowledged on record, and received in the moft solemn manner by the judgment and declarion of a court of juftice. 5 Co. 38. b. 2 Roll. Atr. 18. Bro. tit. Finer. 5. Ca. Reading 5.

It makes a leafe for life, and afterwards grants the reveflion by fine to B, for life, the remainder in tail; in a quid juris clamatis againft the leffe, he would have rendered to the conuifee, reifying a rent during his life, but the court refused it; for had this fudder, with the reveflion of the rent, been granted to the tenant, it might have happened, that if the tenant would not continue according to the limitation of the fine; for if the grantee of the reveflion died before the tenant for life, the remain-der-man in tail fhould hold the land difcharged, and the tenant for life could not enjoy the rent as long as the fine gave it; but if in this cafe the tenant had surrendered to the grantee for his own life, with a reveflion of a rent, this might have been admitted, for this is no absolute fudder; and each party may enjoy what the fine gave him, according to the feveral limitations thereof. Ca. Reading 5.

If there be leffe for life, the remainder for life, and the leffe give a fine for conuance de droit to him in remain-der, this enures by way of fudder; becaufe by this fine he only acknowledges all the right he has in the land to belong to him in remainder; but if the leffe had leved a fine, &c. to him in remainder, it had been a fuerte of both their effeis, and be in reveflion might enter immediately; and the reaon of the difference in this, the fine for conuance de droit comes see, &c. always graps a fee-fimple, which palies by the precedent gift, as the fine suppoles; but the fine for conuance de droit tantum only conveya all his right, which is intended all he can lawfully pass away. 1 Cl. W. 5. 15. 16. &c. which is felled for one, as heir of the part of the mother, and he and his wife levey a fine to A. and B. with war-ranty, and A. and B. by the fame fine grant and ren-der to the husband and wife in tail, remainder to the heirs of the husband; though it was urged, that the feifin of the land was held by the fine, and that nothing was al-}lowed by the fine, yet refolved, that the conuifee was more than a bare infrumen, and that the effe was once in him; and the fine and render is a convey-ance at Common laown, and the render makes the conuifee a new purchaser, as much as a feofment and re-life-feifin.

The fift part of the fine is the original writ, and with-out this the fine is erroneous, and may be reveral for error in B. R. this being absolutely necefsary to bring the parties within the jurifdiction of the court; and though at this day the original is generally a writ of covenant, yet fines are taken on all writs in which lands are demifioned, or are to be charged, or which any matter relate to them; for the law having provided different com-medies for the several grievances of the subjeft, 'twas but reasonable in the judges to allow of these compositions, whatever method the injured perfon took to reco-ver his rights. Co. Reading 3. 10. Plow. 394. 2 Roll. Atr. 15. 16. 17. 18.

The practice now is for the conuifee to make the conuance, and acknowledge the fine, before any original fue out; and this has fo far obtained, that the judges have refolved such fines fhould fhnd, though the conuifee died before the writ of covenant was taken out; but in thofe cafes they are held to be void, as they are fuch couftant as of a term precedent to the conuance, for they are full neceffary to make the fine a perfect and complete conuance, though for the greater expedition they have allowed of this variation from the ancient courfe. 1 H. 7. 9. Hid. 330. Ten. 47.

If in a warrantia charta againft B, to warrant one acre, if he levies a fine of that acre and another, the fine operates to convey only all his right in that acre he is called to defend, for the other was not mentioned in the original. Ca. Reading 10. 2 Roll. Atr. 16.

Hence it is, that if the conuance be of the manor of Dale, sale; or if the conuance be of the third part, the ren-der can't be of the whole; because the court can deter-mine the right only of that about which the parties con-tended, and the conuifee demanded in his original; but if the conuifee acknowledges all his right, &c. to the demandant, for which conuance he grants and renders the land to the conuifee for life; or if he grants a common in the land, or fo many loads of wood off it, this is a good fine; because the determination is wholly of the thing in difpute, one party taking the property, and the other a profit arising from it, and comprehended in the conuance, of which the thing in difpute was brought. 2 Roll. Atr. 15. 16. 17. 18.

Therefore if the grant and render had been of a rent de novo, that had been good; because the rent iffuing out of the land must be implied in a demand of the land; and confequently the concord and agreement of the par-ties is received and allowed for that only which they list-ed. 2 Roll. Atr. 15. Ca. Reading 11. 1 Isl. 514. 2.

As nothing can pafs by the fine but what is expreffed or implied in the covenant, fo no one can take an imme-diate effet by it who is not mentioned in the writ of covenant, because none can have any benefit from the judgment, unless he is not judicially before it, and fues for it, yet a grant and render may be made to a stranger in remainder; but the reafon is, because the render being only a consideration for the conuance, a remainder limited to a stranger may be as much a confer-}eration to the conuifee, as if the whole effe had been given to him; but there muft be an immediate effet given back to the conuifee, because the render ex utermini implies that it must return to him. Ca. Reading 3. 2 Isl. 514. Bro. tit. Finer. 111.

When the parties are judicrially before the court by original, the conuifee for the conuifee appears with the preci-fion of a judgment, and the court sets forth the conuance which ought to be made by the tenant in the writ, after his appearance is recorded, then follows his conuance, which is no more than an acknowl-edgment, that the manor, or other lands, &c. contained in the writ, belong of right to the demandants, as land which he hath of the gift of the tenant, with a general releafe and warranty to the conuifee and his heirs. When this conuance was taken they went originally to the trea-}ury, but now by the 5 H. 4. they fip up with the cuffus brevium, who reciprocates it, that the nature providing, that all the parts of the land shall remain in the fae custody of the chiefe clerk of the C. convenience or negligence. 5 H. 4. 4. 14. 5 Co. 39. 4. 2 Sid. 55.

The next and most material thing considerable in a fine is the King's silver; this is entred on the writ of covenant, and gives it the force and effect of a fine, and is granted to the King pro licentia concordandi, or specie de concordacione, in consideration of the same, and other fines, which became due on judgments and non suits; in adversary suits, this is always paid by him who takes the fee simple by the fine, and on the entry of it on the covenant, the form given is expressed, together with the plea, and between Hob. 357. 5. 6 a, d. this is to. 2 Inf. 511. 5 Co. 39.

It is likewise called the post-fine, in respect of the premier fine in the Hunaear, which is due to the King on the original, and is greater or less in proportion to that; for it is as much as the premier fine, and half as much more; as if the premier fine be 6. 8. 3, this is to. 2 Inf. 511.

From the entry of this the fine is obligatory, and begins to operate; and from thenceforth the fine shall stand, though either party die before the other parts are recorded. 5 Ves. 39. 14. 10. 5 Dyer 144.

But if the cononor dies before the King's silver is entered, the fine is voidable, and may be revertered by a writ of error; because this being given pro licentia concordandi, the agreement of the parties is not to be admitted as the judgment of the court till it be paid and entered, and consequently if the cononor dies last, of that he be done, the fine is erroneus, as a judgment given in an adversary suit after the death of one of the levitating parties; but this is to be understood with this distinction, that where it appears by the record itself, that the King's silver was paid before the death of the cononor, the fine is erroneous; but where after the cononor made the cononor died before the King's silver is paid, and after his death the silver was paid and entered on a writ of covenant returnable the term preceding his death, as if baron and fee make cononus before commissioners the 26th of March, the feme dies the day following, and upon a writ of covenant made returnable the Holary term preceding, the King's silver was entered as of that term, and the fine was adjudged to stand; for where there does not appear an error on the face of the record, the judges in favour to fines, which so much strengthen men's titles, and quicken their reflection, have always supported them, and would not suffer the entering the King's silver, after the parties death, to be examined, when it appeared by the record itself, that the fine was completed, as a fine of the term preceding the death of the cononor. 2 Inf. 511. 2 2 R. 133. 6.

The other parts of the fine are the foot and note of it; the foot of the fine runs thus, Hace et finalis concordia fosta apud Wifem, in curia domini regis, &c. and mentions the day, year, and place, and before what justices the cononus was made. 5 Co. 39. 3. Reading 3.

The note of the fine is no more than a docket taken by the chirographer, from which he transferres the indentures, which are delivered to the party to whom the cononus was made; and when this is done, the fine is said to be ingrossed. 5 Co. 39. 2 Inf. 468. F. N. B. 13.

A fine was thus, Hace et finalis concordia fosta in curia regis apud Wifem, a die Sancti Michaelis in tres festis manent annos decem Williemi Territ earum Thom. Trevur, &c. et profeas in castre Santati Trinitatis, 1 Annae concov. in recordali earum issum jusficiatis, so that the concordia of the foot and note, &c. must be done following the term, and the question was, of which term this should be said to be a complete fine; and it was held to be a fine of the term in which the conon was made, and that the concordia fosta in curia is the complete fine. 1 Salt. 341.

But in ancient times fines were levied of other things, than will be at this day allowed; and yet those fines shall be held none now as available, as they were taken to be, when they were levied. 2 Inf. 513.

Tenant in tail of a rent or common levies a fine with proclamations; it is very clear that the fines shall be barred thereby; for Walmfry J. 2 Co. 156, 21 Eliz. C. R. in the case of Sagar v. Bainton, 25 Sc. 96, 2 Inf. 513.

Of a lease for years the fine is void as to any tenant; for a freehold must be in the cognizor, or cognizor: however it may be good between the parties by way of esplopp, so as to conclude them. Wood's Inf. 242.

Land is to be demanded by the certain measure of the superlative quantity thereof, hide, carucata, bovata, virga, gan, rota terre, and in like manner, beo, suhnenha, berua, mara, juncaria, marjups & abatum, & buparia, may be demanded by the number of acres thereof. 16 Ajf. 9. Weft. Symb. fest. 26.
Houle-bote, hay-bote, and plow-bote may be demanded by the name of sublesors: thus, De rationabilit sublesoris in bofis, viz. in decem acris bofii fipus A. in D. & E. Weft. Symb. fest. 26.

Pars fores, deliveries, advowsons, vicarages, or titles improper, pays not by the name de advocatiis ecclesie, but de rectaria ecclesie, de S. cum pertinentiis. But when it is only of a presentation, it must be de advocatiis ecclesie de S. and not cum pertinentiis. Weft. Symb. fest. 26.

If an entire manor, or meillage, or other entire thing be divided or parted, and after a fine is to be levied of some of the parts of the thing so ferved, then must not the fine be de mediate, or quarter partes, or other part of the manor, meillage, or other thing; but such part must be demanded by the name of the whole thing. Weft. Symb. f. 26.

So if a meillage and 20 acres of land be parted into two parts; the fine of the one part must be de uno mefficage & decem acris terra, &c. and not de mediate uno mefficagii, & 20 acrarum terra; for the things now divided, may be recorded in their several parts; or if 20 acres entirely, for such things are not by law to be divided in their several parts, tho' less in quantity than the whole was before division made thereof. If a thing be twice named in a writ of covenant, it hurteh not, as a manor and a hundred, parcel of the same manor. Weft. Symb. f. 26, cites 27 H. 8. 2.

A fine was lewcked de duobus tenementis, and for that reason was revered; for the word tenement does not comprehend any certainty; for it takes in meillage, land, meadow, pature, &c. and whatsoever lies in tenure; and it will pass rent or common. L. 188. Trin. 31 Eliz. B. R. Seid v. Courtneys.

A thing is numbered, which is not a manor in truth, does not pass by the name of a manor in a fine or recovery; for they are grounded on original writs, which ought to be certain, and not to be taken by intendment; but otherwise of a grant, or feeftone; for there the intent of the parties shall help it. No 7. Johnson v. Heydon.

A fine of land will not be a bar of rent; as lecife for life, remainder for life of rent; the first lecife purchaseth the land, and levies a fine of that; this shall not bind him in remainder of the rent; per Winch. J. 2 Brom. 155. in the case of Richell v. Tucker, cites Palmer's cafe, and Smith v. Stapleton's cafe.

3. Who may levy fines; and of taking consavage by de dimas.
And here it must be first observed, that whatever legal defects may be in the conveyance, if the judge admits his fine, the final shall stand in all cases. And if an infant, tho' the judge omits a very necessary part of his duty in not rejecting such fines. Co. Reading 8.
2 Infs. 515.
The principal defects are either want of discretion and underbenefiting, as in infants, idiots and persons of new-fame memory, or want of power, as forensi prevalent. Co. Reading 8.

As to fines levied by an infant, tho' strictly speaking all contracts made by infants are in their own nature void, because a contract is an act of the understanding, which, during their infancy, they are presumed to want; yet civil societies have so far supplied that defect, and taken care of them, as to allow them to contract for their benefit and advantage, with power to rescile from and vacate it when it may prove prejudicial to them; now the method to fet aside such a contract must be by means of equal and indifferent persons' consent, in the manner of the benediction; and therefore if an infant levies a fine, which is no more than his own agreement recorded as the judgment of the court, he must revere it by writ of error, and this must be brought during his minority, that the court of B. R. may by infepception determine the age of the infant; and therefore if the judges by adoptamia may in such cases inform themselves by witnesses, church-books, &c. 2 Bat. Abr. 526. Co. Lit. 380. b. Man 76. 2 Roll. Abr. 15. Brs. tit. Error. Brs. tit. Fines, 74. 79. 1 Infs. 482. 2 Bulst. 320. 12 Co. 122.

If an infant brings a writ of error to reverse a fine for his nonage, and after infpecception and proof of infancy by witnesses does before the fine is reversed, his heir may reverse it; because the court having recorded the nonage of the conuorz, ought to vacate his contract when he appeared to be under a manifest disabilility at the time he entered the censure, 380. 1. and acknowledged a fine, and the conuorses omitting to have the fine ingrossed, till he came of age, in order to prevent the infant from bringing a writ of error, yet the court, upon view of the consuace produced by the infant, and upon his prayer to be infpected, and his age examined, recorded his nonage to give them the advantage of his writ of error, which he must otherwise lose, his nonage determining before the next term. Mor 74.

As to idiots and lunatics, it is necessary to distinguish between their acts done in pais, and those solemnly acknowledged on record; tho' the law is clear, that in neither cases are they admitted to discharge themselves, for the insecurity that may arise in contracts from counterfeit madness and folly, but their heirs and executors may avoid such acts in pais by pleading the disabilility; because if they can prove it, it must be presumed real, since nobody can be thought to counterfeit it, when he can expect no benefit from himself. 4 Co. 124. Co. Lit. 247. Brs. tit. Patis, 62. Cro. Elina. 359. 622. F. N.B. 202.

But neither the lunatic himself, nor his heir, can vacate any act of his done in a court of record; and therefore if a person non competes acknowledges a fine, it shall stand against him and his heirs; for tho' the judge ought not to admit of a fine from a man under that disabilility, yet when it is once received, it shall never be revered, because the record and judgment of the court being the highest evidence in the law, presumes the competer, at that time, capable of contracting; and therefore the credit of it is not to be cast aside, nor the record avoided by any averment against the truth of it. 4 Co. 124. 2 Infs. 439. If a dedimus be awarded to take the conuniance of several peroms, the commisioners may take the conumiance from each of them, and at several times, for it may so happen that they can't meet at one place at the same time; and if the commisioners return the conumiance but not to one of them, they may take the name of the third out of the dedimus, and make the wriit of covenant agreeable to it; for since the third does not join, it can be no prejudice to him; and therefore it were unreasonable that his obligation or refulfal should impeach the conumiance of the other duly taken, and so prevent their amicable composition of their differences. Co. Es. 576. 577.

nances, contained in the writs, to be the right of R., as that which be half of their gift; To have and to hold to him and to his heirs, of IV, and A., and the heirs of A., as in demesne, rents, sequesters, courts, pleas, reliefs, escheats, mills, advowsons of churches, and all other frees by the said levies, and free customs to the aforesaid mayor or corporation, rendering your service, and have the free lords of the fee, the service due and accustomed for all services. And the law will not suffer a final accord to be levied in the King's court without a writ original, and that at least before four justiciers in the bench, or in eyre, as it is in the old editions, who must be of full age, of good memory, and in presence of the King, who must be of full age, of good memory, and without any other persons, who may not be of full age, of good memory, and without any other persons, who may not attend thereunto, the fine shall not be levied. And the cause wherefore such final accord ought to be done is, because a fine is to have a bar, of no great force, and of no figure in itself, that it conclude not only such as be parties and privies thereto, and their heirs, but all other people of the world, of full age, out of prison, of good memory, and within the four days, the day of the fine levied; if they make not their claim of their action within a year and a day by the country.

The justice shall pay, What will Sir R. give?] In the old editions of the statutes it is printed, What faith Sir R.? which is not reconcileable with any meaning whatsoever. This gross inaccuracy was corrected in other editions, which altered it to, What will Sir R. give? But on farther consideration it is submitted to the reader's judgment whether the above translation, What will Sir R. give? is not nearer to the true sense. In the original French it is to be observed, that the pronoun relative qu.e is added, Que donner [instead of detre, as it is in all the editions, for 2 Inf. 513.] Sir R.? but if we render it Who will Sir R. give? Should be the pronoun personal qui. There is another circumstance in favour of this translation, which is that the verb donner, in grammatical order, refers to the justice who names the party, and not (as Lord Coke supposes) to the pleader or officer present; which if it is true, then Will Sir R.偿, that the question What will Sir Robert give? seems more natural to precede the next section; which supposes the sum given to be agreed on, in conference of that question: and it may be added, that this is the question now asked on acknowledging a fine at bar. Ruff. Stat. vol. 9. p. 1.

To be the right of R.] There is an error in the translation of this statute in all the editions of the statutes now extant; wherein the conclusions are made to acknowledge the manner of B. with the apportionments, to be the right of our Lord the King, in which is put, the bar or gift, The statute itself, and the conclusion of it, seems to acknowledge the manner, &c. to be the right of R. that is, of Sir Robert, the concluder. Id. 18.

Without a writ original?] If there be no original writ, yet the fine is not void, but voidable by writ of error. 2 Inf. 513.

Four justiciers] The number of justiciers here mentioned are not requisite at this day; but there must be above the number of one. And therefore a fine levied before Thoma Brian militis &c fisci fisci juriciliaris de commune banno was not good. 2 Inf. 514, 515. 4 H. 7. 74. enacted, That it shall be good, though levied in C. before two justiciers only.

And not elsewhere?] It was reolved, that a fine may be levied of lands in ancient demeine in the court of ancient demeine, notwithstanding this statute which says, that fines shall be levied in C. &c. or by the county for this statute only takes away the validity of fines levied in borough courts, which was the mischief intended to be prevented by this statute, and does not extend to courts of ancient demeine; for it would be unreasonable, that they should be barred of levying fines in C. (as they may be) by will of the county, and not by the county, in their courts of ancient demeine. And if it was resolved, that such fine levied in ancient demeine makes a discontinuance, and has all the effects of a fine levied in C. except that it is no bar, which is only

And if the fine do not attest thereunto? But if the fine be received, it is recorded, or is taken on the bar, the fine shall not be allowed to aver that the fine was not examined, nor affected. 2 Inf. 515.

Such as be parties] 2 Inf. 516. Parties are those that are parties to the original.

And privies] FIrst, this to be understood of privies in the sense of the heirs of the King, who are here named, but heirs by the custom, here comprehended under this word (privies) as Borough English, Gavelkind, or the like, which claim as heirs by custom, and is not intended of privies in estate, as joint-tenants, the donor and donee, litoris and lieffes, or the like. Also, this statute be not limited of privies in feudalism, as bishops, abbeys, and the like. — Privie signify those that are partners, or that have any interest in any action, or thing with another, or any relation to another. There are either privies in estate, as donor and donee, litoris and lieffes, joint-tenants, &c. or heirs in blood and a daughter, as the heir to the ancestor, or between coparceners; for by privies in blood, privies in blood inheritable are to be understood; privies in representation, as executors to testators, administrators to intertestates; privies in tenure, as lord and tenant, &c. all which may be reduced to two general heads, 216, cities R. 3. 216. But it is manifest all others are not to be understood here; but privies in estate and blood, and by representation. Privies therefore, being heirs to the parties, are bound or barred pretently for ever by a fine if they claim the same title, that their ancestors had, that levied the fine, whether under impeachment of the King, or by the law. So that all impediments (as within age, under coverture, non campus mentem, in prison, or beyond sea,) yet such issue in tail is barred; for such issue is out of the faving of the 4 H. 7. 24. Will's Stat. 424.

The words parties and privies are to be understood as to a fine, fined, as in the statute 18 Ed. 1. intended them, Jenk. 192. p. 97. See 2 J. 241, &c. In Ld. Denby's cafe, &c. He is privy in blood only, and not in estate also, is not within these privies, neither shall he be barred by the fine. As if lands be given to a man, and the heirs females of his body, and the heirs in blood of a daughter, and heirs in blood a fine, and dies without issue, this is no bar to the daughter; for through the be heir to his blood, yet is not heir to the estate, nor hath the need to make her conveyance to it by him; but if the father had levied it, it would have been otherwise. 3 vol. R. S. L. 216, cites Inf. 12. 2 Inf. 516.

By the words privies and strangers in the statute, if tenant in tail is party to the fine, and his issue claims per fe manum dani, yet he is privy; for he cannot convey himself as heir to the tail, but as of the body of his father, which is privy. Br. Fines, p. 109. So if land be given to husband and wife in special tail, the remainder to the right heirs of the husband in fee, and he alone levies a fine with proclamations of it, by this the issue in tail may be barred; for he cannot otherwise convey himself to the tail and decient, than as heir of the body of the father and mother. 3 vol. R. S. L. 216, cites D. 3. 251, and Br. Fines 100.

But all other people of the world] In these words are included as well tenant for years, tenant by statute merchant and staple, coheberts and customary holders, as tenants of freehold and inheritance, if they be out of possession or fee simple for their life, if he do not own or claim within five years after the fine and proclamations; unless such persons be aided by some of the impediments mentioned in the statute. By all the judges of England. Jenk. 192. p. 97. cites 19 H. 8. 6.

I. Being of full age.] By this act, if any stranger was within age, or in privity, or now before, or beyond the year, and therefore the fines levied the width thereof, and for ever excepted; so that after his full age, coming out of pri inf, &c. he or his heirs need not make any claim. 2 Inst. 516. But this is altered by the 4 H. 2. 24. ibid. in marg. 24.

If they make not their claim] Though the words are, if they make not their claim, yet in some cases the right is not given to the heir: of that estate, and for ever preferred. As if defier be diffiered, and the second defier leav a fine; in this case, if the first defier enter within the year, this shall preserve the right of the diffier, because the first defier, by his entry, avoided the whole estate given by the fines, yet lawfully might hinder himself. 2 Inst. 516.

27 Edw. 1. c. 1. (Intituled, No exception to the fine that the demandant was seized. Fines shall be openly read.) f. vi.

Forasmuch as fines levied in our court ought and do make an end of all matters, and therefore are called fines, principally, where after waging of battail, or the great strife, in their cafes, ever they hold the laft and final place.

Sect. 2. And now by a certain time pasted, as well in the time of King Henry of famous memory, our grand father, as in our time, the parties of such fines, and their heirs, and all persons that are to have the land, of our realm of ancient time used, were admitted to adual and defeat such fines, alleging that before the fine levied, and at the levying thereof, and fine, the demandants, or plaintiffs, or their ancestors, were always feized of the lands contained in the fines, and therefore, that such a fine was unlawfully levied, were many times unjustly defeated and adualled by jurors of the country falsely and maliciously procured.

Sect. 3. We therefore intending to provide a remedy in the premises in our parliament at Westminster, have or chained that such exceptions, answers or inquisitions of the court, shall from henceforth in no wise be admis sioned contrary to such recognizances or fines. And fur ther, we will, that this statute shall as well extend to fines heretofore levied, as to them that shall be levied hereafter.

The mischief before this statute was, that when the constance de drito, &c. was made to him that had never any thing before, and the conuice granted, and ordered the same back again, at the same instant to the conuver for life, or in tail, with remainder over to one, who was always fee'd, and in possession of the land; privileges by colour that the same was in fact, or if that the same were in fact, law, permitted to avoid fines by the averment afoforad. 2 Inst. 254. Co. R. on fines 15.

So, where tenant in fee had accepted an eftate by fine from him, and had nothing for life, or in tail, so that by the law the conuice and his heirs are concluded, and excepted from the same, to the same extent of the year. The making of this statute; the said averment was received in avoidance of such fines, and for those two causes, and in affinuance of the ancient Common law of England, this statute was made. Co. R. on fines 15.

But it seems to me, by Lord Coke, that the first of the said two errors, or misprisions of the law, permitted and suffered before this statute was made, was very ab ward, and manifestly contrary in itself; for the heir of the conuice endeavored, by such averment, to avoid the particular eftate re-taken by his ancestor by the render; because, he that rendered, had nothing, but, as I think, in endeavouring to gain the fee-simple, he left not only the fee-simple, but also the eftate for life, or other particular eftate, which also was rendered; for though the render was void, as then minus jufs allowed, yet the fine for conuices de drito come see, &c. was good, and the said fine being good (for the imperfect or insufficient render cannot impeach it) and the render being void, the reconuice shall retain the land, and the heir of the reconuice is utterly barred for ever; and therefore the words of this statute are true, viz. that such averments were contrary to law, and that either eftate ye fut before the making of this statute; the said averment was received in avoidance of such fines, and for those two causes, and in affirmance of the ancient Common law of England, this statute was made. Co. R. on fines 15.

Inf. 534. says, that this happened in the reign of H. 3. in the time of the tenure of tenants in tail, and of slaves by the grandees of this realm, and that it was used by them图案 of the grandees, that parties and privies might avoid fines by such averments, which averments in the reign of Ed. 1. were continued until the making of this act.

And their heirs] This is to be understood of such heir, who claims to an ancestor of that estate, and by whom the fine was levied. Arg. 3 Rep. 89, in the case of fines.

Though this statute, that the parties to the fines and their heirs shall not have averment against fines levied, &c. viz. that they, or their ancestors were feized, &c. yet our ancestors have adjudged, that against a fine levied by my father, I shall say, that he did it, at the time of the fine and after, I myself was feied, and so avoid the fine; for as I said before in this case, I am not heir to my father; for Harre dictur ab hereditate, and I do not claim this land by inheritance. Co. R. on Fines 15. this is not intended of an heir in blood only, but of the heir of the land of which the fine is levied, and not of the land which he has otherwise as heir. See 2 Inst. 523.

This statute is intended of estates in fee-simple only, where the heir claims only by the same ancestor; but, upon an effe, the heir may be claim by the gifts, per Brooke. Br. Fines in pl. 35.

Lawfully levied] A fine may be said to be lawfully lev ied, though parties fines nihil habuerunt; for lawfully levied is, within the meaning of this act, the fine as duly levied, that is, in due form, that is, in due form, and a fine may be said to be levied in due form of law, only by way of exception. Arg. 3 Rep. 89, in the case of fines. These words lawfully levied, as to the external form of a fine, are to be taken as to a fine levied camer Edmunds Anderson (viz. the name of the Chief Justice & fines juris, where all the justice ought to be, per Windham J. and it is true to Periam and Anderson, Mich. 29 & 30 Eliz. Ls. 81, in the case of Zouch and Banfield. 34 Edw. 3. c. 16. (Intituled, Nonclaim of fines shall hereafter be no bar) Enacts, That the plea of nonclaim of fines shall be no bar hereafter. Before this statute these lawreavers having presented right ought to make claim, and their claim availed for all in remain der, or reversion. For all but had one year by the Common law after the fine levied, and this mischief was a great grievance, as it makes the transactions remains to this day, viz. that claim must be made within a year and a day after judgment. If a fine be levied without proclamation, or without so many as the law requires, then this statute extends to such a fine. A feme covert had no privilege of nonclaim, as some have said; for the had a husband, that might make claim for her. Also, they in reversin or remainder expectant upon an estate of freedom were barred by the Common law, and yet they could make no claim; for it belonged to particular te nants, and not to them; because their entry was not law ful, which was given to the principal owners of making this statute; but these cases of coverture, and of them in remainder or reversion are now holpen, and their rights and titles saved by statute 4 H. 7. 24. as by the said act appears. Co. Lit. 262. a. b.

Stat. 1 H. 3. c. 7. (Intituled, Who shall be bound by a fine levied before the time of the Common Pleas; And proclamations made there of) Enacts, That fines shall be proclaimed four times, four several terms, and at the assizes, &c. And that a fine so proclaimed shall conclude all per sons, both privy and strangers (except women covert, or such women covert, or such widows whose husbands were under age, in privity, out of the realm, or not of full age,) if they pursue not their right, title, claim, or interest, by by way of action, or lawful entry, within five years after the proclamation so made and certified as aforesaid.

Sect. 4. The right of strangers, which happens to come to them after the fine is ingrossed, is saved, so that they lawfully pursue their right or title within five years after it comes to them: And here an action against the person of the profiss is maintainable.

Sect. 6. If the parties, to whom such right or title comes, be over age, in prison, out of the land, or not of fame memory, they or their heirs have time to pursue their right or title within five years after such imperfections removed; fo also, have they in case they had right of title at the time of the fine levied.

Sect. 10. Saving to every perfon or perfon, not party nor privy to the faid fine, their exception to void the fame fine, by that, that thofe which were parties to the fine, nor any of them, nor no perfon or perfon to their title, nor any one of any of them, had nothing in the lands and tenements comprifed in the faid fine, at the time of the faid fine levied.

Sect. 11. And it is ordained by the faid authority, that every fine, that hereafter fhall be levied, in any of the King's courts, of any manors, lands, tenements, and other poftefions, after the manner, use, and form, that fines have been levied afore the making of this act, be of like force, effect and authority, as fines, fo levied, be or were afore the making of this act; this act, or any other act in this faid parliament made, or to be made notwithstanding.

This is an original, and not an explanatory statute, per Henr. 8. c. 123, page 380, in the King's personal statute-book, and familar to the English amble of this act, that fines ought to be of the greatest strength to avoid strife and debates, &c. and therefore this statute does not extend to any fines levied by cuvin. See 3 Rep. 77, b. Farmer's cafe. This statute extends only to fines, and not to nonclaim on a judgment in a writ of right. Co. Lit. 262.

And therefore if a woman be tenant in tail, having issue a fons and a daughter, and the fons (being the first issue of the tail) levies a fine, living the mother, and dies, and the survives him, this shall not bar the daughter, to whom the land entailed descends immediately from the mother; adjudged by three judges against one. If an infant defiessor be defiessed, or makes a feoffment, and the feoffee or defiessor levies a fine, and five years pafs, the first defiessor is barred of his right by the first faving in the act, because he has a present right, which he ought to pursue immediately by action or entry; but the infant still has five years from his full age to avoid the fine, because no laches is to be imputed to him from the time he arrives at his full age. 2 Bac. Abr. 532.

A. fled of Black-Arete in fee is defiessed by B. who levies a fine for a present right, which is the time of the fine, and the life of A. three years after the fine levied, A. dies, and his right descends to C. his grandson, at his heir, who at the time of the descent of such right was an infant; and the question was, whether A. and C. having suffered five years after the fine levied to pass during his and A.'s time of life, his right, and the title of C., should be barred, or should have other five years upon his arrival at full age to make his claim in; and it was adjudged, that he should not, but that he was barred, and that by virtue of the first faving in the 4 H. 7. which saves to every person and their heirs, the others to parties to the fine, such right, claim and interest as they have in lands and tenements whereof a fine is levied, so that they pursue such right by way of action or lawful entry within five years. Now A. having a right to Black-Arete at the time the fine was levied, confequently he and his heirs must be comprehend in this faving, but then they cannot take the benefit of such comprehension unless they pursuue their right by way of action or lawful entry within the said faving, which they apparently neglected to do, since neither A. nor his grandson made any claim or entry, or brought any action for recovery of their right within the five years; and therefore such right must be barred and extinguished; and C. in this case shall have no privilege of infancy, because the flatue extends that only in cases where the right first attached in the infancy, and therefore shall have five years after his infancy to make his claim; but here the right was first in A. at the time of the fine, and the flatue allows but five years to pursue the right from the time it accrues, which was not done in this case. 35 Co. 372. 372.

But if A. be tenant in tail, the remainder to B. in fee, and A. levies a fine with proclamations, and then B. dies, his heir within age, and then A. dies without issue, and five years pass without any action brought by the heir, yet he shall either, during his minority, recover the land notwithstanding the five years levied, because the right first accrued to him, B. having no right to the land by the remainder, till the estate-tail was spent, which did not happen in his life; or the heir of B. may defer making his claim till he comes of age, and then by the express words of the act he shall have five years to recover his right.

It is a rule, that an interest is not barred by a fine that is not devolved and turned to a right; for if the person who has the right continues in possession at the time of the fine levied, he is under no necessity to make his claim, and cannot be put to his action or entry, which are the only remedies the act gives to avoid fines and secure one's interest, because he being in possession, and not disturbed by the fine, has already all those remedies it can give him, and therefore it would be fruitless and unnecessary to pursue them; as if a man levies a fine of land out of which I have a rent, common, or the like, the fine and five years nonclaim shall not affect me, because I am still in possession of my rent or common, and it were in vain to endeavour to recover what I still enjoy. 2 Inf. 517. 9 Co. 106. 8. C. Rü. 60. 5 Co. 124. 1 Vent. 81. 3. 2. 1. 3.

A. leaves to B. for years, to commence after a former lease in eft; the first lease is determined, and before any entry thereinto, the fuff or parties and messuages are not thereby vacated; if B. levies a fine, and five years pass without any claim, B. is barred of this interest; for by the general clause, the fine concludes all privies and strangers, and the first faving includes the leflee in respect of the word intereft, which a term for years may properly be called. 5 Co. 124. 5 C. Rü. 535. 3. 3.

But if B. who had the future interest, had died before the determination of the first lease, and upon the expiration thereof the leflee had entered and levied a fine; and after the first five years administration was granted, the administrator should be allowed five years to make his claim; for none had a right or title of entry before, and it accrued to him by the administration after the fine, and consequently he shall be allowed five years from the accruing of his right; but in the former case the leflee had a right of entry at the time of the fine levied, and therefore could have but five years from that time; but if the first fine fine levied during the time the administrator was in possession, the second lease shall have five years after the first lease is determined, because his right then first accrued. 1. Leon. 69. 2 Leon. 157. 3 C. Rü. 61. 5 Co. 124. 3.

As if a man sells lands to the use of himself for life, and that if he should make a jointure to his wife, and a lease for life, and then after the life be committed, and then the trustee should find fault to such uses; he made a lease accordingly; and then he and his wife levied a fine; the lease is not barred, though five years should pass without entry or claim, because he having but a future interest, it was not displaced or devolved by the fine; consequently, the title descends to the heir of the first death which was not touch'd by the fine; besides, this being an intereft termini, the leflee had no right till after the death of the leflee, consequently must have five years from

A coypholder may be barred by a fine and nonclaim, because it is an interest within the statute; so executors, that have land till debts and legacies are paid, may be barred by a fine and five years nonclaim, because they likewise have an interest within the words of the statute. 4 Vent. 4. 4th. 17. 1

If there be tenant by eject, flauta-merchant or fliple, and a fine levied of those lands, and five years pafs without any claim, they are bound by the fine, because they have each of them an interest within the words and intention of the statutes, and thereby shall be bound if they do not pursue their rights within five years. 2 Inst. 517. 5 Ca. 124. 4. Plow. 374. So it is if an inquisition upon an eject be found, and then a fine be levied of the lands, and five years pafs without any claim, the interest of the tenant is barred, because after the inquisition found, the party may himself have a tenant under him, and therefore may have a ejectment or trespass, and therefore their interest may be displaced, and consequently their right barred. 1 Med. 217.

But if a man have a judgment for a debt at Common law or in Chancery, before the land be extended, aliens by fine, and five years have past, he may still have a "fres facius and an eject"; so it is of a conuife of a statute before execution fixed; for thou the judgment and execution be incumbrances that are chargeable upon the estate, yet before execution fixed, the conuife, &c., has no right to the land, for his release of all right, and the land will not hinder him from suing out execution, and consequently they cannot be barred by a fine, unless they omit to make their claim in five years after the extent, for then their right accrueth. 1 Med. 127. So if a man have a decree in Chancery to charge lands, and the tenant die after the decree, and five years pafs, yet the plaintiff may have execution, because till the decree be executed, he has no right to the land, and therefore is not obliged to make any entry or claim to prefer it till his title accrues. 1 Chan. Cas. 268.

If leffe for years be oufled, and he in reversion diffeled, and the difleffor levies a fine, this and five years nonclaim shall bar both, because the leffe for years may have his ejectment, and the leffe for his aife. 9 Ca. 105. But if leffe for life be diffeled, the reverfioner shall have five years after the death of the particular tenant, before he be no right to receive the finehold. 9 Ca. 105 b. Co. Lit. 250. Plow. 374.

If leffe for life or years makes a feoffment and levies a fine, and five years pafs without entry or claim by the reverfioner, and then the leffe dies, the reverfioner has five years to prefer his right, because he has two different rights, this and the leasehold. 8 Ca. 270; 26. 12. 5 Co. 156. But if tenant in tail die, there is no entry or claim, and then he levies a fine with proclamations, and dies without fines, and five years pafs without any entry or claim, the remainder-man is barred, because upon the death of tenant in tail without issue, his title commenced, and shall be allowed but five years from thence to prefer it. 1 Co. 156.

If there be tenant for life, the remainder to B. in tail, and the leffe to A. for a fine, B. being ouf the realm; if B. dies beyond sea, the life in C. is in tail to avoid the fine when he pleases for that clause of the 4 H. 7, which gives perrons out of the realm, iants, &c. and their heirs, five years after their impediments removed, to pursue their right, cannot be extended to this case, because B. became a tenant in tail into the realm to make his claim, and the clause limits five years to him and his heirs after his return, which now is become impossible. 2 Inst. 519.

A copholder of a dean and chapter levied a fine with proclamations, and five years past without any claim by him that was tenant in tail, in the time of his death yet, the succeeding dean was not bound by the fine; because if that were allowed, the statute of 1 & 2 Eliz. would be of little use to restrain alienations; for then by combination between the dean and tenant, all lands belonging to the chapter might be aliened. 1 Vent. 317.

If leffe for years affigns his term in trust for himself, and afterwards purches he inhabitation, and occupies the land, and then levies a fine, and five years pafs without any claim by the affignee, the term is lost, for neither the "cyfle que trufe", nor the termor, have any remedy; nor the cyfle que trufe, because by the fine he has acknowledged the land to be his by the termor, the claim; and it was unreasonable to allow him any premisions after to felon a confession to the contrary; nor the termor, because he having a right at the time of the fine levied, and omitting to make his claim within five years, is barred by the express words of the statute; so it is if the fine in fee-simple makes lease for a hundred years to attend the inhabitation in trust for himself, and still continues in possession, and makes a lease for fifty years, and levies a fine for conuance de droit to confirm it, and five years pafs without any claim by the first leffe, his interest is barred by the fine; for the second lease, and the fine developed the first term out of the lease, and consequently if there be no claim by him in five years, his interest must be barred. Co. Car. 110. 1 Lev. 270. 1 Sid. 478. 1 Vent. 8. 1 Chan. Rep. 51, 65.

But if a man purchases the fee-simple of Black Acre, of which there is a long lease in being, and the conveyance is made by fine, and the purchaser to protect the inhabitation has an assignment of the term in trust for himself, though the termor makes no claim in five years; yet the termor continues, because the statute of fines being made for the security of the purchasers, they would weaken their interest, if fines destroyed such leaves against the intention of all parties, 1 Sid. 460. 1 Vent. 82. 1 Lev. 272.

Thus if a man mortgages his land, and, as is usual, still continues in possession, and levies a fine, and five years pafs, yet the mortgagee is not barred; for though the mortgagee be in reality out of possession; yet when that is done by the consent of both parties, and the nature of the contract requires it should be so while the interest is paid, it is against the original design of the contract, that any act of the mortgageor, except the payment of the money should deprive the mortgagee of his security, and is no less than a fraud, which the law will not countenance. 1 Lev. 272; 2 Lev. 272. So if the mortgagee is in possession, and levies a fine, and the five years pafs, yet upon payment of the money he may enter. 1 Fern. 132, and there said to be a new way of foreclosing the equity of redemption; but this is in a most equivocal case.

Thus it hath been adjudged, where a man was leffe for years of one part of a manor, and tenant at will of another, rendering rent, and the leffe makes a lease for life, and then levies a fine to the tenant for life, but still continues in possession, and pays the rent; this fine shall not bar the life in the manor, but is visibly a fraud and trick in the first leffe; which he shall readily furnish to the court; and the leffe had no reason to make his claim while the rent was duly paid him. 3 Ca. 77.

It is agreed on all lands, that a fine and non-claim will bar a trust, because the cyfle que trufe has an equitable interest, and therefore ought to pursue it by proper remedies.

1. Where the purchaser has notice of the trust, tho' the truftee conveys to him by fine, and five years paß without any claim by the caufi que trufi, yet the trust is not barred, because where the purchaser has notice, he fees the title of the vendor, and therefore, if he has to convey from any other, and when he takes the land from him, shall be prefumed to hold it in the fame plight, and that the vendor could not make him a better title than he had himſelf; and when the purchaser takes it upon these terms, the trust is undisbarred, and caufi que Trufi's interest no way affeélled by the fine. If, though the truʃee should convey by fine to a pur-*chafier, who had no notice, and the-ey, and five years non-claim, the caufi que trufi should be barred, yet if the trufsee fhould convey to the truftee, the bar from the reconveyance ceafes, and the trust as to him reſumes again; for he that was originally invofflved with a trust shall never be alowed to plead his own corts act in his own justification; for that were to allow a man to plead his crime in his own defence, and exceafe of his treachery.

6. The remedies given to strangers by claim and entry for the preference of their rights, and of erroneous fines, and the manner of recovering them.
If a man has only a right of a action, and his entry be taken away, there is a claim or eʃteʃment on the land will not bar his right, or avoid the fine; because though he has a right to the land, yet fince he

But where a man enters in my name, and with out my any right, because the statute prefers my right only in cafe I purfue it by entry, &c. In another case, it makes no difference, without my direction, is not an aʃt, and confequently cannot avoid the fine; yet in this cafe, if a stranger enters without my direction, and I agree to, and approve of the entry within five years, this is sufficient to avoid the fine, because my lubquent action and preference is equivalent to a pre-

As to erroneous fines, and the manner of reverfing them, it must be obferved in the first place, that no perfon can bring a writ of error to reverse a fine, or any judgment, that is not intitled to the land, &c. of which the fine was levied; and if this be the case, the court will not turn up the present tenant, unlefs the demandant can make out a clear title, poʃeflion always carrying with it the presumption of a good title till the right owner appears; befides, where the plaintift in the writ of error can't make out a title, he can receive no damage by the fine, which the writ of error always supposes to be done, tho' it should be erroneous; and therefore it is not less than tri->fing with the courts of juʃice, to seek relief when he can't make appear he has received any injury. 1 Rol1.
Abr. 747. 150 3 Lev. 36.
But if there be several parties to an erroneous fine, they shall be liable to the party that is to enjoy the land, tho' they themselves can have nothing. 1 Rol1. Abr. 747. 4
Dyer 89.
Another rule to be obferved is, that nothing can be affigned for error that contradicts the record; for the records of the courts of juʃice, being the only greater credit, can't be quitteded but by matters of equal noternity with themselves; whereas tho' the matter affigned for error should be proved by witneʃles of the belt credit, yet the judges would not admit of it. 1 Rol1. Abr. 757.
And hence it is, that in a writ of error to reverse a fine,
the plaintift can't affign that the cause proceeded before the rule of the aditus potestatem, because that contradicts the record of the conveyance taken by the commissioners, which evidently shews that the conuor was then alive, because they took his conveyance after they were armed with the conveyance and the aditus inuenit. Dyer 89. 8,

But the plaintiff in error may say, that after the con- nuance taken, and before the certificate thereof returned, the con numerator died; because this is consistent with the re- cord, it is authorized. &c.

If a conuance upon fine be made in court, the plain- tiiff in error can't assign for error, that the conuizer died before the return of the writ of covenant, for it would directly contradict the record, because the conuance in court is never made till the writ of covenant be returned; the parties till then being not judicially before the court.

Cra. Eliz. 468.

If the conuance be taken before commissioners in pais, the plaintiff can't assign for error, that the con numerator died before the return of the writ of covenant, for the delinum made in court to Sir R. M. he being after the conuance made a knight, who returned the delinum with his name and title; and this was assigned for error, that the person that took the conuance was not the same that was empowered to take it; but it was not allowed, because it contradicts the record, which is that the delinum was directed to Sir R. M. and that Sir R. M. and virtue thereof took the conuance. Tel. 33. 1 Roll. Abr. 757. Cra. Jac. 11. 12.

If a delinum be awarded to two, and one only takes the conuance of the fine, this may be assigned for error; because where one of the commissioners only certifies the conuance, the assignment does not contradict the record; but in this cause, if the fine had afterwards been drawn up as a fine acknowledged in court, there the erroneous conuance taken upon the delinum shall not be assigned for error, because it can be taken as a fine acknowledged in court only, and no averment of a conuance or fine, or referred to the proceedings in the court, to disprove the record.

Cra. Eliz. 240. Tel. 34.

If a fine is acknowledged before commissioners in the country in the vacation, and the conuizer dies before the term; though no writ of covenant was made out, or King's service entered, the court will permit the conuizer to enter the fine, as of the term preceding. Lord Raym. 850.

If one of my name levies a fine of my land, I may avoid this fine by throwing the special matter; as to say, that there are two of my name, one of Sals, and the other of Salts, and the other's heir to be the heir of the survivor; this fine was taken in the country by virtue of a delinum patfatum to Sir Herbert Parrot, his father, and an ignorant carpenter; after which the wife died without issue, and now her heir at law prayed the relief of the court; upon examination it did appear, that Sir A. had an order of the woman, wherein the wife was willing to levy the fine, and asked her husband and her, whether the were of age or not, and both answered that she was; and now her heir moved, that this fine might be set aside, and a fine imposed upon the commissioners for the same, but the court taking a fine of mine under age; but all the court agreed they could not meddle with the fine; but if the wife had been alive, and still under age, they might bring her in by habatus corpus, and inspect her, and set aside the fine upon motion; for perhaps the hus- band would not bring or proceeding in the writ of error; and the court were of opinion, that it was the duty of commissioners to inform themselves of the parties age, and that a voluntary ignorance would not Vol. II. No. 75. execute them; and that if a commissioner to take a fine do execute it corruptly, he may be fined by the court; for in relation to the fine (which is the proper benefic of the court,) he must be a person of some age, as a competent, &c. But here it did not appear, that Sir Herbert Parrot knew that she was under age, and therefore the court would not fine him. 2 Vent. 30. 1 Mod. 246. S. C. 12 Co. 121. 1 Rel. Rep. 113. 114. S. C. 12 Co. 123. 12 Co. 124.

A husband having inveigled his wife to levy a fine of her land to him when the lay on her death-bed, pretending, as was suggested, he was to have it for his life; and a delinum was taken in the country to take the fine, and the cap- tion was taken the very day he died; and because the fine would be lost if the party be dying before the King's fivier was paid, the court directed him to be trans- ferred in the 1611, and made to bear date ten days back- ward, and all the other parts of the fine were rated like- wise, and made to correspond with it, and the King's sivier was paid, and so all appeared on the record to have been done before the death of the woman; only on a bill brought in the court of Chancery to have the fine set aside, or to have a reconveyance, it was held by the court, that though Chancery ought to relieve as much against a fine obtained by fraud or prudence, as any other kind of conveyance, yet that such relief was not by decreeing a suavati of the same as other things; for any error in the fine, or irregularity, or ill prudence in the commissioners, it was a matter properly cognizable in that court where the fine was levied, and for which that court may suavate the fine; but there being no proof of fraud or practice in this cafe, the bill was dismissed.

Husband and wife, the wife being but sixteen years of age, levied a fine, which was taken by virtue of a delinum, and they being brought into the court of C. B. by complaint of the remainder-man, a suavati was entered of the fine made by the woman, and the court directed the re- mainder-man to prosecute an information against him who took the caption of the fine. 3 Leu. 36.

The manner of reverting fines differs from the method observed in reverting other judgments; for in all other cases, where the fuit is adversary, the record itself is removed; but in case of a fine the transcript itself is removed; but for where the fuit is adversary, the record itself is transmitted, that it may be a precedent in like cases; but fines are only a more solemn acknowledgment or contract of the parties; and therefore are no memorials of the law, and need only be informed as other judgments, if the former, the contract stands as it was; if the latter, the judgments of B. R. may send for the record itself, and reverse it, or they may send a writ to the treasurer and cham- berlain to take it off the file; besides, should the record itself be removed, as is usual, it could not be ingrafted for want of a choreographer in B. R. and for this reason Lord Coke says, a fine levied in B. R. is voidable by writ of error. 1 Rel. Atr. 753. F. N. B. 10. b. 2. Bend. 51. Dyer 89. 1 Rel. Atr. 753. Co. Read. 12. 1 Salk. 337.

If a suitant brings a writ of return to reverse a fine that he has taken, this fine he may reverse for his non-age, and his non-age, after insipicition, is re- corded by the court; but before the fine reverfed he lev- ies another fine to another, this second fine shall hinder him from revering the fift; because the second having entirely barried him of any right to the land, must also de- fend himself; and where he has a new suits which would rebarre to him the land. 1 Rel. Atr. 788.

But if tenant in tail levies an erroneous fine with pro- clamation, and then levies a seconed fice, which is also erroneous, and dies; if the issue in tail brings a writ of return to reverse the second fine, he must be holden to the default, and plead in bar the second; for though there be error in the fivier, yet till that appears judicially to the court, it must be looked upon as a ficy duly levied, and consequently bar to the plaintiff, because while the second stands in force he can't have the land; but if in this case the plaintiff brings a writ of error to reverse the second fine, and the defendant pleads in bar the first fine, the plain- tiff may reply upon the first writ of error, that the fe- cond cord fine was erroneous; and upon the second writ, that the first fine was erroneous, and so be relieved against both; for here the examination of both fines comes judicially before the court, and if there appears any error, the court will set them aside, and not suffer them to stand in the way of the plaintiff's right. 1 Rol. Abr. 758.

But in a writ of error to reverse a fine, the defendant cannot plead the same fine, now endeavoured to be reversed, and five years in bar of the writ of error, no more than in a writ of error to reverse an outlawry, caveat which may be pleaded in bar of the writ of error, quia non voce excepto eius rei, causas 7ctur d. 7el. 461. 1 Vent. 352. 2 Sid. 94, 93. 2 Jon. 181. If there be a tenant for life, remainder to an infant in fee, and they two join in a fine, the infant may bring a writ of error and reverse the fine as to himself, but it shall stand good as to the tenant for life; for the divisibility of the infant shall not render the contract of the tenant for life, who was of full age, ineffectual. 1 Leon. 115, 319. 1 St. 18, 182.

If one that is sheriff of a county levies a fine, and the writ of covenant is directed to the coroner, this is no error, but the proper method to prevent partiality. Cro. Cit. 415. 1 Rol. Abr. 797.

A writ of covenant to levy a fine ran thus, Præc. A. grant to B., tenant in fee, the land, tenements, gardens, and the deminus postfatum was purportant to the writ of covenant, but the præc', which was drawn up with the concord, was de duobus texitfis pro duobus texitfis; but this was no error, because where the concord was purportant to the deminus and the writ of covenant, the præc' which concerns to be a copy of the writ of covenant on paper, is more than is needful, and therefore no material error. Cro. Jac. 77. 1 Rol. Abr. 794.

If the commissioners upon a deminus return thus, The execution of this commission appears in a certain panel to this commission annexed, whereas the usual form is in a certain schedule; yet this is no error to avoid the fine, for whatever return certifies the cause to be duly taken by the commissioners, is sufficient; and therefore if the commissioners certify the cause under their seals, without any words, it is well enough; so if the return had been made thus, certares postet in hoc amore, Cro. Jac. 77. 1 Rol. Abr. 794.

If a fine be levied, but the proclamations thence are not duly or regularly made, the writ of error shall reverse only the proclamations; for where the proclamations are not all of them, or not duly made, 'tis altogether the same as if they had never been made, and then the fine remains good at Common law to work a defeasance. Dyr. 216, 182, Hobbs' Abr. 938.

The court will not reverse a fine without a faire facies returned against the tenant; for the conuises are but nominal perons; and this was not to be done with a procl, and the law perhaps does not strictly define it, yet the course of the court does. 1 Ball. 339.

Fines may be avoided where they are obtained by fraud, covin or deceit, tho' there be no error in the procl; and that may be done either by writ of deceit or averment, setting forth the fraud or covin. Cro. Edw. 471.

Thus if a fine be levied of land in ancient demesne, the lord shall have a writ of deceit against the conuise and the tenant, and by that avoid the fine. F. N. B. 98 p. After 6.

If a fine be levied to secrete uces to deserve a purchaser, and the conuise pleads the fine in bar, the purchaser may aver the fraud in avoidance of the fine, by 27 Eliz. cap. 4. and such averment is not contrary to the record, because it admits the fine, but sets it aside for the covin and fraud in obtaining it. 3 Co. 80 a. Plow. 49 b.

So if a fine be levied upon an uterius contras, it may be avoided by averment, by 13 Eliz. cap. 8. because such fine being levied for ends the law has prohibited, the law will not encourage any evasion out of the act, nor suffer such uxurious contracts to be supported by the solemn act of the courts of justice against the intention of the act. 3 Co. 80.

A fine was reversed for the death of the conuise before the return of the writ of covenant. Lord Raym. 872.

A fine may be reversed as to part of the land; but cannot be reversed in toto as to one man, and land good as to another. Lord Raym. 179.

Nonclaim on a fine, no bar of deceit to reverse the fine. 1 Lord Raym. 179.

Fine non rapienda pro potestate plantanda, Is a writ to inhibit the execution of a writ to take fines for fair pleading. Reg. Orig. fol. 222.

Fines for alienation were fines paid to the King by his tenants in chief, for licence to allow their lands, according to the flat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 12. But see where they are taken away, 12 Car. 2. c. 24. s. 1, 6.

Fines for offences. Fine, in this sense, is amended, pecuniary punishment, or recompence for an offence committed against the King and his laws, or against the Lord of a manor: In which case a man is said fines for vocere de transferendo cum rege, &c. Reg. Jud. l. 25. 2 Cowell.

It seems that originally all punishments were corporal; but that after the use of money, when the profits of the courts arose from the money paid out of the Civil causes, and the fines and confiscations in criminal ones, the commutation of punishments was allowed of, and the corporal punishment, which was only in terrava, changed into the pecuniary, whereby they found their own advantage. This begat the distinction between the greater and the lesser offences; for in the crimina motus there was at least a fine to the King, which was levied by a capitator; but upon the lesser offences there was only an amercement, which was assessed, and for which a disfringus, or action of debt only lay. 2 Boc. So if a tithingman refuse to make a prentiment in a leet, the coinage may impose a reasonable fine on him. 8 Co. 38. b.

So if one of the jury in a leet departer without giving his verdict, he shall be fined by the coinage. 8 Co. 38. b.

If one is present when a murder is done, and does not his left to apprehend to apprehend the murderer, he shall be fined and imprisoned. 3 I. 75. 5

So if two are fighting, or others looking on, who do not endeavour to part them, if one is killed, the lookers on may be indicted and fined to the King. Nay 50.

If at a justice-leet, held within a forefl, a man makes a fine, this is not properly a rent, but be fined. 4 I. 297.

If a dead body in prison, or other place, wherein an inquete ought to be taken, be interred, or suffered to lie so long, that it purifies before the coroner hath viewed it, the gaoler or township shall be amerced. 1 Rol. 278. 2 Hawk. P. C. 38.

If any hawks may be committed, or dangerous wound given, whether with or without malice, or even by misadventure, or self-defence, in any town, or in the lanes or fields thereof, in the day-time, and the offenser escappe, the town shall be amerced; if out of a town, the hundred shall be amerced. 3 I. 75. 4 I. 103. 5 I. 252. 2 Len. 207. 2 I. 315. 5 I. 510.

Also since the flate of Winchelsea, cap. 5, ordains, that walled towns shall be kept but from fun-setting to fun-setting; if the fault happen in any such town by night or by day, and the offenser escappe, the town shall be amerced. 6 Co. 47. 7. 11 H. 6. 65.

If, by the coinage law, hue and cry is made for a trefpas in venison, the township or village within the foref, which does not follow the hue and cry, shall be amerced at the justice-leet. 4 I. 294.

If the departer ought to pay a rent to the leet, _see_ the note hereon. 3 I. 75. 53. If he not pay it, but a sum in gross, and if they do not pay it, they may be amerced, for this is due and payable at the leet. 13 H. 4. 9. 1 Rol. Abr. 212.

A man shall not be amerced in a leet for a trefpas to the lord himself, for he shall not be his own judge. 12 H. 4. 8. b. 1 Lom. 242. 6.

If a man arrerr in London, coming to the Common Pleas, to answer a writ at the suit of the fame man, because he ought to have his privilege, the plain-

So if the plaintiff, in a suit in banes, be arrested at the suit of the defendant in London, before the return of the writ in banes, this is a contempt to the court; and for this he shall be fined and imprisoned. 11 H. 6. 22. 1 Rol. Abr. 218. 5. C. Where one under countenance of law is guilty of a double vexation; as if he be in b. and pending this, uses in London for the fame cause, he shall be fined. 8 Co. 60. a. Galf. 30. pl. 5.

2. In what actions or proceedings there ought to be a fine or an amercement.

It seems, that regularly there was a fine or amercement in all actions; for if the plaintiff or defendant did not prevail, it was thought reasonable that he should be paned a fine or amercement. Hence, if in either of the actions or proceedings, there is judgment against him, _see_ the fines under misericordia, &c. 8 Co. 39. F. N. B. 75.

Hence when the plaintiff take out a writ, the sheriff, before the return of it, is obliged to take pledges of prouction, which, when fines and amercements were considered liable, the plaintiff shall not be amerced, bearable for those amercements; but being now so very inconsiderable, that they are never levied, they are only formal pledges entered, _see_ John Doe and Richard Roe. 1 Sid. 227. See tit. 351.

In all actions, where the judgment is against the defendant, it was to be entered with a _missicordia_, or a _capitation_; and herein the difference is, that if it be an action of debt, or founded on a contract, the entry is _ide in misericordia_, without assailing any sum in certain; which was afterwards charged by the coroners in the proper county; but if it were in an action of trefpas, the court fine the fine, and levied it by a _capitation_. 8 Co. 60. 1 Rol. Abr. 212, 219. 3. Er. £. 344. 4. J. 255.

And therefore in all actions quare vi et armis, as refcorr, trefpas, &c. the defendant shall be fined. 8 Co. 59. 1 Rol. Abr. 212.

So in a writ of reparation in the Common Pleas, if judgment be given against the defendant, he shall be fined and imprisoned; but in a writ of reparation in the county-court, if the defendant be convicted, he shall be amerced. 6 Co. 61. a. 60. 11 Co. 43. F. N. B. 79. 33. 219. 6 Co. 60. 1 Rol. Abr. 212. 219. 3. Er. £. 344. 4. J. 255.

In a real action, so in an attaint against him who recovered in the first action, if the plaintiff recovers, the defendant shall be amerced. 1 Rol. Abr. 212.

If a man recovers in an affile, and dies, and his wife is endowed, in an attaint against the wife, if he recovers, the wife shall be amerced. 40 Aff. 21. 1 Rol. Abr. 212.

In an action upon the statute of Marlbebridge, for driving a dillshep into another county; the defendant shall be ransomed, (which admits that he shall be fined.) 30 Aff. 39. 1 Rol. Abr. 212.

In an affile of rent, if the tenant be found guilty of a dillshep with force, because of a refuse done by him without vi et armis, he shall be fined, tho' this be not within the statute. 33 H. 6. 206. 1 Rol. Abr. 219. 219.

In all judicial writs, if the plaintiff be barred, nonsuit, or his right is not maintained, the plaintiff shall be amerced, because the process is founded upon a record. 8 Co. 61. a.

But as fines and amercements in those actions, by not being levied, became matter of form, it was thought hard, that for any irregularity herein, a judgment should be arrested; and therefore by the 16 & 17 Car. 3. cap. 8. it is enacted, 43 That no judgment after verdict, confusion by covvet armis, or relict verifiication, shall be reverted for want of a misericordia, or a capiatur, or because one is put for the other.

And by the 5 & 6. 3d. cap. 12. reciting, that divers faults and actions of the plural, ejaculations, affluents and false impromptu, are brought by party against party in the respective courts of law at Westminster; and upon judgments entered against the defendant or defendants, in suits or actions, the respective courts forefind or ex officio issue out process against the crown, and a fine to the crown, for a breach of the peace thereby committed, which is not acknowledged, but is usually compounded for a small sum of money, by some officer in each of the said courts, but never extorted into the Exchequer; which officers, or some of them, do very oftentimes when the amount of the fine is small, but the damage; and therefore it is enacted, "That no writ or writs, commonly called Capias pro fine, in any of the said suits or actions, in any of the said courts, shall be found out, or prosecuted against any of the said defendant or defendants; or any further process thereupon, but the same fines, and all that that clause and shall hereby be remitted and discharged for ever; yet nevertheless the plaintiff or plaintiffs, in every such action, shall (upon finding judgment therein, over and above the usual fees for finding thereof) pay to the proper officer, who signeth the same, the sum of five shillings and fourpence, instead of the said fine, and all the fees due for or concerning the said fine, to be distributed in such manner as fines and fees of this kind have usually been, and not otherwise; which said officer and officers shall make an increase to the plaintiff or plaintiffs of the like amount to such fines, to be taxed against the said defendant or defendants." But though this statute takes away the capiatur fine, yet it is said to be the practice of the county of Common Pleas, to make a special entry of the judgment in this manner, "nihil de fine quia remittitur per statutum, in the cause the fine was remitted, and in which case the entry was nihil de fine quia paterndatum." 1 Salk. 54. Comb. 387.

But it was ruled on debate in the King's Bench, that this statute having taken away the fine, there was no judgment of capiatur to be entered against the defendant, nor any thing in lieu thereof, but that the clause was to tally be left to be out of the judgment, for that it was not like the case of a pardon, which does not alter the law, but only excuses the party. Carth. 390. Linley v. Sir Talbot Clerk. 1 Salk. 54. Comb. 387. S. C.

And as in the tenant comes in the first day, and renders the land, he shall not be amerced. Co. Lit. 126. 5 Co. Eliz. 65. Nisi prius. 564. 8 Co. 61.

So in statute for a box of charters by the heir, upon the delivery of his father; if the defendant comes the first day, and says, that he hath been always ready to tend the land, and yet is, if the plaintiff does not traverse this, the defendant shall not be amerced. 38 Ed. 3. 25. 1 Roll. 212.

In a case in winn, if the tenant vouches, and the vouchee comes the first day of the summons and tenders, yet he shall be amerced; for when the tender is not at the first day of the original, an amercement is due to the King. 14 Ed. 3. 16. 1 Roll. 212.

In an account, if the defendant comes the first day, and tenders the money, and the plaintiff accepts it, none of them shall be amerced. 2 R. 2. 45. 1 Roll. 212.

So in an account, as receiver of 10 l. if the defendant pleads Never his receiver, and this found against him, by which he is adjudged to account; and after he comes and tenders the 10 l. and makes oath, that after the time that the money was delivered to him, he could not find anywhere, in the falsification of the said fine, and all that shall hereby be remitted and discharged for ever, neither he nor the plaintiff shall be amerced. 40 Ed. 3. 40. 1 Roll. 212.

In dowry, if the tenant, after he is effoned, renders dower, and avers, that he hath always been ready, &c. the tenant shall not be amerced. 22 Ed. 4. 2. 1 Roll. 212.

In a writ of dower, if the tenant vouches the heir of the baron, and the vouchee demands the heir; and upon this the vouchee enters into warranty, as he who has nothing by default of the tenant, if the tenant says, that he hath slights by deponent; upon which judgment is given, and the defendant shall recover against the tenant, &c. the vouchee shall be in misericordia, tho' he doth counter-pled the warranty. 16 Ed. 3. 14. 1 Roll. 212. 23. If in an action of debt the defendant comes the first day, and appears by attorney, and makes defence, &c. &c. and the attorney pleads non sum inventus, the defendant shall be amerced; for he ought to have acknowledged the action the first day, and not to have made any defence. 1 Roll. 212.

So if in debt the defendant comes the first day, and imputes till the next term, and then judgment is given upon non sum inventus, the defendant shall be amerced. 1 Roll. 213.

If the plaintiff be nonsuit, or if a writ abates by the act of the plaintiff or defendant, or for matter of form, the plaintiff, or defendant shall be amerced. Co. Lit. 127. 5 Co. 61. 1 Roll. 219.

In an action brought by two, if the writ abates by the death of one of them, the other shall not be amerced, because it is by the act of God, without the default of the party. Co. Lit. 127. 5 Co. 61. 1 Roll. 213.

So if two join in a personal action, and one is nonsuit, which in law is the nonsuit of the other, yet the other shall not be amerced, because this is not his fault. 47. 5 Co. 61.

If one demandant or plaintiff be nonsuit in such action, wherein summons and severance lies, and the other proceeds therein, he that is nonsuit shall not be amerced. 8 Co. 61. a.

It seems to be a general rule, that if part is found for the defendant, and the plaintiff and party against him, he shall be amerced. 8 Co. 61. a.

As if in action of covenant, for several covenants broke, if the plaintiff be barred for one, he shall be amerced for this, though he recovers for the other. 1 Roll. 216. 1 Roll. Rep. 411. S. C.

So in an action, upon the case, upon a promise to do two things, &c. to pay so much for certain land sold, and if the vendees sells it again for more than he is to, to pay so much more; and the defendant pleads in bar a release, which is adjudged no bar for part (sollicitus) and a bar for the first sum; he shall be in misericordia for this sum of which he is barred, though it be an entire promise; and he could not have an action but upon being within the term for he might have acknowledged himself satisfied of that which he had released. 14 Ed. 3. 16. 1 Roll. 411.

If the plaintiff declares, that he was possed of an hoy, floating at anchor in the river Thames, loaded with goods, and that the defendant falsified, being master of a ship running in the river, to negligently governed his said thou, that he in pradip's navigation of the plaintiff violenter rucket, & illum fretet & submersit, and upon Not guilty pleaded the jury find, that quad neglientem gubernationem navis prael. defend. per quod in navigaum quarenti violenter rucket, & illum fretet & submersiti, the defendant is guilty, & quad refedium passimfert, that he is Not guilty; the plaintiff shall not be amerced, there is no refedium, and the first part of the verdict comprehends all the injury complained of in the declaration. Hard. 350.

In an action of wains in dominius & gardines, if upon the writ of the defendant be found guilty in dominius, and Not guilty in gardines, the plaintiff shall be in misericordia for the gardening. 1 Ed. 3. 2. Co. 453. S. C.

In trepass for the battery of his servant, and the taking of his timber, if the defendant be found guilty of the taking of the timber, and not guilty of the battery of the servant, the plaintiff shall be amerced for this. 26
If a femme covert gives a groundless appeal of the death of her husband, known by her to be alive, the suit shall be fined.

3d S. J. 275.

In an affize against baron and feme, if the feme be received upon the default of the baron, and pleads in bar, and the baron as an outlaw, and the defendant takes issue upon the bar, and this is found for the defendant, the tenant shall not be imprisoned, for this confession of an outlaw, because the issue is a femme covert.

If a baron of parliament be found a difforder with force in an affize, the judgment against him shall be good capiator. 1 Roll. Abr. 220.

If in debt upon an obligation against a baron of parliament, if the defendant pleads non est factum, and the issue is found against him, the judgment against him shall be good capiatur. 1 Roll. Abr. 220. 21

As to the cases where a fine ought to be awarded, and not an amercement, we have already taken notice of the difference made between offences; and that for the delicta majora, such as breaches of the peace, contempts, or disturbances committed in facie curiae, the court may fine and imprison; but that in real actions or actions of debt, the defendant is only to be amerced. 8 Co. 39.

As in an action upon the statute of Marlebridge for driving a differtis out of the county, the defendant being found guilty shall be imprisoned. 30 Aff. 38. 1 Rull. Abr. 223.

So in an action of debt upon the statute of 1 & 2 Ph. & Ma. of differtis, upon which the defendant shall forfeit to the party grievous, for driving the differtis out of the hundred & treble damages; if the defendant be found guilty, the judgment shall be qual caputpr. 1 Rull. Abr. 223.

In an action of debt upon the statute of usury, for treble the sum lent, for taking more than 8 l. per cent. if the defendant be found guilty, the judgment shall be qual caputpr, because he took it contrary to the provision of the statute. 1 Rull. Abr. 223.

But if the defendant be found guilty, the judgment shall be qual fit in misericordia, and not qual caputpr: because this is but a debt judgment in recopmeence of this; and the usuriar is the usual course. 2 Rull. Abr. 223. 1 Sid. 233.

So in an action for a robbery founded upon the statute of Winchefer, if the defendants are found guilty, the judgment shall be qual fit in misericordia; because this action is not founded upon any male-faceness, but upon a non-faceness only. Cry. 3050.

In an action for a fals affiant and battery; if the battery was done before a general pardon, by which the fine is pardoned, yet the judgment shall be entered qual caputpr; for the court need not take conunence thereof without demand. Cry. Car. 37.

4. Of mitigating or aggravating fines of moderating or offering amencements; and of the manner of recovering fines or amencements.

Where a person is convicted of a criminal offence, and for which he ought to be fined, the measure thereof is left to the discretion of the judges, who proportioneth forthe fine so as to make it adequate to the offence, from the consideration of the baenefs and enormity, and dangerous tendency of it, the malice, deliberation and wilfulness, with which it was committed, the age, quality, and degree of the offenders, Cry. 2 Hand. P.C. 445.

If a proctor accepts costs froin the defendant, he cannot, by the rules of the court, aggravate his fine, because in such cases, having no right to demand costs, if he take them at all, he must take them by way of satisfactor, of the wrong a, which is unreasonable for him to harras the defendant. 1 Salt. 55.

But as to those costs given by 5 & 6 W. 3. M. on the removing a caufe by certiorari, the proctor is not restrained from aggravating the fine to be fet on the defendant, because he has a right to such costs by the express words of the statute. 2 Hand. P.C. 292. cont. 1 Salt. 55.

A fine is under the power of the court during the term in which it is set, and may be mitigated as shall be thought proper; but after the term it admits of no alteration. Co. Litt. 260, Cry. Car. 251. Report 376.

If a person is indicted and found guilty of a great offence, and a writ goes to the sheriff to abate it; if the party refuses to abate it at his own charge, the court will raise the fine accordingly; feuit, if the offence may be easily removed, as pulling down a wall, &c. Comb. 10.

Upon a motion to a punisher, that fine for a confession of the indictment, which was for an assault; Holt Ch. J. took a difference, where a man confesses an indictment, and where he is found guilty, in the first case, a man may produce affidavits to prove for assault upon the proctor, in mitigation of the fine; otherwise the defendant is found guilty; for the entry upon a confession is only not suing containere cum Domino Regis, & petit se in gratiam curiae. 1 Salt. 55.

If an excessive fine is imposed at the seffions, it may be mitigated at the King's Bench. 1 Feli. 336.

The court may impose an excessive fine, but cannot award any corporal punishment against the defendant until he be actually present in court. 1 Salt. 56, 400, Comb. 36, 77.

Before the statutes of Magna Charta, and Wifhum. 1. cap. 6. the lords used to fet such excessive and grievous amencements on the offenders, that the continuance of such amencements they used to feize the whole pro-fit of the tenement which they had granted; To prevent this oppression, and to take away all fines and amencements at the will and pleasure of the lord and his ftrawed, and likewise all excessive fines and amencements, if they were never to certain, the statutes appnuit, that every amencement should be affed; so that the court or homar do award an amencement, yet it is to be affed by the affearos, who are so called, because they affear or bring in the quantity of the amencement. 8 Co. 39. 1 Inf. 27.

These amencements are to be with a falsus concomenentia, and were always held too grievous and excessive, if they deprived the offender of the means of his livelihood; as if he were a fockman, and the amencement extended to take away the beale of his plough; if he were a military man, and it extended to take away his arms; if he was a merchant, and it extended to take away his merchandise, if he were a vilein, if it took away his cart or wainage; for the words of Magna Charta are, A freeman shall not be amerced for a small fault; and for a great fault, after the greatest thereof, seasoning to him his comenentium; and any other that was liable to the same, and every other that was liable to the same, should be likewise amerced, saving his wainage, if he fell into our mercy, 2 Inf. 27, 28. 8 Co. 39.

But a fine may be fet without amercement, for the statute of Magna Charta does not extend to such cafes, where a court of rofface may imprisone, and 200 a fine is fet by way of mercy, as a ranom and purgation of the offence; for the statute was defigned in mercy to the offenders, and not to hinder them from mercy, and fo did not extend to offences that might be punished by imprison. 8 Co. 39. 1 Inf. 27, 28. 11 Co. 43. Kelv. 65. 11 Cry. 581. Dall. Sheriff 400.

If at a court-baron, according to the custom there used, a by-law is made, and the penalty of 20l. laid upon every offender, and at another court a tenant is presented for a breach thereof, by which the said penalty is forfeited;
Forfeited; this cannot be affected. Mor. 75. pl. 205. 3 Leom. 7, 8. Plut. 159. S. C. adjudged.

On the pretermission of a nuisance in a turn or let, the failure or willow may either amerce the party, and also order him to remove it by such a day, under a certain payment, or order him to remove it under such a pain, without amercing him at all; the party having notice of such order shall forfeit the pain, on a pretermission at another court, that he hath not removed the nuisance, without any farther proceeding; and every pain so forfeited may be recovered in like manner as a fine or amercement by diffret, or action of debt; neither shall it be affected to lef surfhan at first sect. 1 Leom. 203. Rich. 51, 52. 1 Rel. Abr. 46. Cra. 382. 2 Rel. Abr. 136. 1 Rel. Rep. 201. Allen. 3 Leom. 7, 8. 5 Med. 130. 1 Salk. 175. The award of the amercement is the act of the court, but the taxing or reducing it to a certainty must be done by certain officers called afferors, chosen and sworn for that purpose; and therefore if an amercement be imposed in a court-leet, and asheriff by the jury, and not by sworn afferors for that purpose, it is a void amerce- ment, and the heir of the court cannot maintain his action for it. 8 Cas. 40. b. 3 Leom. 67.

Although by the express words of Magna Charta, Comites & baronos non amerciement nisi per partes, &c. yet long usage hath prevailed against it, for the amercement of the nobility is reduced to a certainty, viz. a Duke 10, a Earl 20, a Barony 30, &c. 2 Inf. 26. 6 Co. 54. 8 Cas. 40. a. S. C. In an affife, if the plaintiff does not appear, nor any for him, yet three of the affife may be sworn to affect the amercement, and shall do it. 28 Af. 26. 1 Rel. Abr. 24. In a breach, if the defendant, as bailiff, &c. juries, for that the plaintiff was pretended, &c. and sets forth, that the amercement was affected by two afferors, he ought to have their names. Keh. 66.

By the Common law, the King or Lord may, at their election, derrain, for having a diction of debt for a fine or amercement. Cra. 581. Sawill. 93. 2 Rob. 151. Salk. 533, 606. 2 H. 4, 24. b. 10 H. 6, 7. Reyn. 68.

But every averory or declaration of this kind ought expressely to shew, that the offence was committed within the jurisdiction of the court, which, if it were not, all the proceedings were coram non judice, and a court shall not be presumed to have a jurisdiction where it doth not appear to have one. Hob. 139. Rob. 151. Salk. 533. Ca. Ent. 572.

Also it is advisable to alledge, that the offence was committed within the jurisdiction, as well as pretended, and to shew the names of the afferors in setting forth a pre- ferment or afferment, and also to shew that proper notice was given of holding the court. But for this, vide Hawk. P. C. 59, 60.

Of common right, a diffret is incident to every fine and amercement, in a turn or let for offences of right within the jurisdiction thereof; but if the offence were only the neglect of a duty created by custom, and of a private nature, it is clear, that there must be a custome to warrant a diffret, and perhaps such custome is also necessary, though the duty be of a publick nature. 2 Hawk. P. C. 59, 60.

Also the afferor or lord may for such fines or amerce- ments derrain the goods of the offender, even in the highway, or in land not holden of the lord, unless such land be in the possession of the crown. 1 Rel. Ab. 670. 2 Rob. 151. Salk. 533.

But such fines and amercements being for a personal offence, no stranger's beasts can lawfully be derrained for them, tho' they have been levant and couchant upon the lands of the offender. Owen. 146. Noy. 20.

If such court is in the King's hands, the diffrets may be derrained; but if it were kept for a reasonable time, as the space of sixteen days: and it seems the better opinion, that where any such court is in the hands of a common person, if the goods were derrained for an offence of a publick nature, they may be

I think it intends free liberty to move and repair the mill-dam, and to carry away the soil, &c. Cowell, edit. 1727. First-fruits and tithes. First-fruits (Anames, primi- vitiae) are the profits of every spiritual living for one year, given in the first time that the place was free firmage, but that is still a hard word. I think it intends free liberty to move and repair the mill-dam, and to carry away the soil, &c. Cowell, edit. 1727. First-fruits (Anames, primi- vitiae) were the value of every spiritual living by the year; which the pope, and from time to time the pope, took and retained, the pope. Cowell, edit. 1727. But what Pope first imposed first-fruits historians do not agree. 4 G. 190. In the 34 Ed. 1. at a parliament held at Carlisle, great complaints were made at the intollerable oppression of churches and monasteries by William Self, the Pope (Mystia) and the legate of the pope, and principally concerning first-fruits; at which parliament the King, by the asent of his barons, denied the payment of first-fruits of spiritual promotions within England, which were founded by his progenitors, and the nobles, and others of the realm, for the service of God, armes, and hospitality. And to this effect he wrote to the pope; and thereupon the pope relinquished his demand of first-fruits of abbey, in which parliament the first-fruits for two years were granted to the King. 12 G. 45. In the 40 Ed. 3. at the same parliament, amongst other grievances from the counsels of Rome, that the pope's collector that year (a thing never before done) had taken the first-fruits of every benefice where he had made provision or celeration—whereas he was used to take first-fruits only of benefices vacant in the court of Rome. Dege p. 2. e. 15. In truth, this tribute or revenue of first-fruits was gradually, by little and little, imposed by the bishop of Rome, on such vacant benefices as himself conferred and bestowed; and this was so often complained of as a very great grievance, that the king, in the year 1535, after the obtaining the Fifth, who was made pope in the year 1325, forbid the receiving thereof, and ordered the same to be laid

Fishing, right of, and property of fish. It has been held, that where the lord of the manor hath the fish on both sides the river, 'tis a good evidence that he hath the right of fishing, and it puts the proof upon him who claims liberty piscarium; but where a river ebb and flows, and is an arm of the sea, there 'tis common to all, and he who claims a privilege to himself must prove it; for aught thought for brought there, the defendant may justify that the place where is Braschmum maris, in quo uniusjusque jubilus domini regis habet & habere debet libaram piscaram: in the Severn, the soil belongs to the owners of the land on each side; and the pool of the river Thames, is in the King, & the butting is common to all. But if the owner of the soil of a private river, hath separatis piscariis; and he that hath libera piscaria, hath a property in the fish, and may bring a pelluciad action for them; but communis piscaria is like the case of all other commons. 2 Salk. 527.

Flemencrysthe, (Rectius femencristhe, L. Ine, c. 70, cap. 5; William of Malmesbury, hist. H. i. c. 10, 12.) Signifying the receiving or relieving a fugitive, or outlaw, Cowell, edit. 1727.

Flemencrete and Flemencrysthe, Are said to be the clants of fugitives, Mith. 10 Hen. 4. Herff. 59. Cervantes, hist. leg. 59. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Flemencristhe, Signifies the liberty to change the cast or amerciaments of your man, a fugitive, Raffael's Expotio of Words. Flota writes it two different ways, viz. Fimencrysthe and flemencrysthe, and interprets it, Habere casta fugitivorum, lib. 1. cap. 47. See Flem and Flemencristhe.

Flata, A flota, a fleete, or place where the tide or flood comes up, Cowell, edit. 1727.

Flogfrotch. A payment or muclc exacted from him who deducted the money: From the Saxon, flact, fugger, and flog is a fugger, page 69, Cowell, edit. 1727.

Flog. See Flogtreute.

Flutitchtrete, alias flititchtrete, (from the Saxon, fist, contention or strife.) Significat multum de contentione, rixas & jurgia impotiss, & cui habe a prince concordant, poest in curia fuerit egnor de naufragis transfugisque; ubi etiam indigentiam in curia regis, a distinguis suis exigeri et fletimo reitteri. Thus Spelman. Fisitute, i. e. Quod prior tenet placit in curia sua de contentionibus & conviciss hominum fuerum, & habere inde amerciamet. Ex Reg. Prurat. de Coleford.

Floydwath, The mark which the sea, at flowing water and high tide, makes on the shore. Accordant a ceux ordonnances les marins ont use leur autorite en les havres avant dis temps, cfibis per chafe raitz omile le mer & far le mer, non entre le Rodmark & low water mark. Anderton's Report, f. 189. Conflable's cat.

Flogets, A kind of cloth so called, brought from Florence hithe; some was called Aratas, Darnise, Combrick, Callowes, from the places where it was made. It is mentioned in flat. 1 Ric. c. 3. s. 8.

Flouget, A current piece of English gold. By in- ducement of the Mint 11 Ed. 3, every pound weight of ed standard gold was to be coined into fifty Florentes to be current at six flollings apiece, which all made in tole fifteen pounds, or into a proportionable number of half Florentes, or quarter Florentes.

Flogetas, A swimming at the top, which we properly called floating, are such things as swim on the top of the sea, or other great rivers; the word is used sometimes in the comminations of water bailiffs.

Flotham, Is when a ship is funk, or otherwise peri- fithed, and the goods float on the sea. 5 Rep. 106. a. b. Flotham, ifjevum, jefiam, and other words are mentioned together; jefam is when a ship is in danger of being sunk, and to lighten the ship the goods are cast into the sea, and the ship notwithstanding perisheth; and legam is when the goods are cast into the sea are so heavy that they sink to the bottom, and therefore the mariners tie to them a buoy, or one of their other things with which they will fill in that they may find them again. 5 Rep. 106. b.

The King shall have fistas, jefiam, and jagen, when the ship is lost, and the owners of the goods are known, but not otherwise. F. N. B. 122. Where the proprietors of the goods may be known, they have a year and a day to claim fistas, jefiam, &c., by virtue of this word. See Three.

Foragum. The farm with houselets or fire-botes.

Fodder, or Father of lead, A weight of lead containing eight pigs, every pig twenty-three shillings and a half. In the book of rates a fodder of lead is said to be two thousand seven hundred and two shillings and over; and the ships, it is 22 hundred and a half; among the plumbers at London it is 19 hundred and a half. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Fodder, (Sax. fod, i.e. alimentum,) Any kind of meat for horses or other cattle; in some places hay and straw mingled together is accounted fodder. See Flog. But among the farmers, it is understood, that the Prince hath, to be provided of corn, and other meat for his horses, by his subjects, in his wars or other expeditions. Heimann de verbe Frudal. See Father.

Foddercium, Provision, or fodder, or forage, to be paid by custom to the King's parvores. — Johannes abbatis Eadmanici & D. Stephanius, prior & centum, floutant — quod ex culttibus servitum convenerant, exceptus redditi- rior qui dicitur fidum & cebertorium, &c. habet admini- num ad hundredes. De funda jut quod regulam. Fegas, I lagrese, Fig. or fig; rank grass not eaten in bigg. Leg. Forflar, Scot. sect. cap. 15.

Folatland, Was Terra Vulgi, The land of the vulgar people, who had no estate under law, but held the fame under such rents and services as were accustomed or agreed, at the will of the king and the Shire, and it was therefore not put in writing, but accounted a regalium ruficum & ignobilis. See Spelman of Feals, cap. 5.

Folment, or Folmount. Saxon folmentum, that is, convinentus populi, compounded of folk, populus, and geme- nation, commune, signifies (as Lamard hath in his Ex- pliation of Saxon) the service, or revenue of the counties or courts; one now called the county courts, the other The forstiff, or forst. This word is still in use in the city of London, and demotes Celebrin ex via civitatum conventum. Stow's Survey of London. But Ammonwood lay in his Forstiff- lawes, folde is the court holden in London, wherein all the folk and people of the city did complain of the mayor and aldermen, for misgovernment within the city. Smoker in his Saxon Dictionary says, It is a general assembly of the people, to consider and order matters of the common- wealth. Omne preces regnii & militae & liber homines witterst.

Spaldam took further instance in another parliament or convention of the bishops, Thores, aldermen and freemen, upon every May-day yearly; where the laymen were sworn to defend one another, and where they swore fealty to the King, and to preserve the laws of the kingdom, and then to consult of common safety, peace and war, and publick weal. But Dr. Bracton, where the laws of our Saxon kings, infers that the folcem was an inferior court, before the King's reeve, or steward; held rather every month to do full-right, or to compose smaller squabbles, from whence appeal should lie to the superior courts of justice. See Dr. Bradly's Glossary, p. 48. When this great assembly is made in a city, it may be called a burchamet, when in the county a burchancet. Aurelii Ms. cap. 22. Force (Fio.) In our common law, is most usuallly applied in an ill part, signifying unlawful violence. Wolf thus defines it, Symb. part 2. tit. Indictments, sect. 65. Force is an offence by which violence is used to pernicious or injurious end, where also it may be, whether the force be simple or compound; simple force is that which is so committed, that it hath no other crime adjoined to it; as if one by force do enter into another man's possession, without doing any other unlawful act; A mixt or compound force is that when,Communis populorum & gentium communitis, quia fuerit damnum universitas, & sic fuerit debeat impediere, &c. &c. &c. if of itself only is criminal: As if any by force do enter into another man's possession, and kill a man, or ravish a woman there, &c. he further divideth it into true force, even where he has a right, though not for peaceably taining a poiffession by force, especially if he has held it for three years in quiet. R. N. B. 249. Br. tit. Force, 5. 11. 29.

But the 21 Eliz. cap. 11. The provis in the above fla-ture is farther enforced and explained, by which it is declared and enacted, "That no refitution upon any indictment of forcible entry, or holding with force, be made to any perfon, if the perfon so indicted hath had the benefic © of the land in quiet poiffession for the space of three whole years together, next before the day of such indictment so found, and his effuate therein not ended, which the party indicted may allege for flay of reftitu-tion; and reftitution to flay till that be tried, if the other party desire the refpite, which the party allegation to be tried against the fame perfon so indicted, is to pay the coats and damages to the other party, as shall be aflidified by the judges or juftices before whom the fame shall be tried; the fame coats and damages to be recovered and levied, as is usual for coats and damages contained in judgements upon other actions."

And by the 21 Jac. 1. cap. 15. it is enacted, "That such judges, juftices or juftice of the peace, as by rea-on of any act or acts of parliament then in force, were authorized and enabled upon inquiry, to give reftitution of poiffession unto tenants, of any effuate of freehold of the tenant, and his servants, which tenant, or his enemies, wast entered upon with force, or from them with-holden by force, shall by reason of that act have the like and the fame authority and ability from thenceforth (upon indictment of such forcible entries, or forcible with-holding before them duly found,) to give like reftitution of poiffession unto tenants, tenants by copy of court toll, guardians by knight-serve, tenants by elegy, flatute merchant and flaple, of lands or tenements by them so holden, which shall be entered upon by force, or holden by them from force." A forcible entry must regularly be with a strong hand, with unlawful weapons, or with menace of life or limb.

If a man enters peaceably into a houfe, but turns the party out of poiffession by force, or by threats frights him out of poiffession, this is a forcible entry. Dall.

But threatening to feil his goods, or defraye his cattle, if he will not quit his poiffession, will not make him forcible. Br. tit.
Dursty, 2, 16. 1 Hyl. 252.

If a houfe be bolted, it is a forcible entry to break it open, but it is not fo to draw a latch, and enter into the houfe;
and if a man, whose entry is lawful, shall intice the other out of the houfe, and enter, the door being open, or only latched, his entry is justifiable. 2 Rel. Rep. 2. 2 Hyl. 235. Cram. 70. a. It is said in Nay 135, that there can be no entering if the door be latched but 1 Hawk. P. C. 145. says, that such an incon siderable circumstance as this, which commonly passes between neighbour and neighbours, will never bring a man with in the meaning of these flatutes; and it hath been holden, that an entry into a houfe through a window, or by opening a door with a key, is not forcible. Lamb.
143. 1 Hawk. P. C. 145. 2 Rel. Rep. 2.

If one find a man out of his houfe, and forcibly withhold him from returning to it, and fend perfons to take peaceable poiffession thereof in the parties abfence, this, by some opinions, says Hawkings, is no forcible entry, insofar as he did not violence to the houfe, but only to the person. 1 Hyl. 252. But he hath been held by a contrary opinion, for though the force be not actually done upon the land, nor in the very act of entry, yet fince it is used with an immediate intent to make such entry, and the manner of doing it only prevents the oppofition, it can be forcible, even without force, which whether it be upon or off the land feems equally within the flatuie.
1 Hawk. P. C. 145.

If a man enters to deftrain for rent in arrear with force, this is a forcible entry; because though he do donot claim the land itself, yet he claims a right and title out of it, which by thofe flatutes he is forbid to exert by restitution awarded.

It is therefore a general rule, that an indictment cannot warrant a restitution, unless it find that the entry was forcible, but yet such forcib] is sufficiently flown by a necessary implication.

An indictment on the S H. 6. for entering and forcibly expelling my farmer, and disturbing him, is good, without flushing what estate he had; for the forcible dethance being the main point of the indictment, it is sufficient to set forth it in substance.

But in this case the want of flushing that the farmer was oufled, would have been an incursual fault. Ynto 103.

Also an indictment on 21 Jas. 1. cap. 15. must shew, that the party injured was defticed of such an estate as will bring him within that fiction before it is not sufficient for it to shew, that he was possifed, or that he was possessed of a certain term, without adding, for years; for in the first case it may be intended, that he was tenant at will, and in the second, that he was possessed for term of life; in neither of which cases he is within the statute; but it is said to be sufficient, to set a posッション within the statute in the reciting part of an indictment as thus, good cum T. S. was posfessed for a certain term of years, &c. 1 Vent. 306. 1 Sid. 102. 1 Abr. 73. 2 Reb. 709. Salk. 260.

A repugnancy in setting forth the offence in an indictment on these statutes is an incursual fault; as where it is alleged, that the defendants posщик in, & the j. aduec & bidem of & arms deficient, or that the party injured therefor; for it cannot be intended, that the words as of the indictment, to have had the freehold, for it implies that he always continued in possession; and if it is, it is impossible he could be defticed at all; but some fay, that this may be reconciled, by intend ing that he re-entered after the deftice, and before the indictment; but it seems clear, that if the words aduec extrarett be added, such a repugnancy cannot be helped by any intend ment, and that no restitution can be awarded on such indictment, whether those words be added or not, because the party groved appears by the indictment to have had the freehold at the time it was found. Exp. 205. Reyn. 67. 1 Req. 523, 428, 435, 472. Anon. 50. 1 Vent. 108. 2 Reb. Rep. 311. Salk. 272. 2 Reb. 121. 1 Sid. 102.

A conviction on 15 R. 2. of a forcible detainer on view, cannot be good, unless it shew, that the defendant was also guilty of a forcible entry; for it seems plain from the expres words of that statute, that the justices have no jurisdiction by it over a forcible detainer, where there has not been a forcible entry; but it seems that such forcible entry is sufficiently set forth in the indictment, where the party injured is described in the indictment; and it seems a reasonable opinion, that an indictment on 8 H. 6. setting forth an entry and forcible detainer is good, without flushing whether the entry was forcible or peaceable; for the words of the statute are, where any doth make forcible entry in lands, &c. or them hold forcibly, but it must set forth an entry; for otherwise it appears not, but that the party hath been always in possession, in which case he may lawfully detain it by force. 2 Reb. Abo. 80. pl. 10. Palm. 156, 195, 197.

The time and place of the deftice are sufficiently set forth in an indictment alleging, that the defendant tall die intravit, &c. ifpum A. B. many forts deficient, without adding the words aduec & bidem; for the entry was forcible, and deftice before the time of nature; and the one plainly tending to the other, it is a natural intend ment that they both happened together. Cro. Jac. 41. 1 Hen. P. C. 150.

It has been ruled, that a deftice is sufficiently set forth, by alleging, that the defendant entered, &c. into such a tenement or house, without adding either the words ilicitg, on culpab, or inde, for the word deficient implies as much. Nay 125. Cro. Jac. 32. Cro. Eliz. 186. Nay 120. ent. R. 260.

2. What ought to be the form of a record grounded upon these statutes.

Thefe statutes require, that in the indictment the entry must be laid main fort, or cum multitudine gentium, a multitude of people, and that without these the statute is not sufficient; but some have held that equivalent words will be sufficient, especially if the indictment concludes contra famam fluitit, and that these words in the statute are put in causa abundanti; but it is not sufficient to say only, that he entered vi & armis, since that is the common allegation in every trespass. Stil. 135. 2 Bulst. 258. 2 Rel. Rep. 46. 1 Med. 80. 81.

An indictment on the sufficient of facts in an indictment to say, that it was taken before A. B. and C. D. jufiticiariv ad pacem domini regis conferendum auffignatis, without flushing, that they had authority to hear and determine felonies and tresfales; for the statute enables all justices of the peace, as such, to take such indictment as they think sufficient.

An indictment of forcible entry into a tenement (which may signify any thing whatsoever, wherein a man may have an estate of freehold, or into a house or tenement, or into two clofes of meadow or pasture, or into a house or half a house of land, or into certain lands belonging to such a house, or into such a house, without flushing in what town it lies, or into a tenement with the appurtenances called Tempency in D. is not good; for the place must be described with convenient certainty, for otherwife the defendant will neither know the special ground he is to make his defence, neither will the justices or sheriff know how to reimburse the injured party to his possession. Also such indictment may be void as to such part thereof only which is uncertain, and good for so much as is certain; therefore an indictment for forcible entry into a house and certain acres of land thereunto belonging, may be quashed as to the land, and good as to the house. 2 Leom. 186. 3 Leom. 104. 1 Hen. P. C. 148.

An indictment on the 5 or 15 R. 2. needs not shew who had the freehold at the time of the force, because these statutes equally punish all force of this kind, without any regard to what estate the party had on whom the force was made; yet it seems that such indictment ought to shew, that such entry was made on the possession of some person who had some estate in the tenements, either as a fheeholder or lessee for years, &c. for otherwise it doth not appear that such entry was made injurious to any one. R. Abo. 93. C. fol.㎡ 81. But it is said, that an indictment on 8 H. 6. must shew, that the place was the freehold of the party graved at the time of the force, and therefore that it is not sufficient to say, that the defendant entered into such a house or tenement outside the freehold, &c. Aduec extraeus liberum tenementum J. S. for otherwise it may be intended, that it was his freehold at the time of the indictment only. 2 Reb. 495. Salk. 260. Hesly 73. Latih 109.
The justices who make the conviction must set the fine.

3. Who may be guilty of a forcible entry, and into what possession it may be made.

A man who breaks open the doors of his own dwelling-house, or of a castle, which is his own inheritance, but forcibly detained from him by one who claims the bare custody of it, cannot be guilty of a forcible entry or detainer within the fixture. 1 More 746. Cre. Fac. 18. 2. 25. 345.

A joint tenant or common in possession often against the purport of these statutes, either by forcibly ejecting or forcibly holding out his company; for tho' the entry of such a tenant be lawful per my & per tua, & that he cannot, in any case be punished in an action of trespass at the Common law; yet the lawfulness of his entry no way excuses the violence, or lessens the injury done to his company, and consequently an indemnity of forcible entry into a moiety of a manor, &c., is good. 3. Lam. 224. Palm. 419. 1 Hawk. P. C. 147. Dalt. 315. 3. 16.

A man cannot be indicted for entering into the King's possession by force, for that he cannot be discharged. 1 Co. 69. 10. Co. 112.

An infant at the age of eighteen, and some fay fourteen, or a feme covert, by their own act, may be guilty of a forcible entry; but no before the time; but it is doubted, whether the infant may be imprisoned, because his infancy is an excuse by reason of his infiradion; and he shall not be subject to corporal punishment by force of the general words of any statute, wherein he is not expressly named; but it is clearly agreed, that the command of an infant or feme covert to enter is void, and therefore the person entering is only punishable, Bridg. 173. Cram. Jiff. 62. Dalt. 300.

One may be guilty of this offence by a force to ecclesiastical possessions, as churches, vicarage houses, &c., as much as if the same were done to any temporal inheritance. 1 Sid. 101. 1 Lev. 99. 1 Ktb. 438. Cre. Fac. 41.

Also an indemnity of forcible detainer lies against one, whether he be tenant or stranger, who shall forcibly disturb any in the enjoyment of an incorporeal inheritance, as rent, eights, common, an office. Cre. Cas. 201. 426. But the justices cannot award restitution for theft, because no man can be put out of possession of them, but at his own election. Scratt. Whether such indemnity will lie for a common or office; and see 1 Hawk. P. C. 146, who says, that he can find no good authority, that such indemnity will lie; and note that a man cannot be con- victed upon view, by force of 15 Ric. 2. cap. 2. of a forcible detainer of any incorporeal inheritance, because he cannot be said to have made a precedent forcible entry.

No one can come within the dangers of those statutes by a violence offered to another, in respect of a way, or fuch like cementer, which is no possession. 1 Med. 73. 2 Ktb. 769.

4. Of rewarding restitution; what shall be a bar or fay to fuch award of restitution, and of superseding and setting it aside after it is executed.

The same justice or justices, before whom an indemnity of forcible entry or detainer shall be found, may award restitution; but no other justices, but those before whom the inquest was found, can award restitution, unless the indemnity be moved into the King's Bench; and by the plentitude of their power can relieve, because that is supposed to be implied by the statute; for that whenever an inferior jurisdiction is erected, the superior jurisdiction must have authority to put it in execution; so if an indemnity be found before the justices of the peace at their quarter-tenants, they have authority to award a writ of restitution, because the statute having given power to the justices or justice to referee, it may as well be done by them in court as out of it; but the justices of oyer and terminer or general gaol-delivery, they may enquire of forcible entries, and fine the parties, yet they cannot award a writ of restitution. H. P. C. 140. Bridg. 175. 11. Co. 65. 69. Dalif. 25. pl. 8. 9. Co. 118. Dalt. Jiff. 314.

The sheriff, if need be, may raise the peace committee to affist him in the execution of the writ of restitution; if he return, that he could not make restitution by reason of resistance, he shall be amerced. 2 Lam. Jiff. 157.

Restitution ought only to be awarded for the possession of the tenements visible and corporeal; for as a man, who hath a right to such as are invisible and incorporeal, as rents, commons, cannot be put out of possession of them, but only at his own election, by a fiction of law to enable it to recover damages against the person who disturbs him in the enjoyment of them; and all the remedy, that can be defined against a force in respect to such possessions, is to have the force removed, and those who are guilty of it punished, which may be done by 15 R. 2.

Restitution shall only be awarded to him who is found by the indemnity to have been put out of an actual possession, and consequently that it shall not be awarded to one who was only misled in law as to an heir on whom a lease was given, to avoid the death of the ancestor, before any actual entry made by such heir, and that it is the ground it followed, that it shall not be granted to an heir upon an indemnity finding a forcible entry made upon his ancestor. Lamb. 153. 154. Dal. Ch. 83. Cre. Fac. 193. 1 Hawk. P. C. 151.

It appears by the statute, in the statute 8 H. 6. and by the 3. Elia. 11. that any one indicted upon these statutes may allege such possession, to play the award of restitution; in the construction whereof, if the Serjeant Hawkins, it hath been holden, that such possession must have continued without interruption during three whole years next before the indictment, and therefore that no, who having been in possession of land for three years or more, is forcibly ousted, and then restored by force of the statute of 8 H. 6. cannot justify a forcible detainer till he hath been in possession again for three years after such restitution; and also for the same reason it hath been holden that the crown a stranger, who under a defective title hath never been so long in possession of land to which another hath a right of entry, cannot justify such a detainer at any time within three years after a claim made by him who hath such right, and the subsequent continuance in possession, 1 Hawk. P. C. 152. and the authorities cited are, Dal. Cas. 79. Cram. 71. H. P. C. 139. Dyer 141. pl. 43. 22. H. 6. 18. Bre. tit. Force 22. 29. 1 Ind. 256.

Alfo it is said, that the three years possession must be of a lawful estate, and therefore that a disfere can in no case justify a forcible entry or detainer against the difficulty having a right of entry, as it seems that he may against a stranger, or even against the disfere, having by his laches lost his right of entry. Dalt. Cas. 79. 22. H. 6. Cram. 71.

Wherever such possession is pleaded in bar of a restitution either in the King's Bench, or before justices of the peace, no restitution ought to be awarded till the truth of the plea be tried, and such plea need not follow under what title, or what estate such possession was, because not the title, but the possession only is material. 1 Kgb. 538. Salt. 61. 1 Henr. P. C. 153. 1 Sid. 144. 2 Ktb. 538. Regyn. 84. 1 Fenw. 82.

If one who has been three years in possession, be afterwards ousted, and the same day re-enter with force, and be also indicted on the same day; yet it seems, that by the plain meaning and reason of the statute, he can no more bar the restitution of the party forcibly enured upon, than if he had been indicted on another day, tho' the words of the statute are, That there shall be no restitution, &c. if the perdon indicted have been in quiet possession.
On a plea of three years poimation to an inquisition of forcible entry removed by certiorari, the defendant, if it be found against him, shall pay costs. Ed. Raym. 1536.

Foreign attachment, is such an attachment as is not triable in the county where it is made. 15 H. 8. cap. 5.

Foreign attachment, is an attachment of a foreigner's goods found within a liberty, or a city, for the satisfaction of some citizens to whom the foreigner is indebted. At Leman (anciently Lempset) there is the borough and the foreign; which last is within the jurisdiction of the manor, but not within the bailiff of the borough's liberty. Foreign courts. Decrees, judgments, &c. there, how far binding or regarded here. The ship being unladen at Barcelona, where the freight was payable by the charter-party, the factor refusing to pay the freight, the master of the ship litigated there in the Admiralty for it, and the court, and judge, ordered there given, that the master should have his freight, but that the damages the goods had sustained in the voyage, by reason of the deviation, should be deducted, and the account transferred to the delinquents, (who are in the nature of our masters in Chancery) to take the account, and the money ordered to be brought into court; but the factor had appealed to a higher court there. Lord Chancellor declared, that he would not flight their proceedings beyond sea; and if in this case the damages had been there ascertained, or a peremptory sentence given, the fame should have been conclusive to all parties: But it appearing, that the master had not taken a mate of that place, and therefore, in all probability, might again prevail; and defendant being willing to defit his fait there, his lordship directed a trial here by jury, to ascertain the damages sustained by the deviation. Foreign kingdom, Is a kingdom under the dominion of a foreign prince; so that Ireland, or any other place, subject to the crown of England, cannot with us be called foreign; though to some purposes they are divided from that of England; and if a foreigner, or others, be subject to a foreign kingdom, and one of them is killed, it cannot be tried here by the Common law; but it may be tried and determined by the constable and marshall, according to the Civil law; or the fact may be examined by the privy council, and tried by commissioners appointed by the Crown, at any court of England, or statute. 3 Inst. 40. 33 H. 8. One Hutchinson killed Mr. Calten abroad in Portugal, for which he was tried there, and acquitted, the exemplification of which acquittal he produced under the great seal of that kingdom; and the King being willing he should be tried here, referred it to the judges, who all agreed, that the party being already acquitted by the laws of Portugal, could not be tried again for the same fact here. 3 KB. 285. Foreign laws and customs. How far regarded here. On a marriage of two French people in France, the contract was that, the husband, surviving the wife, should have the whole fortune of the marriage, and that the wife's fortune should pass to her own kindred. To this contract extended to the whole fortune of the wife, and not only to the particular mentioned, and the saying that the wife should only according to the custom of Paris, is as much as if the custom had been recited at large, and that the fortune should go to. Lord Keeper decreed relapse the custom should not be imitated. If the Lords, they had relief for the whole. Chanc. Prct. 207. Mich. 1702. S. C. cited in a case of a marriage article made in Holland, and in the marriage article the customary law of Holland, marriage articles are to take place of any other debts, and it was inferred, that therefore they should be confirmed here according to the laws of Holland, where they appeared to have been made. But it was answered, and so ruled, that it ought to have been proved in this case, what is the law of Holland, as in the above case it was proved, what was the law of France; without which proofs, our courts cannot take notice of foreign laws. Win's Rep. Pofcb. 1718. Freeman v. Defore.

The plaintiffs being creditors of Colley, preferred their bill against the defendant, being all foreigners, but the goods were passed over into England, into merchants hands by Colley; and this court taking notice, in respect of the different customs and the rest of the whole of theseKing'sHolds; secondly, because the bill was not sealed; thirdly, because the debt grew in France, and he came over hither to keep his body from arrest, the court decreed the debts, and caused a decree to be drawn up pro confesso, because the defendant would not answer, and the court ordered the monies or goods in the hands, to pay the debts, although they were passed over to others to the use of an infant. Thib. 131, 132, cites 8 For. Sore & Leland v. Colley.

The plaintiff being a Dutch woman brought 400£, portion to her husband, who agreed with her before marriage, to leave a complete maintenance for herself and her children, but not expressing what; the marriage took effect, but he declining in estate, her friends called on him, and he thereupon assigned certain bonds, wherein M. was bound to him, and a letter of attorney was made after to S. to receive the money upon the bonds, who received the bill of the bill was to have the money from M. and S. M. by plea sets forth the payment to S. and that he had no notice of the assignment of the bonds. And this was allowed a good plea for M. But S. pleaded a letter of attorney, and payment to him on good consideration, but did not deliver the documents or fore his part was delivered, and the agreement and assignment of the debt in Holland, where such agreement between husband and wife, and such assignment of bonds are good, they are to be allowed here. Foreign money. When one demands foreign coin in pecie, the writ ought to be in the deinit only; but when the value of it in English silver is demanded, it may be in the debts and debitor. Per Court. 12. 2 Mo. 46. Trin. 37 Car. 2. C. B. Arg. in case of Darwin v. Pindar.

An appeal lies from those lands to the King and Council here, but that is by constitutions of their own. Arg. Mod. 45, in case of Darwin v. Pindar.

The King constituted a governor and council of state of Barbados, there being but one good against the governor for imprisoning the plaintiff by order of the Council, Judgment was given for the plaintiff in B. R. Hill. 3 Jac. 2. 2 Mo. 159. Wibram v. Dutton. But in a writ of error in the House of Lords, it was argued, that tho' it did not appear, that the King gave any authority to the Governor and Council to commit, yet it is incumbent to their authority as being a Council of State; the Council here in England commit no otherwise. And where the commitment is not authorized by law, the King's patent gives no power for it. But the government remains weak, where the Council of State cannot commit a delinquency, so as to be forthcoming to another court that can punish his delinquency. And therefore prayed that the judgment should be reversed, and the same was accordingly reversed. Par. Caf. 34.

These plantations are parcel of the realm, as county palatine, and being a feudal power, are exempted from the laws of the realm, according to the common course of English equity, Arg. Par. Cafes 33. in case of Dutton v. Bracton, 1 Trin. 33. 218. 2 Mo. 159.

It was insisted by Counsel, that by the custom of the island of Barbados, a plantation there, that's a fee-simple estate, is in the first place liable to the payment of debts, so that the owner cannot, by his will, devise his plantation, but that it will be liable to the payment of his debts; but these debts must be either due contracted on the place, or elsewhere, for matters relating to the plantation, St. Poefs. 1067; Vern. Leffor brought debt against leffor for rent, upon a demife of lands in Jamaica, and laid his action in London; defendant pleaded, that the lands were in Jamaica, and that there are courts there, &c., that if entry and outher were pleaded, it could not be tried here, and that the right of debt and defendant depending on foreign laws, cannot be given in evidence here. And per cur. Where an action is local, it must be tried accordingly; therefore if the leffor declares on the privyty of effate, and that lies in Ireland, &c., the action must be brought there; for the action is local, therefore such leffor cannot without naming the foreign plaintiff, to the courts at New York, (whence the plaint is described) without naming an affiance of a term in Ireland; for the action is founded on a privyty of effate, otherwise 'tis founded on a privyty of contract, which is transitory, as debt for rent by leffor against leffor, for that may be maintained where the land lies not; and if a foreign interest, which is local, should happen, it may be tried here, where the action is laid; for that purpose there may be a suffegion entered on the roll, that such a place in such a county is next adjacent, and it may be tried here by a jury from that place, according to the laws of that county, and on nil deliberate, you may give the laws of that country in evidence. 2 Salk. 651. Trin. 3 Ann. B. R. Way v. Yally.

If there be a new uninhabited country found out by English subjects, as the law is the birth-right of every subject, so wherever they go, they carry their laws with them, and therefore such new-found country is to be governed by the laws of England. 2 Wm's Rob. 75. says, it was laid by the Master of the Rolls, 9 Edw. 1st. 1723, to have been so determined by the Lords of the Privy Council upon appeal.

But after such country is inhabited by the English, acts of parliament, made in England, will not bind them without naming the foreign plantation.

4. Foreign plea, Is a refund of the judge, as incompetent, because the matter in question is not within his jurisdiction. Kitchen. 75. 4 H. 8. cap. 2. and 22 Hen. 8. c. 2. 14.

A foreign plea is, where the action is carried out of the country where 'tis laid, and is to be sworn, which a plea to the jurisdiction is. Per Gard. 423. Pojch. 9 W. 3. B. R. Chumley v. Broom.

As foreign pleae, are a plea to the jurisdiction, and not foreign pleas, and therefore not to be sworn to, but may be received without an oath. Arg. and judgment accordingly. 5 Mad. 333. Chambreley v. Broom. Vol. II. No. 77.

For by Stat. 6 Ric. 2. c. 2. in writs of debt and account, and all other such actions, if in pleas upon the same, he cited that the contract was made in another county that is contained in the original writ, the same writ shall be abated.

Before this statute, writ of debt and account against a receiver, and such-like actions, might be brought in any county, where the party might be brought in to answer, and the defendant might have conceded of a contract or receipt, &c. in any other county; because de titum et contractus, &c. sunt nullius loci. 7 Rep. 3. in Botter's cafe.

If it appears by the declaration, that the money was to be paid out of the jurisdiction of the court, the judgment is not good; and 'tis not necessary to swear the plea, if it appears on the obligation, that the money was to be paid out of the jurisdiction of the court, and he pleads payment according to the condition. But if one will not swear a foreign plea, where he ought to do it, the plaintiff may enter judgment on a nihil dictum, for such a foreign plea, not being sworn to upon the matter. 3 St. 225. Trin. 1650. Dudding v. Collier.

A prohibition was prayed to the court of the common, to an action of debt there commenced; for that the defendant had pleaded before impeachment, That the cause of action did arise in a place out of their jurisdiction, and offered to have sworn his plea, and that he did not perceive this plea; and a prohibition was granted; for inferior courts do not cognize of transitory things, which arise out of their jurisdiction, as F. N. B. 45: is: But then 'tis not sufficient to furnish such matter for a prohibition, but a plea to that effect must be tender'd in the inferior court, and that before an impeachment (whereby the jurisdiction would be admitted) and it must be upon oath; and then if refused, a prohibition shall be granted; or upon such refusal, a bill of exceptions may be made, and error assigned. Vent. 180. Hilk. 23 & 24 Cor. 2. B. R. St. Akens v. Chaloner.

Debt was brought in B. R. on a bond made at Chaloner, the defendant did not imparle but pleaded by attorney, that he is, and at the time of the action brought was a tenant, and not in the same jurisdiction as Chaloner, and prayed judgment if the court of B. R. be to hold plea of this matter. But the plaintiff, taking this to be a foreign plea, signed judgment, because it was not sworn to. And to set aside this judgment, it was infufled, that tho' this is a plea to a jurisdiction, yet it is not a foreign plea, and therefore need not be sworn to; and accordingly the judgment was set aside. See Carth. 429. Pojch. 9 W. 3. B. R. Chumley v. Broom, and 5 Mad. 335. Chambreley v. Broom, S. C. and 12 Mad. 123. Chumley v. Broom, S. C.

Debt was brought in London. A prohibition was moved for, and granted, on, upon foggestion that the defendant had tendered for plea below, that the cause did arise out of their jurisdiction, and offered to make oath of the truth of it. Now it was shewed, that he tendered the plea after the court was up, whereas it should be, in propriam perfunctam, and in court. And tho' an affidavit was offered in B. R. of the truth of the plea; and one Turner's cafe, 4 Cor. 2. 247. was cited out of the court, where such prohibition had been granted upon affidavit in B. R. without oath below; yet by three justices, abente Holt, the rule was discharge. For in all pleas that ouste a court of jurisdiction, whether inferior or superior, there must be oath, in that court, of the truth of the plea. 6 Mad. 149. Pojch. 3 daw. B. R. Spinks v. Wood.

In debt, if the defendant pleads foreign plea in another county in persun, he shall not be examined; but if it be by attorney, the attorney shall be examined. But in this case they use to examine the party at this day without oath. Br. Examination, p. 23. cites 2 Ed. 4. 10.

If one be fixed in an inferior court, for a matter out of the jurisdiction, the defendant may either have a prohibition from one of the Common law courts, or may, if it happen in the vacation, and it happens then, when the Chancellor is open, move the court of Chancery X

Foreftalling, (Viarum obftructus, from the Sax. forst,
c. c. oafs, and falf,) Signifies the buying or bargaining for any corn, cattle, or other merchandise, by the way, before it comes to any market or fair to be sold; or by the way as it comes from beyond the seas, or otherwise, toward any city, port, haven, or creek of this realm, to the intent to sell the same again at a more high and dear

1. Of the offences of forftalling, ingrefling, and regrgrating by the Common law, (that is, by the common cuftom of the realm, before any act of parliament was made concerning them) and how punished.

All endeavours whatsoever to inhuman the common price of any merchandise, and all kinds of praftices which have any apparent tendency thereto; whether by spreading false rumours, or by buying things in a market before the acuttomed hour, or by buying and selling again the fame thing in the fame market, or by any other such like devices, are highly criminal at Common law: And all such offences ancienly came under the general notion of forftalling; which included ingrefling, regrating, and all kinds of offences of this nature. - Hawt. P. C. 234. 43 Scot. 38. 3 Inf. 195, 196.

And surely there can be no attempt of this kind, but must be looked upon as an high offence against the pub-llick; as it apparently tends to put a check upon trade, to the general inconvenience of the people, by putting it out of their power to supply themselves with a commodity, whether they are their natural or their particular expectation, whatsoever they may be; which produces extremely oppressive to the poorer fort, and cannot but give just cause of complaint to the richest. - Hawt.
P. C. 234.

But it hath been resolved, that any merchant, whether he be a subject or a foreigner, bringing victuals, or any other merchandise into the realm, may sell the same in grofs; but that no person can lawfully buy within the realm any merchandise in grofs, and sell the same in grofs again; because, by such means, the price will be increased; for the more hands any merchandise passeth through, the dearer it must grow; because every one will make his profit thereby, and by the mean of the same fellow man might ingroffe into his hands a whole commodity, and then fell it out at what price he should fthink fit;
which is of such dangerous consequence, that the bare ingroffing of a whole commodity, with intent to sell it at an unreasonable price, is an offence indictable at the Common law, whether any part thereof be sold by the ingroffer or not. - Hawt. P. C. 234. 3 Inf. 195.

H. P. C. 152.

And so jealous is the Common law of all praftices of this kind, that it will not suffer corn to be fold in the field; perhaps for this reason, because, by fuch means, the market is, in effect, forftalled. - Hawt. P. C.
235. 3 Inf. 197. H. P. C. 152.

As to the manner whereby offences of this kind are punifiable by the Common law, it is faid, that, by an ancient statute, the offender was to be grievously ameced for the firth offence; for the fecond, to be condemned to the pillory; for the third, to be imprisoned; and for the fourth, to be compelled to abjure the fivell. And there seems to be no doubt, but that, at this day, all offenders of this kind are liable to a fine and imprifonment, anfwerable to the heinousnefs of their offences, upon an indictment at Common law. - Hawt. P. C.

Meafures and weights, viz. pounds, half pounds, and other little weights, wherewith bread of the town, or of the court, is weighed: and upon every meafure, bus-heil, and weight, the name of the owner fhall be written, and likewise they shall gather the meafures of mills: After which, twelve men fhall fwear to make true anfwer to fuch things as fhall be demanded of them in the King's behalf upon the articles here following; and fuch things as be secret, they fhall utter secretly, and answer privately.

then fell it to another, and afterwards sell it again; and any thing before the hour, or that paffs out of the town to meet fuch things as come to the market, to the intent they may fell the fame in the town unto regrators.

When a quarter of barley is fold for two Hillings, then four quarts of ale fhall be fold for one penny; when for two Hillings and six pence, then feven quarters for two pence;
when for three shillings, then three quarters for a penny; when for three shillings and sixpence, then five quarters for two pence; when for four shillings, then two quarters at one penny.

Order, for bakers, &c. Insert. temp. c. 10. (made during the reign of King Hen. 3. King Edu. 1. or King Edw. 1.)-That all bakers, who shall make of their bread, any other commodity, whether of the same nature, or of a different kind, shall be excluded from the market, and be liable to the penalty of the third article. Hawk. Stat. vol. i. p. 180. No forecaster shall be suffered to dwell in any town, who manifestly is an oppressor of the poor, a publick enemy of the country, who, meeting grain, fish, hearst, or other things coming to be sold, doth make halls to buy them before another, to the prejudice of the poor, either by the gaining the same, and deceiving the rich, and, by that means, goeth about to sell the said things much dearer than he brought them; who cometh about merchant-strangers, and offereth them his help in the sale of their wares, and informeth them, that he can sell them at a price dearer than they mean to have done: He that is convicted thereof, the first time, shall be amerced, and shall lose the thing so bought, according to the custom of the town; that he is convicted the second time, shall have judgment of the pillory; the third time, he shall be imprisoned in the prison; and in the fourth time, he shall abjure the town; and likewise they that give them counsel, help, or favour.

Stat. 23 Ed. 3. cap. 6. Butchers, fishmongers, regrators, hotellers, brewers, bakers, poulterers, and other sellers of victuals, shall be bound to sell the same for a reasonable price. And when the mayor and aldermen, at the instance of their tenants, shall determine a price, before the mayor, bailiff or justice, thereto assented, or elsewhere in the King's court, if the said price be not paid, or whereof, and the mayor and aldermen declare the price, and shall make fined to the King, and the King the other half. Conformed by 2 Ric. 2. flat. 1. cap. 2.

Stat. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 11. All merchants that bring their wares to the cities, towns, or ports, within the realm, may safely sell them; and no perfon shall go by forced or water towards such wares, to fotheall them, or give false names of their makers, or before they come to the ports, nor enter into the things for such cause, till the merchandise be let to be sold; upon the paines contained in the third article, viz. the pains of felony; but the penalty is not in use in this case; perhaps from the laws of the times, being obsolete by the invention of Calcut, and because of their presence, all the wares were removed by Ed. 3. and H. 4. [See flat. 2 H. 5. flat. 1. cap. 6. and 2 H. 6. c. 4. and 3 H. 6. cap. 4, concerning the flatle, in the statues at large] the penalty of death in the said third article is also repealed by 38 Ed. 3. flat. 1. cap. 6: but the forfeiture of the goods remains, provided the King either does not pay the same, or if he pays the same, he shall not make it, or declare it to falsely, and upon the paines contained in the third article, shall forfeit to the King, the goods of the merchant, and the goods of the sum for the penalties, and the goods of the other half, to the King, for the sum for the penalty. Flat. 2 H. 5. flat. 1. cap. 6.

Stat. 31 Ed. 3. H. 1. cap. 10. Every man that bringeth victuals to London, may freely sell the same without being interrupted by stiffer, butcher, poulterer, or other; and the mayor and aldermen shall redeem the Vol. II. N°. 78.

defaults of fathers, butchers, bakers and poulterers, as also of those that fell abroad, ale, or wine, notwithstanding every charters of franchises, statutes, customs, or privileges; and the mayor and aldermen shall do the same, upon the pain in 28 Ed. 3. cap. 10. [viz. for the first default one thousand marks to the King, for the second two thousand marks, and for the third default, the franchises of the city shall be taken from the King's hands;} So that the punishment be not made, in respect of any singular profit.

Stat. 6 Ric. 3. cap. 10. Alienis being of the amity of the King, and coming within the city of London, and other cities and boroughs, within the walls, and five and other victuals, shall be under the special protection of the King; and they may sell and make their profit at retail or in gross.

Stat. 13 Ric. 2. cap. 8. Victuallers shall have reasonable gains, according to the direction of the justices of the peace, and no more, upon pain to be grievously punished according to the discretion of the justices, where the same is not limited in certain. And such victuallers, or victuallers, and other victuals, and other victuals that have affile of bread and ale, or shall make no amercement, or fine for any default touching the affile for which a man ought to have bodily punishment. And that the survey in cities, &c. shall put the statute against victuals, in 23 Ed. 6. cap. 6. in execution. Conformed by 4 Hen. 8. cap. 25.

Stat. 1 Hen. 4. cap. 17. The flat, 6 Ric. 2. cap. 10. shall be duly executed, notwithstanding the letters patient granted of the victuallers, contrary to the fishmongers of London, by the late King Richard.

Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 2. felt. t. enacts. That to remedy the frequent rise of the price of cheeves, butter, capons, hens, chickens, and other necessaries victuals for man's subsistence, by ingrafting and regulating the same; and that the Lord Chancellor, and the several principal officers of state, &c. may, upon complaint of any inhabiting of the country, or of such victuals without ground or reasonable cause, in any part of the King's dominions, set and tax reasonable prices of such victuals: And that after proclamation made of such prices, all farmers, owners, brokers, and all other victuallers whatsoever, having or keeping any such victuals to the intent, to sell, shall sell such victuals to the intent of the King's subjécts as will buy them, at such prices as shall be taxed by such proclamation, under the pains to be limited in the said proclamation.

Stat. 2. All farmers, owners, brokers, and other victualers, keeping any victuals whatsoever, before the said proclamation be made of such prices, all farmers, owners, brokers, and all other victualers whatever, having or keeping any such victuals to the intent, to sell, shall sell such prices as shall be set by the proclamation, upon the pains limited in the proclamation.

Stat. 3. Provided, that the officers of the cities, boroughs, or towns corporate, and all other persons having authority to set prices of such victuals, may set such prices in such manner as if the said act had not been made.

Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 15. enact. Sect. 9. Or if any person or persons, after the said first day of May, shall buy any manner of oxen, steers, kine, heifers, calves, sheep, lambs, goats or kids, living, and feed them in the said fourtieth part, unless they shall feed the same by the space of five weeks in his or her own houses, ground, farm ground, or else in such ground or grounds where he or they have the heritage, or common pasture, by grant or preemption; then that every person or persons so buying and feeding again, shall lose the double value of the same, or things so bought and fed again; the one moiety of all which forfeitures aforesaid shall be to the King, and the other moiety to him or them shall will for the use, in any of the King's courts of record, by bill, plaint, action of debt or information; in which the bill, plaint, action or information, no wager of law, eonion or pleaution, shall be admitted.
Sect. 10. Be it further enacted, &c. That the juries of the peace in every county within this realm, or Wales, at their quarter-feelions, shall have full power and author- ity by virtue of this act to examine all and every the defaults and offences perpetrated, committed or done contrary to this act, within the county where any such felotions shall be kept, by inquisition, pre- fement, bill or information before them exhibited, and by examination of two lawful witnesse, or by any of the false, or other matters of the said juries, and to make process thereupon, as though they were indicted before them by inquisition or by verdict of twelve men or more; and upon the conviction of the offender, by information or suit of any other than the King, to make execution of the one moiety of all the for- feitures to be levied to the King's use, as they use to do of other fines, issues and amerciations grown in the fel- lissions of peace; and to award execution of the other moiety for the complainant or informer against the of- fender, by fieri facias or capias, as the King's juries at Westminster may do and use to do: And if any such con- victior or attainer shall hereafter happen to be at the King's suit only, then the whole forfeitures to be extrtaled and levied to the King's use only.
Sect. 11. And it is further enacted, &c. That what- ever person shall, at any time hereafter, be puNished by virtue of this act, for any thing therein contained, that then the said person shall not otherwise be vexed, troubled, sued, or put to any pain or punishment for that thing wherefor he or they shall have been so pu- nished.
Sect. 12. Provided always, and it is enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall be lawful to every per- son or persons, which shall be aigned and allowed, by three juries of the peace of the county where he shall dwell, thertanto, to buy (otherwire than by feall) corn, grain or cattle, to be transported or carried by water from any port or place within this realm, or Wales, unto any port or place within the said dominions or dominions, if he or they shall, without fraud or covin, ship or em- bark within forty days next after he or they shall have bought the fame, or taken covenant or promise for the buying thereof, with such expenses and diligence as wind and weather will serve to carry and transport the said person or persons, as his or their cokets shall de- clare; and there to disembark, unladen and fell the same, and do bring a true certificate thereof from one juries of peace of the county, or mayor or bailiff of the town co- mmunauté where the same was disembarked, and also of the custome of the port where such unloading shall be, of the place and day where the said corn or cattle shall be disembarked, unladen and founded, to be directed unto the custome and commtroller of the port where the same were embarked, that being mentioned in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.
Sect. 13. And over that, that at all times hereafter, when wheat shall be commonly at the price of six shillings and eight pence the quarter, or under, malt and barley at three shillings and fourpence a quarter, or under, oats or oats malted at the price of 2 shillings the quarter, or under, pease or beans at the price of four shillings the quarter, or under, and rye or milletwine at the price of five shillings the quarter or under; and which quarters shall be intended to be of London measure; then that it shall be lawful to every person or persons (not forfealing) to buy, engross and keep in his own house, or the houses of the kinds aforesaid, as without fraud or covin shall be bought at or under the prices afore expressed; any thing in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.
Sect. 14. Provided always, and be it enated by the author- ity aforesaid, That if any person or persons shall, by virtue of this act, or any thing therein contained, extend not to charge any person or persons for any the offences above mentioned, unless he or they be sued for the fame within two years next after such offence done or committed. This act to endure until the end of the next parliament.
Sect. 15. Provided always, and be it enacted by the author- ity aforesaid, That it shall be lawful to all and every the King's Majesty's subjects now dwelling or inhabiting, that hereafter shall dwell or inhabit within one mile of the main sea, to buy all manner of fifth, or of any thing, in so far as aforesaid, being licensed and authorized to be carried by any persons as are aforesaid, to be brought with the common, or any thing therein contained to the contrary in any wife notwithstanding.
Sect. 16. Provided also, and be it enacted by the au- thority aforesaid, That it shall be lawful to all and every the persons known and personally known to be drover or drovers, being licensed, authorized and allowed in writing by three justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quar- um, of the county or counties where the fame drover or drovers shall be most abiding and dwelling, to buy cattle in any such districts or counties where drovers have been wont, in times past, accustomedly to buy cattle at their free liberty and pleasure, and to sell the same as aforesaid at reasonable prices, in common fairs and mar- kets, distant from the place or places whereof he or they shall buy the same, forty miles at the least, so that the same cattle be not bought by way of forfealing; this act, or any thing therein contained to the contrary in any wife notwithstanding.
Sect. 17. Provided always, That such licence of justices of peace shall not endure above one year, unless the fame be yearly renewed by so many justices as is aforesaid.
Made perpetual by the 5 Edw. c. 12. sect. 4. No drover of cattle, hogs, lades, kidder, carrier, buyer, or transporter of corn or grain, butter and cheese, be from and after the feast of Easter next after the first day of this present parliament, licensed, admitted, attainted, or allowed to such offices or doings, or to any of the said offices or doings, by general and open quarter-feelions of the peace, be to hold in the thire where such perfon or persons to be ad- mitted, attainted or allowed, doth or shall dwell, and hath or shall have dwelt there by the space of three years next before the sft of his said licence. And that no per- son or persons, after the first day of May next coming, be admitted to the said offices or doings, or to any of them, but such only as be or have been married men, and shall be, at the time of such licence to be granted, householders, and not householders, or retainers to any perfon or persons, and of the age of thirty years at the least: And that all licences being made and granted, as is aboveafo, shall have connuence and be good only for one year next after the date hereof, and for no more nor longer time.
Sect. 5. Which said licences and every of them shall bear date of the day and place where the said felotions shall be given, and shall be signed and sealed with the proper hands and seals of three of the said justices of the peace, being present at the same sallions, at the least; whereof one to be of the quarum; upon pain that every person or persons that shall make any licence by any licence in hand for ordi- nance, to lose and forfeit to our Sovereign Lady the Queen, her heirs and successors, five pounds Sterling: And that all licences made and granted, or hereafter to be made and and granted otherwise than is before expressed, shall from and after the said first day of May next commencing be void and of none effect.

2. And further, Be it enacted, &c. That the justices of the peace in the said general and open sessions shall or may, by their directions, take bond and surety, from time to time by recognizance, of such as shall be admitted or allowed hereafter a common carrier or owner of cattle, badgers, cattle, carters, binder carriers, carrier buyers of corn, grain, butter or cheese, that they, or any of them shall not, by colour of his or their licence, fosil or ingross, or otherwise practice or do any act or thing contrary to the tenor and true meaning, or in defrauding the said former statute, or of any matter or thing therein contained: All which licences, and every of them, and the said recognizances, shall be made and written by the clerk of the peace of every county where such licence shall be granted, or by his lawful deputy, and by none other person or persons: And every person that shall have any such licence, shall pay to the clerk of the peace, or his deputy for making thereof, twelve pence at the most; and for every recognizance in form abovefo Said, to be made and acknowledged, eight-pence at the most; and for registering of the said licence and recognizance, four-pence at most; For which said fee, the said clerk, or his deputy, shall pay to the said clerk, or his deputy, for writing and registering of such licence or recognizance, or such act or thing as aforesaid, and for the day, and place where such licence or licences shall be granted: Which looks to the register of the said clerk of the peace, or his deputy, shall have and bring to every recognizance, to the intent that it may appear what number of licences be and shall be from time to time granted, whereby the better consideration may be had thereof.

 Sect. 7. Provided always, and Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no perfon or persons shall or may, by authority of such licence above-mentioned, buy any corn or grain out of open fair or market to fall again, unless such perfon and perfons shall be thereto licensed, and shall have special and express writs contained in such licence or licences, that he or they shall have to do; upon such perfon or persons, shall or may do the contrary, five pounds: The moiety of which forfeitures above rehearsed, shall be to the Queen our Sovereign Lady, her heirs and successors, and the other moiety to him or them that shall sue for the same in any court, or quarter-sessions, or the said clerk, or any person, by service of record, by bill, in treason, to the intent of debt or information, in which the bill, plaint, action or information, no wager of law, effion or protection shall be admitted.

 Sect. 8. The justices of peace in every county within this realm or Wales, at the quarter-seessions, shall have full power and authority, by virtue of this act, to inquire, hear and determine all and every the defaults and offences perpetrated, committed or done contrary to this act, within the county where any such forfeitures shall be kept, by inquisition, prevination, bill or information, before them exhibited, and by examination of two lawful witnesses, or by any of the same ways or means, by the said justices, or any one of them, make prayers thereupon, as though they were indicted before them by inquisition, or by verdict of twelve men or more: And upon the conviction of the offender, by information or suit of any other than the Queen, to make extracts of the moiety of the forfutues to be levied of the Queen's use, and for the use of the other fines and amendements grown in the said forfutues, and to award execution of the other moiety for the complainant or informer against the offender, by foro factoos or capias, as the Queen's justices at Walfminister may do, and use to do: And if after such conviction or arrest of the Queen's use, they use to do of other fines and amendements grown in the said fines of peace, and to award execution of the other moiety for the complainant or informer against the offender, by foro factoos or capias, as the Queen's justices at Walfminister may do, and use to do: And if after any such conviction or arrest of the Queen's use, they use to do of other fines and amendements grown in the said fines of peace, and to award execution of the other moiety for the complainant or informer against the offender, by foro factoos or capias, as the Queen's justices at Walfminister may do, and use to do:

 Sect. 9. Provided always, That this act, or any thing therein contained, shall not in any wise extend to the prejudice of the liberty of any city or town corporate;
FORM. FOR

ORS, or within the limits of the weekly bills of mortality, may be guilty of many abuses greatly to the prejudice of their employers, by indirectly selling such cattle, and by that means, flocking lands, which they may hire to the tenant, to sell or dispose of at his request, or for the city of London, or weekly bills of mortality, where such cattle may be brought to be sold again, whenever they shall find a proper time, or opportunity of selling the fame to advantage: Be it therefore enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the twenty-ninth day of September 1759, no Coleman, or other broker of fashor, who shall be employed to buy or sell any sort of cattle for others, by commissiôn, or for reward to be paid or taken, shall by himself, or any servant or agent, directly or indirectly, on or for his own account, buy any live oxen, cows, calves, heifers, oxen, sheep, lamb, or swine, in London, or within the said limits of the said weekly bills of mortality, or at any place whilft any such cattle shall be on the road, or be driving, bringing, or coming up, to be sold, or offered to or for sale, in London, or at any other place within the bill of mortality (other than such cattle which any such fashor, broker, or factor, shall actually purchase for the necessary use or provision of his family, and shall actually use accordingly): And no such fashor, broker, or factor, after the said twenty-ninth day of September, shall sell or expose, or offer to sell or expose to his own use, or in his own place within the said limits of the said weekly bills of mortality, either by himself, or his servant, or agent, any live ox, bull, cow, steer, bullock, heifer, calf, sheep, lamb, or swine; up-pon pain that every person who shall so offend in the premisde, shall, by his own force, be called to the bar, and every such offence in manner herein after mentioned, forfeit and pay for every such offence double the value of any live cattle which he shall so offend to be examined, may be committed, by any such fashor or ju-tices, to some prison of the city, or place, for which such witnesses shall so offend, for any time not exceeding one calendar month, nor less than ten days from the time of every such commitment; until such offender or offenders shall sooner pay the money forfeited: And if any witnesses who shall appear, or be brought by any warrant, before such justices or juflices, shall refuse to be examined, any person or persons shall, in consequence of the said joact, hold, receive, or retain, without any conviftion, or appeal, for the peace of the county, or place, in which any such conviction shall have been made, which shall be held next after such conviction; unless such next general or general quarter-feftions of the peace for any such county, city, or place, shall be held within fix days after such conviction: And if any such general or general quarter-feftions of the peace, shall happen to be held within the said space of fix days next after such conviction, then it shall be lawful for any such perfon or perons to appeal againft such judgment or determination to the justices at the second general or general quarter-feftions of the peace for any such county, city, or place; and shall also give three days notice in writing, of such every appeal, to, or before the same at the usual place of abode of the perfon or perons who shall prosecute to conviction the party or parties fo appealing: And if the justices of the peace at such general or general quarter-feftions, are hereby authorized and required, on every such appeal being made, to hear and determine the matter of every such appeal; and to make such order, and award such costs therein, as they in their discretion shall deem meet: And the determination of such court of general or general quarter-feftions on every such appeal, shall be final and conclusive to all parties thereto appealing; and no certiorari shall be allowed to remove any such proceedings or determination.

Sect. 16. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That one moiety of all money forfeited by this act shall, when recovered, go to the perfon or perons who shall prosecute to conviction the party or parties against whom complaint shall be made; and if the money forfeited shall not be paid on or within three months after such conviction, then the said moiety shall be made thereof, by oath, before any such justice or justices; then every such justice or justices is and are hereby authorized and required to proceed to make inquiring touching the matter complained of, and to examine into the same by the oath or oaths of a credible perfon or perons; and if the oath or oaths of such perons be sworn to, then every such justice or justices shall issue his or their war-ant or warrants under his hand and seal, or their hands and seals, for levy ing thereof within his or their jurifdiction, by divers on the goods and chattels of every such offender or offenders, and to cause false to be made of such goods and chattels; in case the money forfeited, together with the charges of such divers any offence shall be committed against this act, shall, notwithstanding such inhabitancy, be a good and competent witness.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that if any plaint, action or suit shall be commenced or prosecuted against any person or persons, for what he or they shall do or have done in perjury or in execution of this act, the same shall be commenced within six months after the offence committed; and shall be laid in the county or city where the offence shall have been committed, and such person or persons so sued, in any court whatsoever, shall and may plead the general issue, Not guilty, and may give this act and the special matter in evidence, at any trial to be had thereon:

And if a verdict shall be found for the defendant or defendants, or if the plaint shall be nonsuit, or if the defendant shall have appeared; or if judgment shall be given, upon a demurrer, against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants in every such action shall recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant or defendants hath or have in other cases for recovery of his or their costs.

3. Cases adjudged upon these statutes.

Apples. Information in the Exchequer upon the statute of 5 & 6 Ed. 6, for the ingrossing of apples, being detrimental to vitual, the defendant pleaded and was found guilty; the offenders being a coftermonger; and it was thereupon demurred, that it was out of the statute, and not such vitual as the law intends: And it was adjudged accordingly, and error thereof brought in the Exchequer-Chamber; and, upon conference, the two chief justices resolved, that it was not within the statute: And Coke said, there was not any thing prohibited within the statute, but it had a proviso, how, in some kind, it might be bought; but there was not such proviso for apples; therefore it never was intended to be restrained; and for that cause the judgment was affirmed.

Upon an indictment preferred 22 Car. 2, at the assizes at Kent, against one ingrofing apples, pears and cherries, framed upon the statute made against engrossers of vituals, the defendant pleaded and was found guilty; formerly judgment was arrested, and the counsel heard. Edward Johnson of the inner Temple prayed for judgment for the defendants to be kept as heretofore what had been objected formerly; and that upon these reasons: 1. Because that apples, pears and cherries are vituals within the statute; and that because the statute is not to be abridged; and the statute of 2 Ed. 6. made concerning forfeitures, expounded this statute, that apples, pears and cherries, for the frumenty or called fellers of vituals; and for Bois his case that is objected that apples are not vituals, it is not to be meant of all sorts of vitual in a general acceptation, and without doubt ingrossing of them is ingrossing at the Common law. Salt is no vitual praef, nor is used as vitual in any country; yet it is there said to be vitual. But apples are vitual praef, no coftermongers are called vitualers by their charters. Rolli, Chief Justice said, that 4 Jac. apples were adjudged no vituals; and after, upon a writ of error, this judgment was affirmed in the Exchequer-Chamber, and therefore the same judgment is not to be questioned over; and if they should be adjudged vituals, the trade of the coftermongers would be destroyed; and for salt, it is no vitual, but a preparation of vitual; and hops were adjudged to be no vitual, 20 Jac. upon a reference made to the judge. Neither are apples to be accounted corns, as the statute renders, for the statute did not say so. Afterwards, in judgment, Julicke,diffed, and Nicolait, Julicke, held, That apples are vitual within the statute, because they are better than salt. Aft, Julicke, held, That apples are vitual, but not within the statute; for a statute cannot alter by reason of time, but the Common law may: It was adjudged.

Barley and beans. In an information, because the defendant, between the 20th of June 2 Jac. and the 4th of July next after, at Wiltnings, in the county of Middlesex, did buy, ingrof and obtain in his hands, by buying and contracting of divers persons unknown, three hundred quarters of barley, of the value of each quarter, a hundred pounds; a hundred quarters of the value of twenty shillings every quarter, ad remembranda contra formam statute, &c. whereupon an action accorded to the King and the informer, to have of the defendant four hundred pounds; etc. the value of the barley and beans, whereof the informer prayed a moiety, &c. The defendant demurred to the indictment, and the King prayed judgment for the moiety of the value of the said quarter, and for the 4th of July next after, pleased Not guilty. And as to the ingressum between the said 20th day of July 2 Jac. and the said 22d of May next after, the defendant, faith, that before the exhibiting of the said indictment, the 22d of May next after, 2 Jac. One Robert Benedet did exhibit an information in the Exchequer for the King and himself against the defendant, who between the first of June last, and the day of the said information, did ingrof five hundred quarters of wheat, of price every quarter thirty shillings; five hundred quarters of barley, of price every quarter twenty shillings; five hundred quarters of oats, of price every quarter twenty shillings; and five hundred quarters of beans and peas, of price every quarter twenty shillings, ad remembranda contra formam statute, &c. And did aver, that Stephen Balston, named in the first information, and Stephen Bunsen, his co'-defendant, made an ingressum against the said Robert Benedet, and the defendant. Upon this information it was ordered, that the defendant should be committed, or continuing his default, that the defendant shall have appeared; or if judgment should be given, upon a demurrer, against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants in every such action shall recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant or defendants hath or have in other cases for recovery of his or their costs.

his own corn; and a general issue was found upon it.

And it was delivered for the law to the jury by the justices, that a contract in market for corn not in the market, or which was not there that day, is not within the branch of the statute. But if corn or grain be in the market, and which the court of eaters do not hear of out of the market, and delivered to the vendee out of the market, yet it is within the statute. And in the argument of that case, Anderson said, that the market shall be falsely said, the place in the town where it hath used to be kept, and not every place of the town: and a sale in a market over is in London, ought to be in a place which it happens to the street, and not in chambers or inward rooms, otherwise the property is not altered. And so it is of all statutes, in open markets. And the recorder of London said, that such was the custom in London. Godsh. Rep. 131.

presse words of the act, five fishmongers, butchers, &c., act in such office for the purpose of selling fish or for ingrofng, if they buy only things belonging to their trades; for it is not the intent of the statute to restrain them, it being necessary, and for the benefit of the subje& ct, that they should buy fuch things. But the court held,

that although they be not within the statute for ingrofing, yet if they retreate and fall at unreasonable prices, they are expressly within it: And he is indicted, that he buyed ea intentions ad revendendum contra formam fluctus;

and is found guilty; so it shall be intehibited that he ingoled and did not sell at reasonable prices; and if he ingoled and sold at reasonable prices, it ought to have been flown to the jury upon evidence, as all the court agreed;

there being a provoico contained in the act, that one may take advantage by giving in evidence without formal pleading thereof. And forasmuch as he is here found guilty, it shall be intended, that he ingroled contra formam fluctus; wherefore rule was given, that judgment should be for the King against the defendant, unless other matter were flown to the contrary, upon the Monday following; at which day Grifinyon moved, that the trial was empted by the 13 Eliz. c. 53. as I regign viciualis; to which the court agreed, and also that the defendant was a licensed bager, and by that too exempted from the penalty of the statute. And it was held by Hale, chief baron, that any thing in the same statute upon which the suit is commenced, may be given in evidence; but if it be in another suit, it must be pleaded; but that since the statute 21 Jac. 1. upon the general fines, any thing

may be given in evidence in excuse of the party, and

And as to the three hundred and eighty quarters of the said wheat, they found the defendant Not guilty; and as to the twenty quarters residue, they found that the defendant, the first of September 10 Jac, and continuing afterwards till the 20th of August next following, at the said city, did ufe the art and trade of flarch-making; and that he, on the 21st of September 15 Jac, did get into his hands, by buying, and not by devise or lease, twenty quarters of wheat, residue of the said four hundred, to the intent to convert the same into flarch; and on the 20th of October in the same year did convert the same into flarch; and the 26th of October did sell the same to several persons; and the said quarter of wheat, of the 21st of September, was of price thirty-six shillings. 4. Pleadings.

Upon the statute of 5 Ed. 6. of ingroffers, if the information be, that the defendant hath bought corn, &c. it is not sufficient; for the words of the statute are, get into his hands. 2 Leon. 39.

Indictment for forfelling, by buying fifth at Billingsgate; and held by Halt at nift prit, that the party was Not guilty; for Billingsgate was a market time out of mind; and so the party was acquitted; and by him, it was otherwise, all the forforners were liable to prosecution. Note; This was at the instance of that company against a poor woman that cried fifth. 1 Show. Rep. 293. Halt’s Rep. 343. S. C. Mich. 3 W. & M. 348. The indictment was brought by the Attorney General against the defendant, founded on the statute of Edw. 6. for that he had sold cabbage alive in Norfít within the space of five weeks after he had bought them by which he had forfeited double the value of the cattle. Upon Not guilty pleaded, there was a verdict against the defendant moved, on the ground of judgment, that no such information would lie in this court, because the statute 21 Jac. expressly enacts, That all informations brought by the Attorney General upon any penal statute in any of the courts at Westminster, shall be void and of no effect. But, on the other hand, it was endeavoured to distinguish this case from those cases upon statutes, which give juftices of peace in their fiefs the ordinary jurisdiction only because this statute of 6 Ed. 6. gives the fiefs power to proceed upon it, as well in a summary way, by examining two witnifees to the fact (which is an extraordinary jurisdiction) as by trial by a jury. And it was never intended by the statute 21 Jac. to confine any proceedings to inferior courts, but in cases only where the trial of the fact is directed by the statutes to be by jury in such courts, because of the great consideration a good common law. But this statute allows no trial but that of twelve men on oath. But the court, upon reading both the statutes, was of opinion, that, since it was clear the defendant might have been prosecuted at the fessions, by way of indictment upon the statute, no other court could proceed upon it, with the restraint of the statute 21 Jac. and against the express words thereof, it being an information by the Attorney General. That it had been always ruled, this statute 21 Jac. does not give any new jurisdiction to justices of peaces, justices of oyer and terminer, &c. where they had did before; and therefore it does not extend to any penal laws, upon which the prosecutions can only be in the superior courts at Westminster. And upon this reason are the opinions founded in those books, where it hath been held, that an action of debt upon a penal law will not lie in the inferior courts; a plea in no action can be commenced before the courts of fessions, or before justices of nisi prius, or oyer and terminer. The information was quashed. Caris. 465.

Information in the Common Pleas upon the statute 5 Ed. 6. of ingrossing; and the judgment was, that he be a criminal in more or in fewer degrees; because, an information against the statute. Adjourned. 2 Ed. Rep. 400. Poph. 21 Jac. 1.

In an information exhibited upon the statute of 5 Ed. 6. cap. 14. for ingrossing, or corn, divers stacks of corn, and it is by this word cumulus, the certainty of this word was so great, it was brought against the cumulus is; for by this non confort curiae, upon this information, for what he should be found guilty by the 7 H. 4. fol. 30. In an action of rent, the quantity of land ought to be shewed, out of which the rent is flowing. Coke, Chief Justice, I never did see an information in this kind, before. He was of opinion, that the information was bad but not by this word cumulus, being altogether uncertain; for the name might be an heap thrifled, or in thocks, but most properly when thrifled; here it is altogether uncertain; quodam partis terra, not good for uncertainly, 11 H. 4, and in an ejecution firmæ for a ridge of land, not good, being uncertain; for that in some countries a ridge of land is more, and in some countries less; also a deinitio lieth not de una cumula, no indictment can be de una cumula triticæ, pre- tit, this is not good for uncertainly. Dodderidge, Justice: The right hand bar to this information is framed upon a penal law, and therefore the certain quantity of corn ingrossed ought to appear to the court: And it was never heard to have an action brought for an heap of salt. Houghton, Justice: An ejection firmæ brought de una cumulæ, vortæ, Green acre, is not good. Coke: We have adjudged this to be bad for uncertainity: præcepit good reddat vigilii liberatæ terræ, in ancient time this was good; but now explors of illa opinis, for the same ought to contain certainty, or not good, because of the haberes facias poffidénum; and therefore certainty ought to appear, or not good; the whole course of the opinion, but the information here was not good, for the uncertainity in it 2 Bull. 317. 12 Jam. 1. in B. R. Information against a forfeller, who pleaded guilty, and prayed the court to mitigate the forfeiture. Coke, on hearing the facts, 5 Ed. 6. cap. 14. reasoned that they might mitigate the forfettice, because it was only the value. 1 Rel. Rep. 194. One was indicted on the statute 5 Ed. 6. as a forfeller; and the indictment was, that he met with his 5. S. at D. near BridiJ, and bought so much lead of him, which was to be had at BridiJ market. It was objected, that the indictment was ill, because it did not set forth that 5. S. was coming towards the market with the lead; for the statute is, that a forfeller is he, who buys any thing of one coming to market with it, and the averment ought to be, that it was coming to the market at that time. 1 Rel. Rep. 421. Mich. 14 Jac. 1.

ment, it being parcel of the flature, and not in nature of a condition subjicent, which is to be alleged by him that will take advantage thereof. 2 Roll. Rep. 33. 10 Joc. 1. in B.R.

The defendant as spinster, alias the wife of William Fower, was indicted on 5 Ed. 6. cap. 14. for ingrossing;
in arrest of judgment, Symon excepted, that she being a feme covert, her husband ought to be joined, because a feme covert cannot ingross. 3fors. for the plaintiff, that as Hob. 93. Mary and Hafey, the husband shall not be joined, inasmuch as a covert, the alias ditt. to the wife of such a man, that this is no sufficient alle¬ gation, the is a wife, and so doth not appear on record.
2. she is not chargeable without the husband, as Hob.
93. Mary and Hafey: And Dr. Hafey's cafe, the flature only, and in the same ground hold in ingrossing, gives only a penalty, and no corporal punishment; the husband cannot be joined to the wife in an indictment, as in an action or information for her offence. Twijlen doubted this alias ditt. void, albeit in criminal cafes the alias be good, and the clerks agreed, that in indictments
the husband is never named, but only in informations.
3. Twijlen doubted the wife cannot be said to fell or in¬ grofs; but per cur. The wife may as well ingrofs and fell, as convert or ejdum, which must be actually proved against the wife; and the court agreed the addition is never put in the alias ditt. but all conceived, that after verdict the man may be found guilty, and if so found, the usual usual, and doth not necessarily imply the was a wife, but so called; and judgment pro rege nifi. Afterwards, in the same term, Symon, for the defendant, that the being a feme covert, no judgment can be against her for ingross¬ ing and selling one hundred of muckarrel upon the flature, all the hath being her husband's; and the doth here insufficiently appear to be a feme covert by the alias ditt. which is as applicable to her as such, as otherwise, therefore shall be intended fuch; sed non ailatute; for the alias ditt. is nothing, and the verdict hath found her guilty, which they could not do the the a feme covert; and this may be sufficent for error in fact, that she was coverts; and judgment pro rege; and after she was fined fifteen shillings, the value, &t. 2 Kob. Rep. 468, 469,

Indictment for ingrossing upon 5 Ed. 6. exception was taken to this indictment given in ingrossing, and it was infuficent, that the information ought to have been brought in Norfolk where the fact was done, and not in Middlesex; and that the flature of the 21 Joc. 1. was made for the cafe of the subject. On the other side it was objected, that the King's Bench is not restrained, and that the Attorney General may exhibit informations in this court for the King notwithstanding the flature; and he cited Latich 192. 1 Sid. 360. 2 Keb. 340. 2 Ven. 8. 973. 3 Keb. 247. 2 Crs. 178. 3 Ed. 176. 114. &t. 12. tion: First, That the 21 Joc. 1. cap. 4. does not ex¬ tend to any offence created since that flature, so that pro¬ cutions on subsequent penal flatures are not restrained thereby; but that flature is as it were, re¬ pealed, and the nature of the case shown; Secondly, that the usual actions on penal flatures made before that act, must by force of 21 Joc. 1. cap. 4. be laid, brought and prosecuted in the proper county where the fact was Forfuiture, (Forfuitura, from the Fr. forfait, trepissum, transgression, crime,) Signifieth rather the effect of transgressing a penal law, than the transgression itself; as forfuiture of estates. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 2. Stat. de Prud. testament. Cent. 31.

Forfuiture is a word often made use of in the law, and in Civil cases is usually applied to alienations and disposotions made by those who have but a particular estate or interest in lands or tenements, as the right of those in remainder or reversion: Also the omission or neglect of a duty, by the party binds himself to perform, or to the performance of which he is injoyned by the law, and is upon the breach or neglect thereof called a forfuiture, that is, the advantages accruing from the performance of the thing are by this omission defeated and determined. 2 B. & A. 175.

In this sense of the word, the principal matters relating to forfuitures are considered under other titles; and therefore in this place it is thought proper to consider it chiefly as it relates to crimes and offences, for which the party is punished in his estate and polity.

1. For what crimes an offender shall forfeit his lands, and his goods and chattels, by the Common law.
2. For what crimes by statute.
3. To what time the forfuiture shall have relation; and what is to be done with the offender's goods before conviction.
4. How for, the offender's blood is corrupted; and in what cases the wife shall lose her dower.

For what crimes an offender shall forfeit his lands, and his goods and chattels, by the Common law.

By the Common law, all lands of inheritance whereof the offender is seized in his own right, and also all rights of entry to lands in the hands of a wrong-doer, are forfeited to the King. 39 Ed. 1. attainer of high treason, although the lands are held of another; for there is an exception in the oath of fealty, which frees the tenant's allegiance to the King; so that if he forfeits his allegiance, even the lands held of another lord are forfeited to the King, for the lord himself cannot give out lands but upon that condition. Ca. Lit, 9, 3 Inf. 19.

Also upon an attainer of petit treason or felony, all lands of inheritance whereof the offender is seized in his own right, as also all rights of entry to lands in the hands of a wrong-doer, are forfeited to the lord of whom they are immediately holden; for this by the feudal law was deemed a breach of the tenant's oath of fealty in the highest manner, his body with which he had ingaged to serve the lord being forfeited to the King, and thereby his blood corrupted, so that no person could represent him; and consequently dying without heir the lord is in by echeate. 3 Inf. 19.

If the lord can't enter into the lands holden of him upon an echeate for petit treason or felony, without a special grant, till it appear by due process, that the King hath had his prerogative of the year, day and waile, Stamford P. C. 191. 2 How. P. C. 448.

And as to this, the statute of Prerogativa Regis (1 Ed. 2.) it seems to have been generally holden, that the King hath a right, not only to waste the lands of inheritance, which a person attainted of felony held immediately of any other lord, but also to hold them over for a year and day; and by some he had always this right, but according to others he had but a right only; in other cases he was holden in lieu of the right of

As to lands whereof a person attainted of high treason died seised of an estate in for, they are actually vested in the King without any office, because they can't defend, the blood being corrupted, and the freehold shall be in abeyance.

4 Co. 58. 62.

It is said, that the inheritance of things not lying in tenure, as of rent-charge, rent-fee, commons, &c. are forfeited to the King by an attainer of high treason; and that the profits of them are also forfeited to him by an attainer of felony during the life of the offender, and that the profits only shall be extinguisht by death, for it can't echeate, because it lies not in tenure; neither can it defend, because the blood is corrupted. 3 Inf. 19, 21. 2 How. P. C. 449.

It seems agreed, that no right of action to lands of inheritance could ever be forfeited; neither could a right of entry to lands held of another be forfeited; for an estate is not an use, (except where land had been fraudulently conveyed with an intent to avoid a forfuiture;) nor a condition forfeited before § H. 8. neither could land in tail be forfeited after the making of Wifem. 2, any longer than for the life of the tenant in tail, till § 26 H. 3. The profits of lands, whereof one attainted of felony is seised of an estate of inheritance in his wife's right, or of an estate for life only in his own right, are forfeited to the King and nothing shall all go to the lord. Inf. 19. Fins. Affiff 166. Forfuiture 23. 4 Inf. pl. 4.

All customary estates of inheritance are forfeited by an attainer of treason or felony, unless there be some particular custom to the contrary, as in Gavelkind, because the person attainted of higher mortuary in the attainer, and therefore could not be holden to have or hold any estate, or take any property in any thing; and therefore if a person be seised in fee of a copyhold, and be attainted of treason or felony, the copyhold is in the lord without any preientment of the homage, because it is against the nature of a court bar to inquire of criminal matters or offences against the King and such homages as appertain to the person of the lord, but often influenced by him; but if a copyholder be convicted of felony, and prented by the homage, by a special custom, the estate may be forfeited to the lord; but this is only by the special custom, since the copyholder is not by the conviction to hold the estate, as he is if he were attainted; and therefore since it is by the custom only that such forfuiture accrues, it must be in the manner which the custom has betted it, which is by the preientment of the homage; but if a copyhold is granted for life, or by another copy the reviernent is granted to another, the land, after the death of the first copyholder, shall surrender, forfuiture, or other determination of the first estate; the first copyholder comms murder, and is thereof attainted, the King pardons the murder and the attainer, and all forfuitures thereby; in this case, he is in the reviernent is intitled to the estate; for the King can't have it for the benefices of the tenure, since he can't be tenant at will to any person; and the lord can't have it, because he can't be tenant to himself; therefore the particular estate of tenant for life being exstinguished, the reviernent immediately commences. 1 Boulf. 12. 2 Brunswick, 217. Lang. Gavelkind 17. Gen. L. 154, 159. 5 Lev. 163. 2 Kohe 451. 2 Ven. 38. 5 Co. 117. Ca. Cap. sect. 53. Pelles, 615 to 621.

As to forfeitue of goods and chattels, all things whatsoever which come under the notion of a personal effate, and which a man is intitled to in his own right, whether they are movables or immovables, are forfeitable in the following infances to the King, for the trouble and charge he has been in at holding courts, and bringing the offender to justice. Staund. Prerog. 45. 46. 12 Co. 12.

All personal things fetty by way of trufl on the offender are as much forfeited, as if he had the legal intereat, for a copy, if there be no special forfuiture, is taken in another's name, or a lease made to another in trust for a person who is afterwards convicted of treason or felony; these are as much liable to be forfeited, as a bond made to him in his own name, or a lease in possession. Cro. Jur. 312. Heb. 214.
A man forfeits all such personal estate in the following instances:

1. Upon a conviction of treason or felony, as is clearly agreed by all the books. 5 Co. 109. And therefore a person convicted of manslaughter, and making purification, as was the ancient practice, or burnt in the hand according to the present, forfeits all goods, land, and chattels, but not his body. By the King hath left a subject; and therefore the party is punishable, though in a more gentle manner than when there is a fatal and deliberate revenge. 5 Co. 110. But a person convicted of hereby forfeited neither lands nor goods, because the proceedings against the person are not fatal to the same. Doel & Stud. lib. 2. cap. 29. Hale’s P. C. 5.

2. Upon the coroner’s inquest taken on a view of a dead body, and finding him guilty either as principal or as accessory before the fact, and that he fled for the same, whereby he forfeits his goods absolutely, and the issues of him and the heirs of his body, unless acquired or pardoned. Stann. P. C. 183. Hale’s P. C. 271. Kelso, 68 b. Dyer 239. pl. 36. 5 Co. 110.

3. Upon a jury’s finding that the defendant fled at the same time that they acquit him of an indictment of capital felony, or, as some say, of larceny, before judgments of oyer, etc., but such a finding causes no forfeiture of the issues of the land, because by the acquittal the land is discharged; neither will it have any effect as to the goods, if the indictment were insufficient, or if the flight be disproved on a traverse, which, as all agree, may be taken to any felony, except that by a coroner’s inquest of such same felony, except to that person, and to him to the flight, as of the particulars of the goods. Kelso, 68. 5 Co. 110. Hale’s P. C. 271. Stannard, 185.

4. The goods of perons outlawed are forfeited to the King, for the retiring from the inquiries of justice is held to criminal in the eye of the law, that it is punished with loss of goods so long as the outlawry stands in force. So if a person make default till the award of an exorcist, either upon an appeal or indictment of a capital felony, he forfeits his goods, unless he was pardoned before the award was executed; and it is held, that the law is the same as to such a default upon an indictment of petit larceny, and that whereon goods are forfeited, they are faved by an acquittal at the trial; but by a reaffirmal of the award the exorcist are freed, whether such reaffirmal be for an error either in fact or in law, as for the imprisonment of the defendant, or at the time the exorcist was awarded, whether in the bill of attainder, or in the process. 5 Co. 110, 111. 5. If a man be feared, or, if a felon be killed, or if a robbery be committed, or by refilling in order to escape, he forfeits his goods and chattels; for when a man thus for- fakes life, all his goods and chattels are demise’d; and therefore the King shall have them as the maintainer of publick justice. 5 Co. 109. Finc. Coram. 289, 312. Stannard. P. C. 184. 3 Jiff. 56, 277. Pleaf. 260.

6. If a felon waivers, that is, leaves any goods in his flight from those who either pursue him, or are apprehended by him for his disorders, his goods are forfeited to the King, his own goods, or goods stolen by him; and at Common law, if the owner did not pursue and appeal the felon, he, the goods for ever; but by the 21 H. 8. cap. 11, for encouraging the prosecution of felons, it is provided, that if the parties come in as evidence on the indictment, and attain the felon, he shall not have restitution. 5 Co. 109. 3 Jiff. 134. Cor. Elia. 694. sid. 2 Hacket. P. C. 170.

And here we may observe a difference between goods waived, stray, and the like, and goods forfeited for felony or flight, which it has been observed, goods forfeited for felony are not in the King without issue, but an office founded of such felony or flight, because the property can’t alter without matter of record; but goods waived are in the King without office, because there the property is in nobody, and therefore by publick agreement is put out of the finder, in which it is vested in the State, and is vested in the King as a recompense for his trouble and charge in the execution of justice. 5 Co. 109. Foxley’s case.

2. For what crimes by statute.

By the 26 H. 8. cap. 13, it is enacted, 4 That every offender and offenders being hereafter lawfully convicted of any manner of high treason by presentment, confession, verdict or precepts of outlawry, according to the due course and custom of the Common laws of this realm, shall lose and forfeit all his lands and goods, such offices, all such lands, tenements and hereditaments, which any such offender or offenders shall have of any estate of inheritance in use or possession, by any right, title or means, within the realm of England, or elsewhere within any of the King’s dominions, at the time of any such treason committed, or at any time after. All persons, every peron and persons, their heirs and successors, other than the offenders in any treasons, their heirs and successors, and such peron and persons as claim to any of their uses, all such rights, titles, interés, possessions, leaves, rents, offices, and was pro, while they shall have at the day of committing such treasons, or at any time before, in such large and ample manner, as if this act had never been had nor made.

And by the 33 H. 8. cap. 20, it is also enacted, 6 That if any peron or persons shall be attainted of high treason, by the due course of this realm, in every such case every such attainted by the Common law shall be of as good strength, value, force and effect, as if it had been done by authority of parliament; and that the King, his heirs and successors shall have much benefit and advantage by such attainer, as well of fues, rights, entries, endowments, as possessions, revivers, remains, and all other things, as if it had been done and declared by authority of parliament; and shall be deemed and adjudged in actual seisin and possession of the lands, tenements, hereditaments, fues, or any possession, that is in all other things of the offenders so attainted, which his highness ought lawfully to have, and which they beimg so attainted, ought or might lawfully lose or forfeit, if the attainted had been done by authority of parliament, without any office or inquisition to be be found of the same; any law, statute, or use of the realm to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

Saying to all and every peron and persons, and body politic, and their heirs, affigns and successors, and every of them, (other than such persons and persons, which hereafter shall be attainted of high treason, and their heirs and affigns and every of them and all and every other person and persons claiming by them or any of them, or to their use, or to the uses of any of them, after the said treason committed,) all such right, title, use, possession, entry, revivers, remains, interés, conditions,
In the construction of these statutes the following opinions have been held. 1. That neither of these statutes are repealed by the 1 Mar. 21. 2. That in the construction of the statute is as follows: therefore the parties to the deed, or if the only one, that the revocation be under his hand and seal, without saying any thing about changing his mind; or as some say, if it only require the tender of a ring by the party, info aduoc declarante his intent, &c. 7 Co. 14, 13.

That neither an annuity granted pro confitio impecuniosa, nor an office granted for life, and requiring fief and confirmation, are forfeitable by these statutes; but such office in fee simple, was not granted without the grantor in giving an estate defensible to all the heirs of the grantee, however unqualified, appears not to have been induced to make his grant from the consideration of the peculiar merit of the persons who are to execute the office. Plow. 381. Plow. 379.

By an act of parliament made 13 Car. 2, it was enacted, That all the manors, franchises, lands, tenements, possessions and revenues, remainders, rights, interests, hereditaments, leases, chattels real, and other things of what nature soever, that Sir John Danvers, or any other to his use, or in truth for him, had the 25th of March 1646, or at any time after, should be forfeited to the King; and it was adjudged, that all interests of what nature soever, an estate-tail was forfeit.

But it is holden, that the statutes of premonitory, which gives a general forfeiture of all the lands and tenements of the offender, extend not to land in tail. Co. Lit. 127.

It is agreed, that a dying against a corruption of blood in a faitue concerning felon y saves the land to the heir, because the echeat to the lord for felony is only de jure tenement, occasioned by the corruption of blood; also the faving the land to the heir, saves the corruption of blood and fees of dower. Hale's P. C. 8. 3 infra. 47.

But a dying against the corruption of blood in a statute concerning the offender, does not save the land to the heir, because the land goes to the King by way of immediate forfeiture, and not by way of echeat, 1 Salk. 85.

3. To what the forfeiture shall have relation; and what is to be done with the offender's goods before convicition.

The forfeiture upon an attainer of treason or felony shall have relation to the time of the offence, for the avoiding all subsequent alienations of the lands, but to the time of the conviction, or ftagium facti found, &c. only as to chattels, unless the party were killed in flying from, or retreating those who had arrested him; in which case it is said, that the forfeiture shall relate to the time of the forfeiture. Plow. 488. b. Co. Lit. 2 b. 8 Co. 170.

But if the time proved varies from that laid in the indictment, and the jury find the defendant guilty generally, the forfeiture shall relate to the time laid, till the verdict be baffled by the party interested, as it may be in this respect, tho' not as to the point of the offence. Hale's P. C. 264, 270. 3 infra. 250. But if the jury find the defendant guilty on the day on which the fact is proved, whether before or after the day laid in the indictment; in such case the forfeiture shall relate to the day of the guilty found. Kelp. 14. Hale's P. C. 264, 2 infra. 318. 3 infra. 230.

No attainer whatsoever shall have any relation as to the mean profits of the lands of the person attainted, but only from the time of the attainer. 8 Co. 170. Plow. 272.

It hath always been held, that one indicted or accused of treason or felony may, bona fide, fell any of his chat tels real or personal, for the sustenance of himself and family, until they be actually forfeited. 3 Co. 171.

But where a perfon being in Newgate for robbery and bargulry, before conviction, made a bill of sale of all his goods and chattels, and did not immediately free them by the for feiture the sheriff of London, it was held by Hall, that the bill was fraudulent, and that though a false, bona fide, for a valuable consideration had been good, because the party had a property in the goods till conviction, and ought to be reasonably restrained from them, yet that such a conveyance as this cannot be intended to any other purpose than to prevent a forfeiture, and defraud
the King; and this he said was a fraud at Common law.

It seems the better opinion, at this day, that before in deed the goods of the offender cannot be searched and invented, and that after indictment they cannot be feized and taken away till the felon is convicted, for till the conviction the property remains in the felon.

And by the 25 Ed. 3. cap. 14, it is enacted, "That no such, under the title, nor escheator, build up of traitor, or any other perfon, take or seize the goods of any perfon arrested or imprisoned for suspicion of felony,

And at Common law it was no plea for such town-

the Exchequer by effect of the judicess of the chattels him another which is chargeable, he shall be heard, and right done to the other. 2 Hawk. P. C. 456.

4. How for the offender's blood is corrupted; and in cobfet the wife shall live her deuer.

It is clearly agreed, that by an attainder of treason or felony, the blood of the offender is so far stained and cor-rupped, that the party loses all the nobility or gentility he might have had before, and becomes ignoble. Cut. Lit.

Also it is clearly agreed, that he can neither inherit as heir to any ancestor, nor have an heir, and the policy of the law herein is to make men more mindful of their allegiance, and to deter them from taking up arms against the crown; for as the natural love men have for their parents, often reforms them from actions which would prejudice them, either by instilling the infamy of such actions on them, or making them sharers in the punishment which the law has appointed for such offends: so men are lesa careful of their perons, when their misformalities will neither involve their children in guilt or pu-

Therefore it is laid down as a pure rule, that where-title to the remainder, which they cannot do, because to make title to the remainder, they must bring them- selves within the words of the gift; and the innocent daughter cannot take upon her the character of Co heir alone, since they both make but one heir to the ancestor; and both cannot join, because one is attainted, and incapable of that character. Co. Lit. 163. b.

Although a person attainted be to many purposes looked upon as dead in law, yet he hath a capacity to purchase land, which the King, shall have upon office found, and not the lord of the fee, because his person being forfeited to the King, he can't purchase but for the King. Co. Lit. 2. b.

But if a man attainted be pardoned by act of parliatment he may purchase as before, for he is totally refor-ed and interdicted to all persons; but if he be pardoned by charter, he may thereupon purchase lands, but can't inherit his former relations; for the King's charter can't alter the law, or take away the right of others, or restore the relation that was lost. Co. Lit. 8. a. 391, b. 392. b.

If a man be attainted, and after pardoned by charter, the children born before such pardon shall not inherit; but if they fall, the children born after the pardon may inherit; for the pardon makes him capable of new relations as well as of new purchasings, tho' all the old legal benefits and relations are lost. Noy. 170. Co. Lit. 8. a. 3 Infy. 233.

Before the statute of 1 E. 6, cap. 12, the wife not only lost her dower at Common law, but also her dower under an ex-offusio partis, or by special custom (except that of gavelkind,) by the husband's attainted of treason or capital felony, whether committed before or after the marriage. Co. Lit. 31. b. 37. a. 41. A. N. B. 150. Perk. ftet. 308. Brn. tit. Dower 82. Plow. 261.

But the wife forfeited lands given jointly to her huband and her, whether by way of frank-marriage or otherwise, but only for the year and day and waite. Co. Lit. 37. 3 Infy. 216.

It is enacted by 1 E. 6. cap. 12. par. 17. That albeit any person shall be attainted of any treason or felony whatsoever; yet notwithstanding every woman, that shall promise to be the wife of the person so attainted, shall be endowable and enabled to demand, have, and enjoy her dower, in like manner and form as her husband had not been attainted, &c.

But this is repealed as to treason by 5 & 6 E. 6. cap. 11. par. 9. by which it is enacted, "That the wife, whole husband shall have been attainted of any treason whatsoever, shall in no wise be received to, or challenge, demand, or have dowry of any the lands, tenements or hereditaments of the person so attainted, during the time attainted in force."

If the husband feised of lands in fee makes a feudment, and then commits treason, and is attainted of it, the wife shall not recover dower against the feodee. Bendl. 56. Dyer 140. Co. Lit. 111. a.

So if the husband is attainted of treason, and afterwards pardoned, yet the wife shall not recover dower; but of lands purchased by the husband after the pardon, the wife shall be endowed. 3 Lecr. 6. Perk. flat. 391.

If a husband have been levied fines with proclamation, it is erroneously attainted of treason, and the five years pass after his death, and then the outlawry is reversed, the fine and nonclaim are no bar till five years after the recovery, because the wife could not sue for her dower while the attendant flood in force, neither could she any way revenge it. 3 Infy. 216. Mau 239. pl. 87.

After the making of the statute 1 E. 6. cap. 12. it seems to have been doubted, whether the wife should not lose her dower in case of any new felony made by act of parliament; and therefore where several offences have been made felony since, care has been taken to provide for her to recover. 2 Bac. Ab. 524. See also 12 Fin. Ab. tit. Forfeiture.
The notion of forgery does not so much consist in the counterfeiting a man's hand and seal, which may often be done innocently, but in the endeavouring to give an appearance of a more decent andfallacy; and either to impose that upon the world as the solemn act of another, which he is no way privy to, or at least to make a man's own act appear to have been done at a time when it was not done, and by force of such a fallacy to give it an operation, which in truth and justice ought not to have any effect. 1 Hawk. P. C. 183. 2 Roll. Abs. 28, 29.

II. Case 27.

Hence it is held to be forgery for a man to make a false impression of certain lands to J. S. and afterwards make a deed of severalty of the same lands to J. D. of a date prior to that of the severalty to J. S. for herein he falsifies the date in order to defraud his own seffee by making a second conveyance, which at the time he had no power to make. 3 Inst. 169. Pult. 46. b. 27 Fl. H. 3. 1 Hawk. P. C. 182.

Also it is forgery for a man, who is ordered to draw a will, to frame in his own head into that of another's, and thus convey to him certain legacies in it of his own head. 1 Nut. 101. 2 Hawk. 759, 760. 3 Inst. 170. 1 Hawk. P. C. cont. Dyre 283 b.

So if one infects into an indiction the names of those against whom in truth it was not found, this is forgery. 3 Med. 466. 1 Hawk. P. C. 183.

So the like may come at the bottom of a letter, at a considerable distance from the other writing, causes the letter to be cut off, and a general reference to be written above the name, and takes off the seal and fixes it under the release. 3 Inst. 171. 1 Hawk. P. C. 183.

Also the making any fraudulent alteration of the form of a true deed, in a material part of it, is forgery; as the making a leaf of the manor of Dale appear to be a leaf of the manor of Sale, by changing the letter D into an S, or by making a bond for five hundred pounds expressed in figures to have been made in the first hand, adding a new cypher. Mar 659. 1 Hawk. P. C. 183.

But in 3 Inst. 169. Lord Coke seems to think, that a deed so altered is more properly to be called a falsa than a forged deed; but by Jeramie Hawkins this is forgery; for a man's hand and seal are as falsely made use of as a forged hand. So if such an alteration is no more his deed than a stranger's. 1 Hawk. P. C. 183.

But as the fraud and intention to deceive, by imposing upon the world that as the act of another, which he never conformed to, are the chief ingredients which constitute this offense, so it hath been held, that he who writes a deed in another's name, and seals it in his presence, and by his command, is not guilty of forgery; because the law looks upon this as the other's own feeling, as done by his approbation and command. Pain. 40. 21 H. 6. 4 b. 1 Hawk. P. C. 183.

If a man writes a will for another without any directions from him, and he for whom it is written becomes non compos before it is brought to him, it is not forgery; for it is not the bare writing an instrument in another's name without his privity, but the giving it a false appearance of having been executed by him, which makes him guilty of forgery. 2 Inst. 760.

Also he can't be punished as guilty of forgery, who raseth out the word libris out of a bond made to himself, and puteth in marcis, because here is no appearance of a fraudulent design to cheat another, and the alteration is made by a man's own consent, to suit who makes it, whose security for his money is wholly avoided by it; yet it seems to be forgery, if by the circumstances of the case it should any way appear to have been done with an eye of gaining an advantage to the party himself, or of prejudicing a third person; also it is holden, that such an alteration, even without those circumstances, is a misdemeanor, that it be not forgery. Mar 619. 1 Nut. 99. 1 Salis. 375.

It seems, that by a bare non-falsity a man can't be said to be guilty of forgery; as if a man in drawing a will omit a legatee, which he is directed to inherit, yet it hath been holden, that if the omission of a bequest to one cause a material alteration in the limitation of a bequest to another, as where the omission of a devise of an estate for life to one man caueth a devise of the same lands to another to pass a present estate, which otherwise would have been utterly void, he who makes such an omission is guilty of forgery. Mar 760. 1 Nut. 101.

But it seems to be no way material, whether a forged instrument be made in such a manner, that it were in truth such as it is counterfeited for, it would be of validity or not; and upon this ground it hath been adjudged, that the forgery of a bond for five hundred pounds, by a man being a member of parliament, who in truth, at that time was not a member, is as much a crime as if he were. 1 Hawk. P. C. 184. 1 Sid. 142.

It is clearly agreed, that at Common law the counterfeiting a matter of record is forgery; for since the law gives the highest credit to all records, it can't but be of the utmost ill consequence to the publick to have them either forged or falsified. 1 Roll. Abs. 65. 76. 7 Ven. 140. Cre. Eisz. 178. 1 Mtd. 646.

Also it is agreed to be forgery to counterfeit any other authentic matter, as a publick nature, as a privy seal, or licence from the barons of the Exchequer to compound a debt, or certificate of holy orders, or a protection from a parliament-man. 1 Roll. Abs. 68. pl. 33. Cre. Cor. 376. 1 Jnn. 325. 1 Roll. Abs. 65. pl. 5. 2 Balf. 137. 1 Lott. 139. 1 Sid. 142.

It is also understood, that a man may be in like manner guilty of forgery at Common law by forging a deed; and therefore it seems, that one may be equally guilty by forging a will, which can't be thought to be of less consequence than a deed. 1 Roll. Abs. 66. pl. 10. Roy. 81. Owen 47. 1 Sid. 275. 3 Lott. 170. Mar 750. 1 Nut. 101. 2 Inst. 292. 1 Hawk. P. C. 184. where it is said, that he can't find this point anywhere directly holden.

There seem to be some strong opinions in the books, that the counterfeiting any writings of an inferior nature to those above mentioned, is not forgery at the Common law; also it hath been holden, that forging another's hand, and thereby receiving rent due to him from his tenants, is not punishable at all; but by Hawk. it can't be fully be proved by any good authorities, that such base crimes are wholly disfigarded by the Common law, as not deferving publick prosecution; for the opinion, that they are punishable at common law, is not certainly to be means to be maintainable, since many of them are not certainly punishable by force of 33 H. 8. cap. 1. Neither can it be a convincing argument, that they are not punishable at Common law, because they are of a private nature, as much as the writings concerning such matters; yet no one will say, that the making a false deed conceiving a private matter is not punishable at Common law; but perhaps, says he, it may be reasonable to make this distinction between the counterfeiting of such writings, the forgery whereof, as in the above cases, is properly punishable as forgery, and the counterfeiting of other writings of an inferior nature; that the forger is himself criminal, whether any third person be actually injured thereby or not; but that the latter is no crime unless some one receive a prejudice from it. 1 Roll. Rep. 437. 1 Sid. 16. 155. 451. 1 Roll. Abs. 66. pl. 8, g. "Wrench 144. 4 Mor. 3 I. 231. 1 Lott. 101. Cre. Eisz. 256, 853. 3 Balf. 265. Cre. Eisz. 166. 1 Balf. 146. 1 Hawk. P. C. 184.

But these opinions came fully to be considered in a late noted case, where it was held, that the counterfeiting a relief or acquittance for a sum of money, though without a seal, was a fraud on the General, that it would be the most injurious notion, and even a reflection on the Common law, to suppose it to defective as not to provide a remedy against offences of this nature. This case was this: An information was exhibited in the name of the Attorney General, charging that Mr. Ward, caueth unlawful delivery to the Duke of Bucks 315 tun and one quarter of alum

That this is not such a paper, of which a forgery could be committed at Common law. This is laid as an offence at Common law; and Hawkins in his Plains of the Crown 182, says, that it must be a matter of record, or any other authen tick matter of a publick nature, as a deed or will: Other writings of an inferior nature, as forging the hand of an authority to receive rent, counterfeiting a letter made in another man's name, &c. are fayings properly prohibited by the 33 H. 8. c. 1. In Eas tis. 166. it is held not actionable, to say, "You have falsely forged your father's hand, and thereby falsely procured your father's tenants to pay their rent to you!" because it would not be forgery, if it had done to 1 Rex. 3. The 32nd does not appear to deliver the allure at the time he did the fact. Exis tens mensabili is at the time of the information, and then it wants one necessary ingredient to make it a forgery at Common law, which is, that it be to somebody's damage.

Mr. Attornies, Mr. Lee, Mr. Marsh, Mr. Faukerley, and Mr. Verno, e contra argued, that this was forgery at Common law; and that it was the highest reflection upon the law, to imagine there ever was a time, where in such a fact as this was not punishable by the law of England. As to the passage in Hawkins, it is not warranted by the authorities quoted in the margin, and he has laid it down much too large. St. 12. is an indictment at Common law, for forging letters of credit to raise money, and nobody imagined it did not lie; and there is not laid that he actually received money upon it, which makes the cafe an anwer to both exceptions. 5 Mott. 137. Indictment for forging a promissory note, and laid at Common law, and never imagined it was not an offence; and the defendant was convicted. 1 Sid. 71. 3 Leon. 170. is for forging the entry of a marriage. It could not be an indictment as a cheat on the 33 H. 8. because there must be an actual obtaining upon that. The purpose of forging it is to be forged, it is not necessary to shew an actual damage, a possibility of damage is sufficient. There was no money raised in the cafe in Stiles. Atid if it was a bond, the party cannot be hurt by a forged one, and yet the forger shall be punished. The jury have found that it was done with defign to avoid the delivery, not to defraud the Duke, which is sufficient. But to take it as strong as possible, and make evident as possible to the jury the time of the information; yet favourable it will be a forgery, tho' done before the time was actually come in which he was to deliver it. If a man is to pay money at a future day; shall his forgery a releave before the day, and then he is to pay, and make the forger pay, if it be a crime? This is an offence at Common law. Mr. 619. Noy 99.

To this it was replied by Mr. Ward's Counsel; that no cafe was cited where it was determined to be an off ense at Common law, and the precedents cited paffed for salienia. That there was no reflection on the law, for this is not a forgery, but a cheat: They did not pay it was no crime, but it is one of the things, that this was an obtaining within 33 H. 8. because he obtains a right to keep that allum, which otherwise he would be obliged to deliver to the Duke. And the preamble of 5 Eliz. cap. 14, which takes notice of these offences, and calls them by their names, the thing was one of the clorta ment that was indicted at the Common law, which is an argument they were not punished as forgeries.

Per curiam: As there is no judicial authority on either side, we must take it up upon the question of the thing. There is no reason why this should not be punished as a forgery, as well as a cheat, and that there is to the great, or greater, for the value may be 100,000/. in one cafe, and a deed perhaps offers only a single acre of land. The statute 5 Eliz. shew this to be a crime, by using the words writings, in contradification to deeds. It cannot be prosecuted as a cheat at Common law, without an actual prejudice, and that is an obtaining on the 33 H. 8. the cafe cited out of Crs. is not law, and forely those words are actionable. Regina v. Travers was for ing an indorsement on an army debenture, and laid as at Common law. The reason why we do not meet with an ancient determination is, because personal cred it was not taken into the examination. It is not necessary to shew an actual prejudice, a possibility is enough; and here it appears, there would have been one, if the forgery had been. Judicium pro rege. Afterwards he was sentenced to stand in the pillory before Westminster-Hall gate, (which he did) to pay 300/. for the charge of forgery. The prosecution in the indictment till all was performed. Hil. 13 Geo. 1. The King v. Ward. Stran. 1747. L. Raym. 1464. S. C.

Indictment setting forth, that defendant intending to defraud the King, and unjustly to procure a payment to be made as that of the pay of an officer, did knowingly publish a certain fake and counterfeit affidavit, purporting to have been sworn by one Elizabeth Roe, before Thomas Engier, Esq a justice of the peace, by which means he received 5 l. 6s. 8d. of the paymaster of the King's bounty; and this was laid as an offence at Common law. After verdict for the King, it was moved in arrest of judgment, that this not being laid to be forged by the defend ant, was not an offence at Common law, but he ought to have been indicted on 33 H. 8. cap. 1. as for a fake token. Sed per curiam; Since Ward's case this can never be doubted. And it has always been held, that the statute did not create a new offence, but added a new rule, as a better means of preventing the King's fake, or falmatus. The 5 Eliz. cap. 14. reciting the forgeries at Common law, has the word writings, in contradiction to deeds: And it is in the election of the party, in the cafe of forging deeds, to lay the indictment either at Common law, or upon the statute. ing an attorney, lawyer or counsellor, he shall for his client plead, shew forth, or give in evidence such false and forged deed, &c. to the forging whereof he was not party or privy,) and shall be thereof convicted either upon action, or actions of forgery of false deeds, to be founded upon the said forgery, at the suit of the party guilty thereof, or at the suit of the person injured: this is done by the fourth and sixth clauses of the laws of this realm, &c. he shall pay unto the party griev’d his double costs and damages, to be found and ascribed in that court where such conviction shall be; and also shall be set upon the pillory in some open market-town, or other open place, and there have both his face and his hand cut off, or be cut off with a hot iron, &c. and shall forfeit to the King the whole illus and profits of his lands and tenements, and suffer perpetual imprisonment.

Sed. 3. It is enacted, "That if any person or persons, upon their own head or imagination, or by false conformation or fraud had with another, shall writing, falsly and falsely forge or make, or writingly, falsely and falsely cause or attaint to be made and forged, such false charter, deed or writing, to the intent that any person or persons shall or may invade, or claim any estate or interest in any lands, tenements or hereditaments not being copyhold, or any demesne in fee simple, fee tail, or for term of life, lives or years; or shall, as is aforesaid, forge, make or cause, or cause to be made or forged any obligation, or bill obligatory, or any acquittance, release or other discharge, or the making of a wrong deed, or the forgery of a thing personal, or shall pronounce, publish or give in evidence, except, as is before excepted, any such false or forged charter, deed, writing, obligation, bill obligatory, acquittance, release or discharge as true, knowing the same to be false and forged, and shall be thereof convicted, he, or the party he shall cause to be convicted by his order, shall pay unto the party grieved his double costs and damages, to be found and assessed in such court where the said conviction shall be had, and shall be also set upon the pillory in some open market-town, or other open place, and there have one or two years cut off, and also suffer imprisonment for one or two years, &c."

Sed. 7, 8. It is further enacted, "That if any person or persons being convicted or condemned of any of the offences aforesaid, by any the ways and means limited, shall sitter any such his or their conviction or condemnation, in faithfully, commutative or perpetually, upon any the said false offences in form aforesaid, that then every such false or other offence shall be adjudged felony without benefit of the clergy, saving to all persons other than the said offenders, and such as claim to their uses, all rights, &c. which they shall have to any the hereditaments of such false or other offence, being committed or attainted at any time before, &c. saving also the dower of such offender’s wife, and the right of his heir.

Sed. 10. It is enacted, "That all judices of oyer and terminer, and judices of assize, shall have power to inquire of, hear and determine the offences aforesaid.

But it is provided, Sed. 9, 12, 16, 18. "That this act, or any thing therein contained, shall not extend to any ordinary, or his commissary, &c. for putting their seal of office to any will to be exhibited unto them, not knowing the same to be false or forged, or for writing of wills or testaments, or for the provost, or justice, or any proctor, &c. of any ecclesiastical court; for the writing, setting forth or pleading of any proxy, made according to the Ecclesiastical law, for the appearance of any person being cited to appear in such court; nor to any archdeacon or official for putting their oaths to any will, or in the presence of the testator or procurator, &c. of any ecclesiastical court; for the writing, setting forth or pleading of any proxy, made according to the Ecclesiastical law, for the appearance of any person being cited to appear in such court; nor to any person who shall plead or pleas for any deed or writing exemplified under the Great seal of England, or under the seal of any other authentick court of this realm; nor to any person who shall cause any of any court to be set to any false or forged deed, writing, sealing, insulating; not knowing the same to be false or forged.

In the construction of this statute the following points have been held.

were intelligible; and upon this ground it hath been adjudged, that an indictment setting forth, that the defendant super caput fum præsum did forge, &c. meaning thereby to express that he did it out of his own head, is sufficient. 3 Keb. 359, 357; 3 Iom. 369. 1 Keb. 349.

2 Keb. 129. 2 Lev. 221. 1 Vent. 23, 24. 1 Salk. 370. 1st P. C. 187.

11. That upon an indictment of trepas, forgery, and publication of a deed, a verdéld finding the defendant guilty of de transfraite & forgia praevidit, proest praevidit in inditamentum jactantur, is insufficient, because there are words de transfraite & forgia praevidit, included the whole; also perhaps for a verdéld may be sufficient for another reason, because the offence is equally within the statute, and the punishment the very same, whether the party be guilty both of the forgery and publication, or of one of them only. 2 Lev. 111, 121. 3 Keb. 353.

12. That if the conveyance be defective, so as not to pass the thing intended to be conveyed, yet it is within the act, as where an indictment of forgery the error assigned was of a deed inrolled, and the acknowledgment laid eleven months after the inrollment; and it being objected, that it being a bargain and sale it can have no force, notwithstanding any binding to the party without the acknowledgment, but the court held, that admitting the acknowledgment essential, so that the inrollment was not good, unless that appeared, (which they seemed to deny) yet it was within the statute; and that there being a flaw in the conveyance forged, went to the learned magistrates, yet the party may be impeached, molested and troubled by such a deed, which makes it within the statute. 1 Keb. 707, 742, 803. The King v. Ring, and Palfich. 4 Geo. 2. 8. P. determined between The King and Grosse. See Heb. 577.

The defendant, was convicted on the statute 5 Eliz. cap. 14. for forging a leaf and release. And the indictment sets forth, that Garbut & wax were feised in fee of certain messuages, lands and tenements called Jautick in the parish of Clackton in Essex, and that the defendant forged a leaf and release as from Garbut et us', whereby they were charged for &c. a valuable consideration to convey to him, 14. all that park called Jautick Park in the parish of Clackton in Essex, containing eight miles in circumference, with all the deer, woods, &c. thereto belonging. After verdéld pro rege, it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the premises foopoked to be conveyed were so much more valuable than those which were conveyed, that it was impossible this conveyance ever could molest or disturb them; if it was a true deed it could not pass their lands at law for want of a proper description; and tho' where lands are improperly described, a court of law would not be bound to exclude any words, or that is only where there is a previous contract for a sale, and they do it as carrying that contract into execution; whereas here is no contract, and the case is no more, than if a had been sold Blackcock, and B. had forged a conveyance of Witwaters, which certainly would not be within the statute. The court for several terms inclined strongly with the objection: But this term the Chief Justice declared that they were all of opinion to over-rule it: the words of the act are, 41. to the intent that the flate of frehold or inheritance of any person to any lands, &c. on the right title of, in and to the same, shall not be molested, troubled, defeated, recovered or charged. By this it appears, that it is not necessary, there should be a charge or a possibility of a charge; it is sufficient that it be done with intent to molest Garbut and his wife in the possession of their lands. And that when there is given that the defendant had sentence to undergo the punishment appointed by the act for forging a deed, and the same was executed upon him at Charing-Croft. Ens. 4 Geo. 2. The King v. Jaffet Coresse. Stron. 901.

By the 2nd Geo. 2. cap. 25, reciting, that the laws above are not effectual for preventing the abominable crimes of forgery, it is enacted, 11. That if any person, from and after the 29th day of June in the year of our Lord 1720, shall falsely make, forge or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged or counterfeited, or willingly act or affirm in the false making, forging or counterfeiting any deed, will, testament, bond, writing obligatory, bill of exchange, promissory note for payment of money, promissory note for exchange of money, or any bill of exchange, or promissory note for payment of money, acquittance or receipt either for money or goods, with intention to defraud any person, knowing the fame to be false, forged or counterfeited; then every such person being thereof lawfully convicte, according to the due process of law, shall be deemed guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy.

Provided, that no attainer for this offence shall make or work any corruption of blood, lots of dower, or dif-herion of heirs.

And 17 Geo. 2. reciting the last above mentioned statute, and that the same does not extend to the forging of any acceptance of bills of exchange, it is enacted, 31. That if any person from and after the 24th of June 1734, shall falsely make, alter, forge or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, altered, forged or counterfeited, or willingly act or affirm in the false making, altering, forging or counterfeiting any acceptance of any bill of exchange, or the number or principal sum of any accountable receipt for any note, bill, or other security for payment of money or delivery of goods, with intention to defraud any person whatsoever, or shall utter or publish any forgery or counterfeite, or any bill of exchange, or any bill of exchange, or account book or receipt for any note, bill, or other security for payment of money or delivery of goods, with intention to defraud any person, knowing the same to be false, altered, forged or counterfeited; then every such person being thereof lawfully convicte, according to the due process of law, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and shall suffer death as a felon, without benefit of clergy.

By 2d. Jan. 7. cap. 20. Any person forging or counterfeiting any entry of the acknowledgment of any memorial, certificate or instrument, as is therein mentioned or decribed to be required, and be thereof lawfully convinced, such person shall incur, and be liable to such pains and penalties as are imposed upon persons for forging and publishing of false deeds, &c. by 5 Eliz. c. 14.

By 6 Geo. 1. cap. 22, sect. 1. Forgery authorities, &c. to transfer flocks, herds or other goods, or to receive digital, or per-fonation of deeds, or sales, is made felony without clerg.

Siat. 9 Geo. 1. cap. 12. sect. 4. enacted, that if any person after the second of April 1723, shall forge or counterfeite, or procure to be forg'd, &c. or knowingly act or affirm in the forging, &c. any order made forth in pursuance or according to any act of 6 Geo. 1. cap. 20. or of this act, or any affigment of such order, or of the annuities payable thereon, or any receipt or discharge to the Exchequer, for the annuity due on such fanding order, or any letter of attorney, or other authority, to transfer, assign, &c. any such order, or to receive the annuities thereon, or shall counterfeit any name of the proprietor of such order, in any affigment, receipt, letter of attorney, &c. or shall fraudulently demand to receive any such annuity, by virtue of such forged receipt, &c. or shall falsely and deceitfully peronne any true proprietor of any the said orders, thereby affigment or endeavouring to affigment any such order, or deceiving or endeavouring to receive the money of such pro-pritor, as if such offender were the lawful owner thereof; in every such cafe, every such person (being convicted thereof in due form of law) shall be adjudged guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

in such case, essays 25. and 4. enacted, That persons convicted of forgery, &c. praftifing as attorneys, &c. offending against the act for preventing frivolous and vacations arrests, shall be transported for seven years.

Siat. 4 Geo. 2. cap. 18. sect. 1. enacted, That any person for forging or counterfeiting letters for any ship, containing a Mediterraneo pass, or who shall alter or erate any pass, made out by the commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral; or shall pub-

If tenant in tail hath several daughters, and after his death they enter and make partition, if one of the daughters after discontinues, and dies leaving issue, such issue may have a formdon in defender. F. N. B. 476. See cit. Coparceners.

So if two coparceners be tenants in tail by descent from their father or mother, and afterwards they make partition, and one begins his estate before the other, the other coparcener dies without issue, the issue shall have a formdon in defender for the whole land. Fitz. N. B. 475, 476.

So if lands in gavelkind be intailed, and descend to many brethren as heirs to their father, and they make partition, some of the lands being given to the alien of the race, and alien dies, and his heirs are suitors for a formdon in defender against a stranger who abates, and allege the expiess in his father; for to such an intent the estate-tail was executed in the donee; but in this case, it feems, that the wife of the donee who had the inheritance in him, shall not be concluded, because the estate-tail was not executed to all purposes in the husband. Perk. Fe. 534.

If tenant in tail discontinues in fee, and dies, and the discontinuance makes a lease for life, and grants the reversion to the issue, he shall not have a formdon against the tenant in fee, because by his formdon he must recover an estate of inheritance, which the tenant hath not in him. Co. Lit. 297 b.

If in a formdon in defender the demandant is barred by verdict or on demurrer, yet his issue in tail shall have a new formdon on the construction of the statute W. 2. So if he be barred of a writ of error by a rule of errors by his ancestor, yet he shall have a new writ of error; for he does not claim altogether as heir, but per formdon doni; and by the statute he shall not be barred by the faint or fallacy of pleading of his ancestor so long as the right of install remains. 6 Co. 7.

The writ of formdon in remainder lies where a gift is made in tail or for life, remainder in tail or in fee, and the tenant in tail or for life aliens, or is disfellowed, and dieth without issue, he in remainder, or his representatives, may bring their formdon in remainder. Lit. feel. 397. F. N. B. 493.

In a formdon in defender the demandant is barred by verdict or on demurrer, yet his issue in tail shall have a new formdon on the construction of the statute W. 2. So if he be barred of a writ of error by a rule of errors by his ancestor, yet he shall have a new writ of error; for he does not claim altogether as heir, but per formdon doni; and by the statute he shall not be barred by the faint or fallacy of pleading of his ancestor so long as the right of install remains. 6 Co. 7.

The writ of formdon in remainder lies where a gift is made in tail or for life, remainder in tail or in fee, and the tenant in tail or for life aliens, or is disfellowed, and dieth without issue, he in remainder, or his representatives, may bring their formdon in remainder. Lit. feel. 397. F. N. B. 493.

But it feems, that by the better opinion, a formdon in remainder lay after an estate for life; for this was an interest well known long before the statute de donis yet others doubt hereof and think, that in this case it was given in a formdon in remainder, as was done by W. 2. in the same year, by which it is provided, That whenever from beneficent it shall happen in the Chancery, that in one cafe a writ is found, and in case cafe falling under like laws, and requiring like remedy, is found none, the clerks of this Chancery shall agree in making the writ. On which words it is clearly agreed the writ of entry in consimili causa is grounded, which is a proper writ for him in reversion or remainder after an estate for life. F. N. B. 484. Booth 1517.

If lands be given to A. for life, and the reversion is afterwards granted to B. in tail, and after the death of A. a formdon in remainder, B. shall have a formdon in remainder and not in the reverter. F. N. B. 484. Dyce 125.

If lands be given to the father and son, and to the heirs of their blood begotten, remainder over in fee, and the father died leaving only one son, who afterwards dies without issue, and a stranger abates, or the estate had been discontinuance, he in remainder may have one formdon, fordemon, and need not bring several writs. Dyer 143. 5.

If a remainder be once executed, that is to say, if the remainder-man be once feised of the estate-tail in possession, and the right descends to his heir, the heir shall not have a formemberof remainder, in but the defcender; as if A. grants lands to B. in tail, remainder to C. in tail, B. dies without issue, issue of the donor and aliens in fee; lands of D. in fee, D. shall not have a fememberof remainder, because C. his fater was feised, and the right descends to him, but he shall have the general writ of formemberof remainder in defender. F. N. B. 486, 487. 8 Co. 89.

Booth 152.

The writ of formemberof remainder lies where the donee in tail or his issue, and a stranger, abates, or who they were feised by force of the intail, discontinues the fame; in either of these cafes, the donor or his heirs may have a formemberof remainder in defender. Lit. Scot. 596. F. N. B. 487.

wli Dyer 199. pl. 55.

This writ lay at Common law for; though at Common law the estate-tail was a fee-simple conditional, so that by having of issue, the donee by alienation, &c. might have barred the possibility of the donor's right of reverter, yet the having of children was in the nature of a condition precedent; and therefore if the donee ought to have a child, he might bring his formemberof remainder in reverter, and recover against any alienation or disfopition of the donee. 2 Lefl. 356. Plow. 235.

It seems that all such inheritances, as may be intailed, may be recovered in a formemberof, and that therefore it lies not only of lands, but also of rents, commons, et cetera. or if the heir abates from the land in fee.

But no formemberof will lie for things merely personal, which only charge the perfon, and neither issue out of land, nor relate to it, and therefore can't be demanded as a tenement in a precept; as if A. grants to B. and the heirs of his body, to be mafter of his hawks, or keeper of his hounds, with a fee or faltyr annexed to it, the issue of B. can't have a formemberof thereof. 1 Rot. Abr. 837. Plow. 2.

If there be a custum in a manor, that copylefters may be intailed, which co-operating with the statute of dome is allowed to be good, the issue in tail may have a formemberof of such lands. Co. Lit. 60.

3. How the demandant must set forth his title, and of the tenant's plea in abatement or bar.

The demandant in a formemberof in the defender must make himself heir to him who was laft feised by force of the intail, but he need not mention an ancestor who happened to be ineritable, but was never actually feised by force of the intail; as if he be grandfather, father and fon, and the father dies in the life-time of the grandfather, the fon may bring his formemberof without alleging any right in the father. So if the donee in tail has two sons, and the eldest dies in his life-time, the second may, after the death of his father, bring his formemberof without taking notice of the eldest son.

Reg. 343. 8 Co. 87. Dyter 216. pl. 56. F. N. B. 477. Hall. 78.

So where in a formemberof in defender the demandant sets forth, that the right descended to him as brother and heir of the donee, without alleging that the donee died without issue; and it was held good; for he could not be heir to his brother, unless the brother had died without issue. 1 Mad. 219. 2 Mad. 64. 8 C.

In a formemberof in reverter, the demandant need not in his writ or count allege, that all the issue inheritable are deceased; but it is sufficient for him to say, that the donee is dead without issue, and that after his death it never reverted to him, for he is a stranger to the pedigree, and therefore not obliged to make it out. Dyer 216. pl. 56. Booth 155. Dyer 14. pl. 73. 19. pl. 90.

So in a formemberof in remainder, the demandant need not allege that all the parties are deceased; he is a stranger, as in the precedent case; and it is sufficient for him to shew, that he was laft inherited by force of the Vol. II. N°. 79.

intail is dead without issue. Booth 155. 2 Lev. 218.

1 Law. 286. 1 Brownl. 155.

So in a formemberof in remainder upon an estate-tail limited to F. and K. the remainder to F. in fee, & querist mortem, P. K. and T. son and heir of F. ought to remain; and the writ was adjudged good without laying expressly the death of F., though it was urged that the form of the writ was fo, because the laying of T. to be heir of F. doth import as much. Hob. 51.

But in a formemberof in remainder, it is not sufficient for the demandant to allege, that the issue in tail is dead without issue, without saying that the tenant in tail is also dead without issue, for he in remainder can have no title unlefs the estate is free; and it is not implied, that because the issue is dead without issue, that therefore the tenant in tail is, for he may have other sons besides his eldest. 5 Mad. 17. Per Holt Ch. J.

Alfo if there be tenant in tail who hath three sons, and the fecond leaves issue in tail of his father, and the land descends to the eldest, in whose life-time the fecond son dies, although the youngeft son may, on the death of the eldest, bring his formemberof in defender, and lay down the intail, and then bring it to his eldest brother that was laft feised, and make himself immediate heir unto him, without mention of the fecond brother; yet if the fecond son survived the eldest, the tenant in the formemberof may plead the fine of the middle brother, and that he or his issue did survive, &c. and this will be a good bar. Hob. 332.

In a formemberof in defender by husband and wife in right of the wife, who is dead, or fecond, as to the wife alone, for the deficient followeth the blood, and to that the husband is a stranger. Hob. 1. 1 Brownl. 154. 8 C.

In a formemberof in remainder, the demandant ought to shew the deed of gift, if ever be required thereof, but he need not mention it in his count, but the tenant is to demand the same therefor. F. N. B. 486, 487. Booth 153.

There are several pleas both in bar and in abatement, which the tenant may plead to this action; such as non-tenure, which is a plea in abatement, and by which the tenant shews, that he is not tenant of the fettled estate, and that he has not any title to the wife alone, for the deficient followeth the blood, and to that the husband is a stranger. Hob. 1. 1 Brownl. 154. 8 C.

In a formemberof in defender against three, who plead non-tenure, and issue thereupon joined, it was found specially that they were tenants with moiety of the three parts; as to the wife, he is tenant in fee, in ward, by statute-regrant, eldest, or the like; and therefore the plea of special non-tenure must always shew who is tenant. Booth 29.

In a formemberof in defender against three, who plead non-tenure, and issue thereupon joined, it was found specially that they were tenants, as the wife suppofed, was the quefion; and it seems by the book that they were, for they should have pleaded several tenantry, and then the demandant might maintain his writ. 1 Brownl. 153.

At Common law, non-tenure of parcel of an entire thing, as a manor, &c. abated the whole writ; but now by the 25 E. 3. cap. 16. it is enacted, 'That by the exception of non-tenure of parcel, no writ shall be abated, but only for that parcel whereof the non-tenure was alleged. Booth 29. 1549.

If the tenant pleads non-tenure of the whole, he need not shew who is tenant; but in a plea of non-tenure of parcel, he must shew who is tenant, and this even before the statute; for the Common law would not suffer a writ, good in part, to be wholly destroyed, except the tenant shewed the demandant how he might have a better. 1 Mad. 181.

The tenant can't, after a general imparlance, plead non-tenure of part, tho' he may plead non-tenure of the whole. 3 Lev. 55.

In a formemberof in reverter it hath been adjudged, that if the tenant pleads non-tenure generally, the demandant may maintain his writ that he is tenant, tho' he can recover no damages; and that Littleton and Coke were not to be intended of simple plea of non-tenure, but of non-tenure with a disclaimer, as they pleaded upon the simple fee of non-tenure, supposing the tenant hath no freehold, but a reversions in fee, the defendant shall not be entitled to the fee, for nothing is disowned by the simple plea of non-tenure but only the feehold, which may be true, and yet he may have the reversions in fee, and where there was a disclaimer, or pleads non-tenure, and disclaims, the defendant shall be entitled to the whole, because he hath disclaimed the whole. 3 Lev. 330. 2 Lott. 903. S. P.

Non dedit, i. e. No such intail, is a good plea in bar of all formen, and it may be pleaded by the voucheer. Co. Litt. 324. b. Booth 165.

To a motion unremed in remainder may be pleaded in bar of an estate, made by another long before the donor in the court had any thing, and that the tenants are heirs to the first intail. Booth 164.

A remitter may be pleaded in bar, as thus; that the donee was feized in fee, and being an infant made a feoffment to the donor, who gave the land to the infant in tail, by which he was remitted, whole estate the tenant hath. Booth 164.

If in a formen in remainder in the tenant pleads infancy, and that the remainder defended to him, and pays his age; and the demandant pleads that the tenant, defendant did not in infancy, and for the demandant, a final judgment shall be given notwithstanding the infancy of the tenant. Lev. 163. 1 Sid. 118. 252. S. C.

The tenant may plead that the demandants, at the day of the purchase of the writ, was seised of the lands for which the formen was bought, but in such plea he must shew of what estate. Winch. 23. Dy. 137. b. pl. 26.

It is held as a rule, that nothing can be pleaded in abatement to this action after a view, but what arises upon the view. 3 Lev. 19.

A formen and lineal warranty, with affects, by defendant, may be pleaded in bar to a formen in defendant. So a collateral warranty, without affects, before the statute 4 & 5 Ann. might be pleaded in bar to such a formen. 2 Inf. 291. Booth 163. See tit. Warranty.

So a common recovery may be pleaded in bar to a formen in remainder or reverter, either with double or single voucher; so much fingle, if the tenant to the writ were seised of the estate, and at the time of the recovery; with double voucher, tho' he were not seised. Booth 164.

In a formen the tenant may plead in bar an exchange between the ancestor of the demandant and he under whom the tenant claims, and that the demandant entered into the estate in exchange, and takes the profits; and that the ancestor may plead this plea, tho' he be a stranger, for he is privy in estate. Francisalanon, (Libera Elenomyfrum) Signifies a tenure or title of land or tenements betowed upon God, that is, given to such persons as devote themselves to the service of God, for pure and perpetual alms; whence the benefactors or givers cannot demand any terrenal service, so long as the lands, &c. remain in the hands of the freee. With this agrreeth the Grand Conununy of Normandy, cap. 32. See Bradford, ib. 2. c. 10. & N. F. B. fol. 211. Britton makes another kind of this land, given in alms. but in not in free alms. As if an abbot, &c. holds lands of his lord for certain divine service to be done, as to sing every Friday a mass, or do some other things; and if such divine service be not done, the lord may disfain, and in such case the abbot ought to do fealty to the lord; and therefore it shall not be paid a tenure in frank-almaine, but a tenure by fealty of a service, which he cannot be discharged from by certain service be exprifed.

Crom. Frufiel. fol. 178.

Frankffe, (Libeum fruendum) Is by Bredes, tit. Deufa, numb. 32. thus defined; That which is in the hands of the King or lord of any manor, being ancient demeine of the crown, (viz. the demeines) is called frank-fe, and that which is in the hands of the tenant is ancient demeine only. See Reg. Orig. fol. 12. where- by that termeth to be frank fee which a man holds at and in his fee fief and by such fee service as is required in ancient demeine according to the custom of the manor. And again, in the fame book, fol. 14, there is a note to this effect, that the lands which were in the hands of King Edward the Conqueror at the making of Domains-Book, is ancient demeine, and that all the rest of the realm is called frank-fee, wherewith Fitzberths agrees in his Nat. Brevi, fol. 161, so that by this rule all the land in the realm is was, That every free-born man at fourteen years of age, (religious persons, clergymen, and their eldest sons excepted) should find surety for his truth towards the King and his subjuments, or else be kept in prifon; whereupon a certain number of neighbours usually became bound a second time, and thus the business was committed by any one agent; So that whatsoever offended, it was withfoorth inquired into and examined for his offence. This was called the second pledge, and the fruit thereof derived, because it commonly consisted of the same household, and of every particular person, thus mutually bound for himself and his neighbours, was called decennier, because he was of one decennio or another. This custom was so long kept, that the sheriffs at every county-court did, from time to time, to the oath of young men, as they attained the age of fourteen years, and fee that they were comprised in some deern; whereupon this branch of the sheriff's authority was styled Vifus franci pliegi, View of frank-pledge. See the statute for view of frank-pledge, made 18 Ed. 2. See also Denjuven, Lect., Letter of frank-pledge, and Frietlurg. That we borrowed this custom of the Lombards, manifestly appears in the second book of Frudi, cap. 53. Upon which will rest Hestman, &c.

This appears very plain in Bradden's words, who tells us, That maritragium liberum eft, qui donatur valit quod tenuit data est quos et liberalia ad amni secundarii servitut quo ad dominium foeds poffet primum ; & quo idem ille cui data est mulum omnino et faciit servitutum diq ad turgium hereditem, & quo ad quantum graminum. And then he mentions how the degrees shall be computed, viz. the donee himself shall be in the first degree, his heir in the second, his heir in the third; and his heir in the fourth degree, and afterward the land was subject to all the former services, because it was supposed then to revert to the lord for want of heirs. So that it was exempted only unto etraenum graminum. The lands which were given in marriage, & servitut obligatio, were subject to all the requisition of the services, due to the lord, which the donee and his heirs are to perform for ever; but neither he, or the next two heirs were bound to do homage; that was to be done when it came to the fourth degree, and not before; and then both services and homage were to be performed. Genwel, edit. 1737.

Frank-pledge. (Franci pliegiwm, from the French franc, liber, and pledge, fidelfuir.) Signifies a pledge or surety for freemen: For the ancient custom of freemen of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, Vol. II. No. 60.

either ancient demeine or frank-fee. The author of Termus of Law defines frank-fee to be a tenure in fee-simple of lands payable at the Common law, and not in ancient demeine. Fisch. lib. 7. cap. 39, makes secludum francium off pro quo nullum servitium previa donatur dominus, et ab omnibus sese dividere, et tunc, ne eodem所以说, That therefore it is secludum improprium quia ab omnibus servitutur liberum. These lands which were held in frank-fee, were exempted from all services, but not from homage. Cowell.

Frank-law. (Liberia lege) Is the land or tenement, wherein the nature of fee is changed by forfeiture out of knights-service for several yearly services; and whence neither homage, worship, marriage, nor relief may be demanded, nor any other service not contained in the forfeiture. Britton, lib. 60. num. 3. See Ffurthermore. It was said that the land and the lord both the benefit of folding his tenants sweep within his monarch, for the managing his land. Keil, Rep. fol. 198. a. Gout vafollis olim et asfuffratarum de regum, manuriam & servitutum dominii solam competebat, says Mr. Sumter. It is compounded of the Fr. fous, i. e. fees, and the Latin, fol. 3. fol. 6. fol. 7. fol. 216. fol. 198. &c.

Frank-law. (Liber um lege) Is the benefit of the Common law of the land. Cops. Jef. fol. 156, describes what it is by the contrary; for he that for an offence, as conspiracy, &c. loathes his frank-fee, is said to fall into these mischiefs; first, That he may never be impealed upon for a greater crime; and, secondly, he is in danger of having his name daily exposed to the publick. Next, If he have any thing to do in the King's court, he must not approach thither in person, but appoint his attorney. Thirdly. His lands, goods, and chattels must be sequestrated in the King's hands; and his lands must be eclairred, his trees rooted up, and his body committed to prifon; for this the said attorney is entitled to by Cicis Lib. Aff. fol. 59. Conspiracy, 24 Ed. 3. fol. 3-f. See Conspiracy.

Frank-marriage. (Librimummaritium) Is a tenure in tail special, growing out of these words in the gift comprised. It is where the lord both the benefit of the conveyance of his estates, and the fiscal privileges and franchises of the same are conveyed to the donee, Tusa in quarto gradu devenenter praefatur, quod terra non sit diq ad se definitum hereditem donarum revorum, lib. 3. cap. 11. All this appears very plain in Bradton's words, who tells us, That maritragium liberum eft, qui donatur valit quod tenuit data est quos et liberalia ad amni secundarii servitut quo ad dominium foeds poffet primum, & quo idem ille cui data est mulum omnino et faciit servitutum diq ad turgium hereditem, & quo ad quantum graminum. And then he mentions how the degrees shall be computed, viz. the donee himself shall be in the first degree, his heir in the second, his heir in the third, and his heir in the fourth degree, and afterward the land was subject to all the former services, because it was supposed then to revert to the lord for want of heirs. So that it was exempted only unto etraenum graminum. The lands which were given in marriage, & servitut obligatio, were subject to all the requisition of the services, due to the lord, which the donee and his heirs are to perform for ever; but neither he, or the next two heirs were bound to do homage; that was to be done when it came to the fourth degree, and not before; and then both services and homage were to be performed. Genwel, edit. 1737.

Frank-pledge is a form of surety given to a lord in return for the protection of the tenant. This form of security was prevalent in England, especially for the preservation of the public peace, as mentioned in text. The nature of a frank-pledge was such that it required a surety for every truth towards the king and his subordinates, or else the surety would be kept in prison. The sheriffs were allowed to form a second pledge from the same household and every particular person, which was called the decennier. The custom of frank-pledge continued to be practiced until the statute for view of frank-pledge, made 18 Ed. 2. It was also referred to in other legal texts, such as Denjuven, Lect., Letter of frank-pledge, and Frietlurg. The practice was borrowed from the Lombards, as evident from the second book of Frudi, cap. 53. The laws and customs regarding frank-pledge were discussed in detail by various legal scholars and texts, including the works of Bradden, Cowell, and Genwel, among others. The text concludes by noting the ancient custom of freemen of England for the preservation of the public peace and the legal implications of frank-pledge.

That the bill of sale was fraudulent; for tho’ a bill bona fide, and for va-

A man comes by hises corpus out of London, and had no caufe to leave that prison, but by his covin; it was ordered, that he should be in execution till he had paid the debt recovered against him after the writ brought, and that after he should be remanded to answer the plaintiff there. 1 Rel. Hence Hence it appears, that the making use of the proceeds of the law is not only a fraud, but an aggravation of the offence; as if a person intending to steal a horse takes out a reprieve, and thereby has the horse delivered to him by the thief; or if one intending to rifle goods, gets a reprieve, he can thereby purchase the goods at a bargain obtained, without any the least colour of title, upon false affidavits, &c. 2 Inf. c. 108. A. shall go the next day to such a town about his business, and accordingly B. meets him the next day in the road to the same town, and affiixes him, whereupon they fight, and A. kills B. he feems guilty of murder, unless it appear by the whole circumstances, that he gave B. such informations, that he caused the murder of his wife, but for the purpose of sending him an opportunity of fighting. 1 Hawk. P. C. 81.

If a person takes a lodging in a house, under the colour thereof to have the opportunity of rifing it, and to elude the justice of the law, by endeavouring to keep out of the letter of it, by gaining a profition of the goods with which he has been furnished; or by the theft of any other felon, inasmuch as his whole intention was to defraud the law. Kel. 24. 81. 1 Shaw. 50. 51.

A man takes a wife, and afterwards marries another, his first wife living; and by deed gave part of his goods to his pretended second wife; it feems this is a fraudulent gift within 13 Eliz. and by the common law too, in respect of creditors, because made without any valuable consideration; for the second pretended marriage is far from coming under the notion of a consideration, that it is therefore void. 1 Shaw. 50. 51.

A man has a judgment for a debt against A. and takes out a fieri facias, and gets the threfir to feize the goods, but would not let him proceed further, but fuffered the goods to remain in the custody of A. the debtor, B. who has also a judgment against A. for a full debt, takes out a fieri facias, and the execution upon the goods, whether he could seize upon the goods; and it was held per cur. That he might, for the former was a fraudulent execution, and the threfir might very well return nulla bana upon it. Forf. 37.

If he be judgment in debt against J. S. and he fuffers himself to be outlawed for felony with an intent to defraud his creditors, and afterwards he purchas his pardon and hath refitution, the creditor may well take execution for this apparent fraud. Dyer 245.

2. What acts are deemed fraudulent in the courts of equity.

It is clearly agreed, that all covins, frauds and deceits, for which there is no remedy by the ordinary course of law, are properly cognizable in equity; and it is admitted, that the principal fraud were one of the chief branches to which the juridiction of Chancery was originally conf- fined. 4 Inf. 84.

But as every case on this head depends so much upon its own circumstances, it will be difficult to range them in any other order than by inferting the moft remarkable cases where the parties have been relieved against fraud and impostion. 2 Bac. Abr. 597.

As where A. being tenant in tail, remainder to his brother B. in tail, A. not knowing of the intail, makes a fettlement on his wife for life for her jointure, without leaving one shilling to his wife of a which B. who knew of the intail ingrosses, but does not mention any thing of the intail, because, as he confided in his anfwer, if he had spoke any thing of it, his brother, by a recovery, might have cut off the remainder, and barried him; and alfo' after the death of A. B. recovered in effe- ment against the widow by force of the intail; yet the was relieved in Chancery, and a perpetual injunction granted for this fraud in B. in concealing the intail, which if it had been disclosed, the fettlement might have been made good by a recovery. Pead. Chanc. 35.

So where a mother being absolute owner of a term, the fame being limited to her in tail, is present at a treaty for her son's marriage, and hears her son declare, that the term was to be sold to him at his mother's death, and is a witness to the deed, and, whereas, the revocation of the term is settled on the issue of the marriage after the mother's death, and she was compelled in equity to make good the fettlement. 2 Vern. 150.

So if A. marriage-fettlement being tenant for life of certain mills, remainder to his heir in tail, and the son who knows of the fettlement, encourages a perfon to take a lease for thirty years of those mills, and to lay out considerable sums of money in new building and improving them, in order to reap the advantage thereof after his father's death; this is such a fraud and practice, as ought to be dished as in equity, and it therefore was decreed in this case, that the fellees should hold for the residue of the term that remained unexpired after the father's death. 1 Mov. 357.

So where a younger brother, having an annuity of 100l. per annum, charged on lands by his father's will, assigns it to his younger brother, and the elder brother is encouraged to purchase by the elder brother, who told him, that he thought that there was a fettlement which would have this effect; and it was decreed, that those who derive from this fettlement should hold accordingly, without being obliged to pay the sum concealed, for the fraud. Pead. Chanc. 131. Barre v. Will.

If A. has a prior mortgage in an effeate, and is a witnefs to a subsequent mortgage, but does not disclose his own incumbrance; this is such a fraud in him, for which his incumbrance shall be polpfoned. 2 Vern. 151. Clare and Earl of Bedfor, cited to have been decreed. So where a council having a fiature from A. advises B. to lend A. 1000l. on a mortgage, and draws the mortgage, with a covenant against all incumbrances, and concedes his own fiature; and it was held, that the fiature should be polpfoned to the mortgage. 1 Vern. 370. Draper v. Bolaci.

So if A. being about to lend money to B. on a mortg. the ensuing mortgage, the proprietor D. who had a prior mortgage, whether he had any incumbrance on it, or no, if it be proved that C. went to him accordingly, and that D. denied that he had any, D.'s mortgage shall be polpfoned. 2 Vern. 554. Abbot v. Rhodes.

So if A. having a mortgage on a leasehold effeate, lends the mortgagee to the mortgage, with an intent to borrow more money; that is such a fraud in the mortgagee, for which his mortgage shall be polpfoned to the subsequent incumbrance. 2 Vern. 726. Peter and Rufl. Ab. Eq. 321. S. C.

If a pofter's, that is suffering he will intending to give the greatest part of his estate to his godson, and the other part to his wife, is persuaded by the wife to nominate her to the whole, on a promise that the wife would give the godson the part deligned for him; it will be decreed against the wife on the point of fraud, though there was no memorandum thereof in writing pursuant to the statute of frauds and perjuries. 3. Decenn. 3. Devenish and Bain.,

So where the defendant, on a treaty of marriage for his benefit with the plaintiff, signed a writing comprising the terms of the agreement, and afterward designing to elude the force thereof, and get hose from his agreement, ordered his daughter to put on a good humour, and get the plaintiff to deliver up that writing, and then marry him, which he accordingly did, and the defendant, being of a mind to effect so, she was married, and the plaintiff was relieved on the point of fraud. 2. Inst. 20. Hulbery and Mellot. 2. Vern. 373. S. C.

The plaintiff’s wife, before her inter-marriage with the plaintiff, being prevailed upon a term for years, as executive holer of the house and lands, and which was liable as afts, to the payment of his debts, in order thereto, and to raise money for that purpose, the plaintiffs, after their marriage, entered into an agreement with the defendant for care of the house in question, for the residue of the term, for 450l. thereof 210l. was to be applied in dischage of a mortgage thereon to one J. S. and the remaining 240l. was to be paid to the plaintiffs; accordingly the plaintiffs executed an affiignment of the house to the defendant, with a receipt indorsed thereon for the whole purchase-money, but the defendant did not then pay the purchase-money, but gave the plaintiffs the money due, 210l. paid thereof to J. S. the mortgagee, and of the remaining 240l. to the plaintiffs; and for the non-payment thereof the plaintiffs brought their bill to have a specific performance and payment of the money ac-accordingly; the defendant, by his answer, admitted the whole cafe to be a true one for forth; but insisted, that he ought not to be bound thereby, for that the plaintiffs could not make him a good title, they having articles before marriage agreed to settle this house for the benefit of themselves and their issue, of which he had no notice at the time of his purchase; and for a discovery of these articles, and to have up his note on the payment of the house, the defendant brought his cross bill; the plaintiffs by his answer admitted there were such articles, but insisted, that the house lying in Middleton, those articles were never registered in the Middleton office, and therefore void as against the plaintiff; but on a hearing at the Rolls, the plaintiff gave up the house, and he terms of the house thus disaffirmed with costs; and on the cross bill decreed the note given for the purchase-money to be delivered up on a re-assignment of the house, and the plaintiff in that cause likewise to have his purchase-money, by reason of the plaintiffs fraud in concealing the articles; which decree was affirmed by my Lord Chancellor

So in a cafe between two purchasers of lands in Yorkshire, where the second purchaser having notice of the first purchase, but that it was not registered, went on and purchased the same estate, and got his purchase registered; yet it was decreed, that having notice of the first purchase, though it was not registered, bound him, and that his getting his own purchase first registered was a fraud; theiquo fide afts being only to give the parties notice, who might otherwife without such registry be in danger of being imposed upon by a prior purchare or mortgage, which they are in no danger of when they have notice thereof in any manner, though not by registry, 2. Inst. 358. 2. Brev.

A. failing in his trade, compounded with his creditors at so much in the pound, to be paid at the time therein mentioned; and he having failed in payment at the precise time, some of the creditors petitioned the court and agreed to take over the hand and seal, he brought his bill to compel a performance thereof; but it appearing in the cause that A. to draw in the reft of the creditors, had made an under-hand agreement with some of them, who were feemingly to accept of the com-pofition, to pay to B. 200l. for himself and to R. 100l. and deceas upon the reft of the creditors, the court would not decree the agreement, nor relieve the plaintiff, but diñmissed the bill. 2. Vern. 71. Child and Dau-bridge.

So where A. was being intrusted by B. to receive interef-t on talleys, receives the principal, and falls, and afterwards compouds with his creditors, but B. would not come in, without having a greater composition, which

A. agrees to give, and A. brought his bill to be relieved against this under-hand agreement; but he having been guilty of a breach of trust, and also a party to the fraud, the court refused to give him any relief. 2. Vern. 626. Smell and Brackley.

If a security be obtained from a perfon by fraud and practice, upon a pretence of a demand that is fictitious, it will be relieved against in equity. 2. Vern. 123.

As where A. having the means of an attorney prevailed with the defendant to make a devis in a house, and defendant, by his answer, admitted the whole purchase-money,

the payments, and to execute a deed, leading the uses thereof to A. and his heirs; and it being proved, that he, at the time of leving the fine, declared the murt make use of some friend’s name in trust; and afterwards by will declared he had levied such a fine only in trust, and the better to enable her to dispose of the estate, and thereby devise it to

J. S. and his heirs, subject to the payment of her debts; and although A. proved a great familiarity and friendship between them, and that she had declared he should have her estate; yet it was decreed, not only that the estate should be liable to the creditors debts, but that

A. should convey the estate to devise and his heirs. 2. Vern. 307.

So where A. being to procure 1000l. for B. to borrows it, and pays B. only 300l. and takes other 700l. himself and the remaining 400l. in goods, which prove worthless, and for concurring and being whole, both gave a recognizance; yet that being sued against B.

he brought his bill, and had a perpetual injunction against the recognizance on payment of 300l. only, and interest, by reason of some circumstances of fraud; and it appearing to be a contrivance between A. and the lender, to charge B. with the whole. 2. Inst. 370. 2. Smith. 2. Brev. 246. S. C.

Where a purchase was obtained from a man in his do-gto, at a great under value, who was persuade of the perons that treated with him, that they could help him to a great match, and told him, that to quality himself for the lady, it was necessary he should convert all his lands into money, and they treated for the purchase in a person's name who knew nothing of them after; and for these circumstances of fraud the purchase was set aside. 1. Vern. 206. 3. Brev. Preced. Chan. 76.

Where an agreement for a purchase was obtained from a woman of ninety years of age, and several infirmities and circumstances, the court would decree, it to be carried into execution against the heir at law, nor to be delivered on a cross bill for that purpose, but left the parties to their remedy at law. 2. Vern. 632. 2. Brev.

There are likewise several infances, where a parol agreement is intended to be reduced into writing, but prevented by fraud, has been decreed in equity, notwithstanding the statute of frauds and perjuries; as where upon a marriage treaty, instructions were given by the husband to draw a settlement, which he privately contramed, and afterwards drew in the wife’s name, and pur-

SUING and assurance of such settlement to marry him, and it was decreed, that he should make good the settlement. 2. Inst. 19. and see iii. agreement.

So where a parol agreement was concerning the lending of money on a mortgage, and the covenants proposed were an absolute deed from the mortgagee, a deed in the very name of the mortgagee for the mortgagee had got the deed of conveyance, he refused to execute the defeasance; and it was decreed against him on the point of fraud. 2. Inst. 19.

make a will which he intended to do for himself and his young children, proposing to do for them himself; this is such a fraud, for which equity will decree the heir to give them the oil ver. Tipper.

In this case makes a fraudulent lease of his lands, with an intent to deceive a purchaser, and dies before he makes any conveyance of the lands, and afterwards his son and heir, knowing or not knowing of this lease, conveys to J. S. for valuable consideration, J. S. shall avoid this lease within the 27 Eliz. 6 Co. 72. b. & 2 Vern. 305. 6

4. A. has a lease of certain lands for sixty years, if he live long, and forges a lease for ninety years absolutely, and by indenure rectifying this forged lease bargains and sells it for valuable consideration, the reft in the land to B. in this case B. is not a purchaser within the 27 Eliz. for though there were general words in the lease to pass the true interest, yet it is plain, that it was never contracted for, or originally included in the bargain; so that the bargain being made of an imaginary interest, the bargainee can come under the charac- ter of a real purchaser, to defeat the purchaser of the true lease of sixty years, which A. was really supposed of. Co. Lit. 3. b. Sir Richard Grahame's cafe.

A deed, though it be fraudulent in its creation, yet by matter ex post facto may become good; as if one makes a settlement of a fettlement, and the feoffee makes a feoffment to another for valuable consideration, and af- ford the first seffor also, for valuable consideration, makes a second feoffment, the feoffee of the seffor shall hold against the second feoffment of the first seffor. 1 Stew. 2. b.

A. agrees with the East-India company to go as pre- fident to Bengal, and enters into a bond of 2000 l. pe- nalty for performance of articles; but before he set out he made a fettlement of his estate, and among other things he declared the trufh of a term of 1000 years to be for the benefit of a portion for his daughter, who afterwards married J. S. a gentleman of 500 l. per annum, who before the marriage was advised by counsel, that the portion was sufficiently secured; and who afterwards on her death had, on her requir'g, expended 400 l. on her funeral, but never made any fettlement on her; and A. having imbricated the goods and flock of the company, to a considerable value, the question was, whether this fettlement was voluntary and fraudulent as to them; and it was held to be a prudent and honest provifion, without any colour of fraud; and though in its creation it was voluntary, yet being the motive and induftrum to the marriage, it made it valuable. Prec. Chan. 337. East-India Company v. Cleavel.

On the clause of the 27 Eliz. that if a man fettles lands to ues, with a power of revocation, and after- wards sells the lands for valuable consideration, that the former ufe shall be revoked; it has been hold'n, that if a man having a future power of revocation bargains and fells the land before his power commences, yet it is within the act; so if the power of revocation be refer- red with the confent of A. and he conveys his land, not having revoked, the conveyance shall be good; so if one having a power of revocation, extinguishes it by feoffment, and then fells, the fale shall be good. Mor. 605. 3 Co. 82. b.

If a gift be made to deceive one creditor, it is void against all creditors; but where-ever a conveyance is confessed fraudulent it must be with regard to real cre- ditors and purchasers for valuable consideration. 5 Co. 60. Mor. 615.

But thou a purchaser for valuable consideration within the 27 Eliz. hath notice of a fraudulent conveyance before he purchases; and yet after the fale, makes or avoids it; for the statute expressly avoids such conveyance, so that whether the purchaser hath notice of them, or not, is not material. 5 Co. 60. If A. brings an action against B. for lying with his wife, after A. has affinities, and makes it appear in a. bill to pay the several debts mentioned in a schedule, and such other debts as he fhould mention within ten days, and A.

revers 5000 l. damage, and brings his bill to set aside this deed as fraudulent, and made to defeat him of his recovery; in this cafe A. can have no other relief but to come in upon the surprisus, after the debts mentioned in the schedule, which was appointed within ten days pursuant to it, are satisfiyed, the deed being neither fraudulent in law or equity, A. being no creditor at the time of executing it, and it was confentitious in him to prefer his real creditors to one, whole debt, when recovered, was franded only to malfeas. Prec. Chan. Lewkew and Freeman.

A. by bill of sale made over his goods to a trustee for B. who lived with him as his wife, and was so reputed, and he also purchased a lease of the house wherein he dwell'd, in the name of a trustee, and declared the trust thereof to himself for life, then in trust for B. during the residue of the term; and this bill of sale was held fraud-ulent as to creditors, in this case, as to the declaration of the trufh of the term, the court held it good, and not liable to A.'s debts, the term being never in him, and being so fettle'd at the time it was purchased, and A. might have given the money to B. who might have purchased it for herself, as is her own name, 2 Vern. 450. Fitchen and Lady Lidley.

Fraudulent conveyances and gifts are only void against purchasers and creditors, and shall bind the parties them- selves, and their representatives. Cre. Jaf. 270. See 2 And. 172.

And therefore where A. made a fraudulent sale of his goods to B. and delivered poiffession of some of them in his life-time, and the reft coming to the hands of his ad- ministrator, it was held in an action brought by B. for those goods, that the administrator could not plead the statute of 13 Eliz. nor maintain the poiffession of the goods even to satisfy creditors. Where by special verdict it was found, that A. being poiffessed of divers goods to the value of 250 l. by covin, to defraud his creditors, made a gift of his goods to his daughter, upon condition, that upon payment of 202. it should be void, and died; and that J. S. intermeddled with the goods; after which the daughter took poiffession of them by force of the gift, and then administration was granted to J. S. of all the goods, &c. of A. and in an action against him as executor, it was held, that the gift was apparenly fraudulent within the 13 Eliz. and that by his intermeddling, before administration granted to him, he became an executor de jure tort, and lia- ble as such; and that the law continued the poiffession in him from the time of his intermeddling to the time of granting administration. Cre. Eliz. 810. Beld and Stanhope. 2 And. 172. S. C.

If A. makes a bill of sale to B. a creditor, and after- wards to C. another creditor, and delivers poiffession at the time of the fale to neither, and after C. gets poiffession of them, and B. takes them out of his poiffession, C. can't maintain trefpofs, because the firit bill of fale is fraudu- lent against creditors, and fo is the fecond; yet they both bind A. and B.'s is the elder title, and the naked poiffession of C. ought not to prevail against the title of B. that is prior, where both are equally creditors, and poiffession at the time of the bill of sale is delivered over to neither. If a gift be made to deceive one creditor, it is void against all the creditors of the party within the statute. Mor. 615.

4. Other statutes relating to frauds, and cafes determined upon them.

Stat. 1 Ric. 2. cap. 9. No gift or feoffment of lands or goods shall be made by fraud for maintenance; and if any be made, they shall be held for none. And the differens shall have their recovery against the first defibors.
as well of their lands as of their double damages, without regard to such alienations, so that the deficiencies commence their suits within the year after the deficiency; and the same in every plea of land, where such feoffments are made by fraud, where the feoffors take the profits.

Stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 7. The deficiencies mentioned in the fourth year by the sheriff shall be made against the third deficiency during his life, so as such deficiency take the profits at the time of the suit commenced. And as to other suits in plea of land, the defendant shall commence his suit within the year against the tenant of the freehold at the time of the suit, and said suit shall be brought, and the suits at the time of the suit commenced.

Stat. 11 Hen. 6. c. 3. In all manner of suits founded upon novel dignities, the deficiencies shall have their recovery against the defendants or their feoffees, so as they, against whom the suit shall be brought, take the profits.

Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 4. All deeds of gift of goods made of trust, to the use of the persons that made the same, shall be void.

Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. (intituled, An act for prevention of frauds and perjuries,) 1. All leases of freehold or terms of years, or any uncertain interest in any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, made by persons held, leased for any one year, or by part i., and not put in writing and signed by the parties making the same or their agents thereby authorized by writing, shall have the force of leases at will only, and shall not either in law or equity be taken to have any greater effect; any conveyance for making farther grants of the same or any part thereof, nor the grant of any estate in the same, shall be void.

2. Except leases not exceeding the term of three years from the making, whereupon the rent referred shall amount unto two-third parts at least of the improved value.

Stat. 3. No leases, ealties, or intereleys, either of freehold or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, not being copiable or customary interest, of lands or hereditaments, shall be alligned, granted or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed by the party or their agents thereby authorized by writing, or by operation of law.

3. No action shall be brought whereby to charge any executor or administrator upon any special promiss to answer damages out of his own estate, or whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promiss to answer for the debt or default of another, or to charge any performing of any agreement, made by a person held fee simple, for marriage, or upon any contract or sale of lands or tenements or any interest therein, or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year from the making, unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof shall be made, writing, and signed by the party or their agents thereby authorized by writing, or by operation of law.

Stat. 17. No contract for the sale of goods, for the price of 10l. or upwards, shall be good, except the buyer accept part of the goods, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or that some note in writing of the bargain be made and signed by the parties to be charged by such contract, or by their agents lawfully authorized.

The plaintiff declares, that in consideration the promiss to marry the defendant, he promised to marry her at the death of her late husband, but the defendant refused so to do, and has since married A. B. which the lays to her damage 1000l. and upon such an affirmity obtained a verdict for 200l. The defendant moved in arrest of judgment, that this promiss is not good in law. But after argument it was held, that this is not within the class of deficiencies, and plaintiff is not limited only to contracts in consideration of marriage; and that the cafe in 3 Lev. 411. has been contradicted by latest resolutions. The defendant having married another person, has disavowed himself to perform the promiss, and therefore the plaintiff cannot apply to the fififinal court to have his deficiency recovered, nor does he regard the damages here. Stran. 34. Hil. 3 Gen. 1. Cork & Bailey.

The plaintiff married the defendant without any previous settlement of her estate, which was a very confiderable personal estate. Quarrels happened between them soon after the marriage, and the exhibited her bill here, to oblige him to settle her own estate to her separate use; setting forth, that upon his addressing her, she inflicted on having the entire disposall of her own estate, and drew up a short writing with her own hand to that purpose; that he was not present, and refused to give her her own premises of advising with council, and having writings more at large prepared; that the frequently demanded of him to execute such writings, which he constantly promised, as soon as satisfied by council, but delayed it till the married him; that he promised to try it, but refused to give her off of her promise, and he answered her by another letter, that he thought it very reasonable she should have the disposall of her own estate, and that he never intended the contrary, but that the should command her own fortune as he pleased.

The defendant denied he signed such agreement in writing, and as to any parol promiss, he pleaded the statute of frauds and perjuries, 29 Car. 2. c. 3.

It was infilled on for the plaintiff, that the court frequently compels the execution of promisses not solemnized according to that statute, where fraud and trick appear, and that the court will not receive the promiss, unless made by written instrument, or the promiss be proved by two witnesses, as in the case of marriage, as it is here by the marriage, which was the consideration of that promiss. But Parker Lord Chancellor allowed the plea, and said this was a breach of promiss, which is a forti of injury that this court does not take cognizance of or take cognizance of or as no breach of promiss, and that there is no real real of settlement; he had impounded and had not this, as it might have made it a proper case for equity; but here is nothing of any such decrees: the marries him on his word and promiss, without writing, and that is the very case the statute intended. To say therefore the agreement is to be proved in this court, because performed in part by the marriage, is to break the very words and intention of the statute, which has put this very case, and says it shall not be binding.

The plaintiff afterwards amended her bill by a further charge, that in order to induce her to marry him without a previous settlement, and to secure the performance of his promiss in executing it afterwards, he promised to take the facrament on the marriage accordingly; that after the marriage he wrote a letter, wherein he promised to make such settlement, and that he was ready to sign the writings according to her desire, and that as part of the agreement was the facrament on the marriage, but says he did it in compliance with a custom established in the Romish church (of which he was a member) of receiving the facrament on their marriages, and not to give any facation to this promised agreement. And as to the letter, he doth not remember the particulars, but doth not either perform the promiss or not to sign any writings; it only related to some proposals he had made of fettling a sum of 1500l. on her, and which he did soon after. He then pleads the statute of frauds and perjuries again.

Lord Chancellor: The case is very much altered now, from what I was at first. Then it flowed purely on the parol promiss before marriage, upon which there was no colour to relieve the plaintiff. But such parol promiss on marriage is sufficient consideration, to support a settlement made agreeable to it after marriage. This has been settled in many cases. The promiss is to establish a promiss in writing after a marriage. Now here is great evidence of such a promiss made in writing after marriage; he doth not deny his writing, that he was ready to execute the writings as he declared; but avoids it by saying, they referred to promiss made in writing before marriage, which related to the marriage and her fortune, and he never defayed any such settlement, it doth not appear when he did it; and I am very jealous he did it since the amended bill. His answer to the charge of receiving the facrament in consideration of his promiss, is not at all satisifiable. He might have had no occasion to promiss the facrament, but on that account; and though he might receive it in compliance with the custom of his church, yet that is very consistent with his Layings held of that solemn act of devotion, to testify his sincerity.

Therefore let the plea stand for an answer. Stran. 326.
Mich. 6 Gen. 1. Countys Desaguer of Mountague v. Maxwell.
S. agreed to fell an estate in land to O, and wrote to him to deliver the title deeds to O, be having agreed to dispose of it to him. Afterwards S. sold this estate to D. who had notice of this transaction: O. brought a bill against S. and D., insinuting, that the letter brought the cause out of the statute of frauds and perjuries. But Lord Chancellor held it not, because the agreement does not appear in it. Stran. 426, Easf. 7 Gen. 1. Sec-good v. Neal.

The defendant before a chariot, and when it was made refused to take it; and in an action for the value, it was objected, that they should prove something given in earnest, in note in writing, but there was no de-lever of either of the goods. But the Chief Justice ruled this not to be a case within the statute of frauds, which relates only to contracts for the actual sale of goods, where the buyer is immediately answerable, without time given him by special agreement, and the seller is to deliver the goods immediately. Stran. 506. Hil. 6

There was a parallel agreement for a lease of twenty-one years, upon which the lessee entered, and ejoined for five years, and then the Earl brought a bill against him to oblige him to execute counter-part for the reversion. The lessee pleaded that, whether that lease held the statute of frauds and perjuries, which on argument was overruled, the agreement being in part carried into execution.

By Hall Ch. Juflice, if A. promise B. being a forger, if it B. cure D. of a wound, he will fee him paid; this is only a promise to pay if D. does not, and therefore it ought to be in writing by the statute of fruds. But if A. promise in such cafe, that he will be B.'s paymaster, whatever he shall decease; it is immediately the debt of A. and he is liable without writing.

5. In what court the fraud is cognizable; and in what causes the wrong-doer is further punishable than by making void the fraudulent act.

It is clearly agreed, that the court of Chancery had always an original jurisdiction in relieving against frauds, and that at this day it is the only court where matters of fraud are properly cognizable. 2 Fern. 261, 2.

But it hath been doubted, whether a court of equity could give relief on the statutes which make conveyances and dispositions fraudulent against purchasers and creditors, being introductory of new laws; but it is now settled, that such relief may be proper in equity, and that directing an issue to be tried at law is only discretionary in the court.

A. recovers a judgment against the defendant's father, and the plaintiff (the thief's bailiff) levied 4 l. of goods in pollifion of the defendant's father; the defendant brought a crover against the plaintiff, pretending the goods to be his, because the landlord had leased them for rent, and sold them to him; but on evidence the sale was proved fraudulent, and that the father was in possession
all along, and paid taxes for the farm and goods, &c.
and therefore the judge gave direction to the jury to try for the delivery of the goods; but because he had not proved

London, as any other place, having no monopoly paid for carriage of goods by sea; or in a larger sense, it is taken for the cargo, or burden of the ship. Lex Mercat.

Where a ship goes from one port to another, and there unloads, and then goes over to another place, but in her passage, before her second unloading, is lost, the owner shall recover for freight, but from the time of the loading to the unloading, and nothing for the second loading; for if a ship be lost before unloading, no freight shall be paid, but every one must bear his part of the loss; and this is the reason that mariners lose their wages in such cases. If the like ship of 200 tons be freighted by the ton, and full laden, according to their charter-party, then freight is to be paid for every ton; otherwise but for so many as the said lading in the name was. Mal. Lex Merc. 100.

If a ship of 200 tons be freighted, and named to be of that burden in their covenant, and, being freighted by the ton, shall be found to be less in bigness, there is no more due to be paid than by the ton, for so many as the said deck did carry and brought in goods. Mal. Lex Merc. 100.

French. King William 1. called The Conqueror, being a native of Normandy in France, caused the laws of this realm, in his time, to be written and pleaded in the French language. But by flar. 36 Ed. 3. c. 15. it is declared, "That all pleas which shall be pleaded in any courts whatsoever, before the King's judges whatsoever, or in his other places, or before any of his other ministers whatsoever, or in the courts and places of any other lords whatsoever within the realm, shall be pleaded, defended, answered, debated, and judged in the English tongue, and not in French."

It seems, feys, there is another Hawkins, to have been always taken, that appeals are not within this statute, but that they are to be arraigned, and the plea of the defendant is to be read in French, in the same manner as anciently; and thus, continues the featant, I have often known it done in many other cases: but upon what reason this difference between appeals and all other prosecutions is grounded, I have never heard. 2 Hawk. Fretum, Fright money, Acquitarii factiis fret- tis, & secundum quod maritimi curandum nuncio prohibe pojunt quod erit debita de fretto. — Clasw. 17 Feb. 16. m. 6.

Frat or Frater, (Lat. frater, Fr. frere) An order of religious persons, of which, there are reckoned the principal branches, (Stat. 1 Hen. 4, cap. 17.) viz. Minor, Grey friars, or Franciscans, Augustinians, Dominics, or Black friars, and White friars, or Carmelites, from which the rest deflect. See Zachius de Repub. Eccles. pag. 380. and Lyndwood, tit. de Relig. Dominus, fol. 1. verbo Sancti Augustini.

Fratres Obereferuentes (From the Latin) Is an order of Franciscans, which are Minoris, as well the Observant at the Conventual and Capuchines. Zach. de Repub. Eccles. tradit. de Regular, cap. 12. Thence we find mentioned anno 25 Hen. 8. cap. 12. They are called Observant because or they are not combined together in any cloister, conven- t, or corporation, as the Conventuals are; but only tie themselves to observe the rites of their Order more strictly than the Conventuals do; and upon a furliness of zeal separate themselves from them, living in certain places, and companies of their own chuch; And of these you may read Hopjohnian de Orig. & Propriet. Monachus, fol. 28. cap. 38.

Friburg or Fribourg, (From the Saxon frith, i.e. pox, and borg, i.e. fuburgo.) Is the same with freth, the one being in the Saxons time, the other since the Conquest; wherefore, for the understanding of it, read Fright pledge, and the laws of King Edward set out by Lombard, &c. 1439. In these words it is obvious, that, summa & maxima securitas, per quern sumus fata, frateriniur solvitur, viz. ut unguifque flabilitat, & fet fiducias, securitatis, quam Angli vacuo (incoherenter) jis tamen ierro- recemus dictum eadem (tienammatale) quod sumat latine dictis, & habet minimum numerum, &c. Every man in this king- dom was allowed to hold a fright, and to be pursued through ten families, who were pledged or bound for each other to keep the peace, and if any offence was done by one, the other nine were to answer it; that is, if the criminal fled or suppose, they had thirty days allowed to apprehend him; if he was not taken in that time, then he was the frater, (that is, the principal pledge) of the ten, should take two of his own number, and the chief pledges of three neighbouring freth, with two others out of each of these frith, in all 12 men, whereof four were to be the chief, and the other eight were to be of the better sort, and those were to purge themselves and their frith, of the forfeiture and penalty, which they solicited, as if he could not do, then the principal pledge, with the other eight whom he did belong, was to make full satisfaction; but afterwards it became difficult to get the three neighbouring freth to join with the other, and therefore those other nine made oath that they were not guilty, and that they would bring the criminal to judgement if he should be taken. Brudin mentions Fridenburgum. lib. 3. trad. 2. cap. 10. in the words Archiepiscopius, episopi, comites & barones & amnes qui habent fectis sectis, tel & teum, & hujusmodii lib- eratesses, milites fuis & propriis servientes, armigeres, &c. desperiores, & pinixeres, camerarist, capitis, pablis, Jus fide friburgi bohara dehent. Lem. & jih, Jus armigeres & illis fide fereanteiis; quod si qui forificent, is domini fui habent eos aduationem, & non habenterant, jucund pro eis forific- faturam. Et sic observandum erit de omnibus allis qui sunt de aliocibus mancipiis. Where we learn the reason, why great men were not combined in any ordinary team, because they were not permitted to have the benefit of fright suit, and for their mendicant friars, no less than the ten were one for another in ordinary team. See Skene, verbo Friburg. Fiate writes it friburg, and uthe for the principal man, or at least for one of the dozen, lib. 1. cap. 47. of their team, parte pofer, annual, in Hen. 2. fol. 83. But Spedman says, The practice was difference between frie and frith, saying, The firt signifies liber securitas, or securitate; the otner pacis secures.

Friboll and Fribolbell, (from the Saxon frith, pac. fes. fedis, cathedra. a feth, locus.) A sort, chaff, or place of peace. In the charter of immunities granted to the church of St. Peter in York, by Hen. 4. confirmed, An. 5 H. 7, thus,— Quod si aliquid, ut supra spiritus agitata, diabolus ausu quosqusum capare presumpserit, in cathedra lapideae justa auterlo, quod Anglici vacuo trid- follo, i.e. cathedra quiecedatina vit pacis; jous tam fregi- tosly fociis facile ademinturi, habet nullo juis juis et secunolo pacis nomus claudatibus, sed apud Angles forificaturo, eft, fimne emenda, vocabulo. Of these there were many others in England, but, the most famous at Beverley, which had this inscription, Hac fide lapideae tridfollocie dicitur, i.e. pacis cathedra, ad omnem que fingis populo personam tutam prefat, & decem gentes percutiat, dicatur. And this signifies also a palace, which is usually a privileged place.

Furting of wheels, Is perhaps what we now call the binding of wheels, i.e. fitting and fastening the fellos or pieces of wood that conjointly make the circle upon the felines, which on the top of the wheel are set, and at the bottom into the hub.—In folitus pro fritime quoque rerum loco annis vii. denar. —Porchat. Antiq. p. 574. Conwel, edit. 1727.

Funge or Fungare, (derived a fex) In the reign of Edward the third, the Black Prince of Wales having Acquisitum granted him, had liberty to make fongs or finge upon the subjeds of that Ducedom, viz. twelve-pence for every five, called hentmyth. Rot. Parl. 25 Ed. 5. 'Tis probable our heart-mony took its original from here.

Fyl. By flt. 43 Eliz. cap. 14. All faggots to be fold shall contain in compacts, before the knot of the bond, twenty-four inches of a fife; and every faggot ficked within the bond shall contain full three feet of a fife, except only one ficle to be but one foot long, to stop or harden the binding.

Stat. 9 Ann. cap. 15. All billets (except those made of beech, by 10 Ann. cap. 6.) that lie exposed in public places, where they are usually bought or fold, shall be aflied and cut, or marked in manner following; that is to say, all billets of what scantling or denomination soever, that are not in length three feet and four inches, and be of the following dimensions.

Sel. 2. And if they shall not be thus aflied and marked, then on information to a justice of peace, mayor or other head officer, he shall call before him fix good and lawful men of the town, and shall swear them truly, and inquire what is the fame of good and sufficient aflied; and if they shall peremptorily declare that any of them is not sufficient, the fame to be deficient, shall be forfeited, and be delivered to the overiers to be by them distributed to the poor.

Funeral charges. A person died in debt, and 6oo/. was laid out in his funeral; decreed the fame should be a debt, payable out of a trust eftate, charged with payment of debts. The executor, being a man of great estate and reputation in his county, and buried there; but had he been buried elsewhere, it seemed his funeral might have been more private, and the court would not have allowed it. Trin. 1691. Ch. Proc. 27. Offey v. Offey. The executor determined of 700/. for mourning, the question was, if it should come out of the whole estate, or out of the legatory part only; it was infifted, that there had been no direction by the will, or if the will had directed, that the eftates of the funeral should not exceed such a sum, there the deduction mufT have been allowed. 3 Cow. 166; but when the beneft had been extorted by the will, mufT come out of the legatory part, and not to letter the orphanage and endowment part. G A S C L I, (Gabella, gallegium, saxon gafel, alias gaffi, i.e. cattle.) Hath the same significacion amongst the authors, that gackle hath in France. For Mr. Camden, in his Brit. pag. 213. speaking of Walesford, hath these words, Continuatu 270 bagari, i. demit, reddates novum libros de gablo. And pag. 228. of Oxford there, Hac urae reddendo pro falsina & gablo, & alitis confuetudinibus, for annage, regis quod omnia, & sex librorum multi, comitum &e. Agera decern librorum. Gabella, as Cognass defines it De Conf. Burgund. pag. 119. ob vectigal quod solvitur pro bonis mobilibus, id est, pro iis quae vanabunt, distinguiquing it from tributum, quia tributum est proprius quod sibi velit principis solvitur pro rebus immobiliis. The Notes, in his Comment de suo assitiones, faith thun. cited 2. c. 12. fol. 213. Here note, for the better understanding of ancient records, flatures, charters, &c. that gabel = gavel, gabellum, gabelletum, gabelletum, and gavellutation, do signify a rent, custom, duty or service, yielded or done to the King, or any other lord. But that gafel did as well extend to money, as to other things in kind, is very plain by that record in Danufday-Buke, in Windsor in Berkshire, where 'tis said, Rex Wili- liemus rex Windesoro in Dominices, Rex Edw. tenet ibi xxi. bides, &c. Et adijus jas in villa C. Hage v. mi- nis; cuhi jas xxi. quatuor de gablo & de alitis exunct xx. fald. And hably, in the same book in somefe- fiorus, it is thus expresed in the title of Terra Regii, (which observe) Rex tenet cedra (I suppose it is that Cedera, so famous for its cheere) Rex Edw. tenet, numquam gelavit, nec fecit quod bides jas ibi, in Dominice, &c. xx. lacum xvii. car. & vili. gabellatores redd. xvii. et fefte feven gabellatores did pay seventeen shil- lings, and from their paying of rent were termed gabellat- ores. It feems probable, that this gabout is to be dif- tinguished from a rent or payment made upon contract or bargain, and hath relation to such a one as was im- ploied by one power and will of the Lord. And these different forms of words that are mentioned in Danufday- Book under several expreffions, according to the nature of them; where sometimes it is written, that one reddit to such a one so much, without any other addition: And this, I believe, was rent upon agreement and contract, as it be judged pertinent in a third reddit de gablo, so much. When gabel is mentioned without any addition, then it usually signifies the tax on fells, proper excellencies, but afterwards it was applied to all other taxes, as gabelle de vint. &c. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Gabulicium (Gabella) Signifies a pawn or pledge, and is derived from the French gage, that is, pignari dare. Glanvill, lib. 10. c. 6, latit. Quandque sint libres pro nuncio in vendum, quandoque res immobiles; and a little after that, Thus quod aut redeat res quodque ad terminum, quandoque fubit termes; ita quandoque inviolactur ad aeternum. Another readeth, gableteum non. And thenaul the word gage be retained as it is a subfahitive, yet as it is a verb, use hath turned the g. into a w. so that it is often written wage, as to wage deliverance, that is, to give fe- cular thing that shall be delivered: For if he who was disfrained, being sued, hath not delivered the cattle that were disfrained, then he shall not only avow the difference, but gage deliverance, that is put in sureties that he will deliver the cattle disfrained, F.N.B. fol. 74 & 67, yet in some cases he shall not be tied to his securitie, as if the cattle died in the pound. Gagilage (Lat. Wagingium, i.e. actus plagiari, vel plagia, et placatio, i.e. Saxon gagegear, i.e. the grain or crop of tilled or planted ground,) Signifies the draught-oxen, horses, wain, plough, and furniture, for carrying on the work of tillage by the bauer fort of stockmen and vill- ians; and sometimes the land itself, or the profit rafed by cultivating it. Braten, lib. 1. cap. 9. (speaking of a tenant) For tis in his hand, a margin, a margin, a margin, minis, &c. et se resf rutrant, quod salum non pintis eis esse wagingium suam. And again, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 1. Miles & libra homin non amicissibur nisi jessment medium delecti, jessment quod delicii sicut magnum vel parvum & salvo contemputa est: Mercator non nisi jamenti merendiae sua, & villanum non nisi jamenti wainingo suae. For an- ciently, as it appears both by Magna Chart, cap. 14. and other books, the villain, when amerced, had his wainingo free, to the end the plough might not stand still: And the law, for the same reason, does still allow, a like privilege to the husbandman, that his draught horses and oxen are not in many cases disfrainable. This in Hustin, i. cap. 6. Anno 3 Ed. 1. is called gannoire, and again, cap. 17. and in Magna Charta, cap. 14. it is called gaine- age. In the Old Nat. Brev. f. 177. it is termed gainer. In these words, the writ of Aiel was praecept, &c. quae reddat unum bonum terre & unum bonum maris, &c. that is, he shall do the equivalent of a thing that lieth in gainer. This word was used only concerning arable land, because that they had it in oc- cupation, had nothing of it, but the profit and fruit raised by their own pains towards their hurrafore, nor any other title, as at the present, in the same land, in the same famishing, fol. 12. is used for a folk-men, that hath such land in his occupation. the preservation of the fish, it may be necessary to observe how the Common law fixed linen, which depends upon the difference made between tame and wild animals.
The tame animals, such as horses, cows, sheep, &c. are such creatures, as by reason of their frugiferous and universall motion do not have, or use no care for the fish, but generally keep within the same pastures and pastures; and may be easily purfued and overtake, if by accident they should escape; and therefore the owner hath the same kind of property in them as he hath in all other inanimate chattels, and for the violation thereof may bring an action of trespass. 2 Bac. Abr. 512.

Hens and chickens are tame; fo peacocks, like other domestick fowl, are tame by nature. Off. Esq.
1 Rel. Abr. 5. 18 Hen. 8. 2. So several forts of dogs are tame, as the maltes, bound (which comprehends greyhounds of several sorts), and Tonder; and for these a person may sue upon action of seisin, without alleging that they were thence. Cr. Eliz. 125. 1 Saund.
84. So a person may justify in sault and battery in defence of his dog that is tame. Ryl. Est. 611. So A replevin lechef of a ferret. Cr. Eliz. 126.
By this statute, all hares, foxes, &c. are understood those which by reason of their swiftness or ferilities fly the dominion of man, and in thefe no person can have a property, unless they be tamed or reclaimed by him; and as property is the power that a man hath over any other thing for his own use, and the ability that he has to apply it to the fulftation of his being, when that power eafe, his property is lost; and by confequence an animal of this kind, which after any feizure escape into the wild common of nature, and afterts its own liberty by its swiftness, is no more mine than any creature to be wild, because I have it no longer in my power or disposal.
Ca. 16. 4.
Hence it appears, that by the Common law every man had an equal right to such creatures, as were not naturally under the power of man, and that the mere caption or feizure created a property in them in, except in the following cases. Cr. Eliz. 547.
1. By immediate manufipution, or saving them and killing them; for in these cases they belong to such person in the same manner as any other chattels, and can't be violated from him, since the first seizure and caption was sufficient to vell the property of them in him.
Ca. 16. 15. 6. By taking and taming them, or making them belong to the owner, as do all the other tame animals as long as they continue in this condition, that is, as long as they can be confidered to have the mind of returning to their masters; for while they appear to be in this state they are plainly the owner's, and ought not to be violated; and when they forake the houses and habitations of the men, and betake themselves to the woods, they are then
3. Another way of gaining property in them is by inclosure, and then the beasts must be underfoot to be mine, as the proverb is. An fish in a fole ifle is safe, and they can no more be taken and carried than fish that may be taken out of the land; and therefore if I incline aet in a park or paddock, conies in a field or warren, they become my own, that no man ought to kill or take them away; now since in this case, 'tis the inclosure only that retains them, and if I have the conies, or the property in the conies, and in their natural liberty, therefore the party is liad to have a right as he hath to any other profits there included, and a distinct and independent right in every animal. March 49.
4. The King, as an acknowledgment of his dominion over the seas and great rivers, by his prerogative has a property in some animals under the denomination of royal creatures, as flurgeon, whales and swans, all which are the natives of seas and rivers. Ca. 16. 6.
On these reafons and difficulnes of the Common law, we may now fee how the law flands with regard to the seafands of the game, within the several fla-tutes made for the prefaceion thereof.
First it is clear, that if a man pursue deer, hares or conies out of his lands, or the lands of another into mine, and there takes them, they are the hunter's and not mine, because I never had any original property by inclining them into this, as the word is. 35 Jac. 2. But it is said, if a man flies his hawk at a pheasant upon his own ground, and the hawk pursues the pheasant into another's warren, the owner of the hawk can't justify the entering the warren and taking the pheasant. 38 Ed. 3. 10. 12
Hen. 8. 10. 2 Rel. Abr. 507. Pap. 162.
If a man pursues conies, and comes on my ground,
I may force them, because they are indeed my property
by the inclosure; but if he hunts them out of my ground, they are in the condition of natural liberty, and then I can't I take take them away from the hunter, for then the property is in no man; but damages I may have against the hunter for his hunting and breaking of my inclosures. Salk. 556.

5 Mod. 375.

But where a man hunts conies in my warren, or deer in my park, and the warrenor pursue them, he may take them; for the park or warren is an establishment by the publick to be protected; and for all the rest not thereunto committed, in which no man hath a civil right, is under the regulation of the publick; now in parks and warrens, officers are established by authority to have an eye over the game, and to keep it within the boundaries; so that the property is not altered by driving it out of the warren, and therefore all that is done by the officers; for, as long as he is thus trusted doth pursue it, it is not in its natural liberty, but is still belonging to the owner. 12 Hen. 8. 9. 2 Bac. Ab. 613, 614.

Alfo the Common law warrants the hunting of ravenous beasts of prey on another's ground, such as foxes, wolves, badgers, &c. so that the party in pursuance thereof through the grounds of another is subject to no action whatsoever; but it hath been resolved, that the hunting and killing such noxious animals must be done in the ordinary and usual manner; and that therefore the digging for a badger is unallowable, and the party subject to an action of trespass, 7 Leiz. 462.

A warrenor or keeper of a park may justify the killing of dogs and cats, as well as other vermin, which he finds disturbing the game in those places. Cro. Jac. 44. 3 Leiz. 28. con. 1 Rot. Abr. 357.

A man can't have an action of trespass on the common, for another man shooting into his ground, because they are not the other's than what they are included; so that no violation arises to the property of one man by the befts of another, but the conies being in their natural liberty may be lawfully killed by the owner of the field. 5 Co. 104. Cro. Eliz. 547. Mor. 420. 421. 422. 423. Law. 355. 456. A action of trespass may be brought for taking a man's deer in a park or chase, or of conies in his warren, because the law takes notice that they are included, because there are the proper inclosures for that purpose; and consequently those befts are not in their natural liberty, and therefore the property is in the plaintiff. March 49. Gath. 174. Raff. Ent. 650. Rr. 93. but 7 Co. 17. con. and see Cro. Car. 553.

In an action of trespass, Quare clausum fugit, et demais istius le plaintiff capit & apererauis, they shall be intended to be included after a verdict; because where a verdict is found of them, and the plaintiff has proved that verdict must be intended to be true; therefore the deer must be intended to be included, as to be under the plaintiff's power; otherwise he could not have property according to the verdict. Salk. 536. 5 Mod. 375.

But if in trespass, Quare duas damas fujus le plaintiff in quaedam clasem dicit le plaintiff, vacat le park, capit et apererauit, the defendant demars generally; this hath been ruled to be ill; Because the court will not intend them to be tamed or included; and in befts, that are in their natural liberty, the plaintiff hath no property; for being only a place called a park, it can't be understood to be a place. 3 Leiz. 277.

Any person, upon his own frank tenement, may erect a dove-houfe; nor can he for such building be indicted in the leet; this was a matter often controverted, because the pigeons and doves were to be accounted as tame animals; but the courts have held, that these were not the same; and then whosoever did erect such houfes, were answerable for the damages; and because they were not liable to every man's action, to avoid multiplicity of suits, it was formerly held, that they were indigible in the leet; but the contrary opinion prevailed, because it was allowed the lord of the manor to prevent him, or prevent any person to erect a dove-houfe; but no person could raise himself, or authorize another to create a nuisance; besides, these animals are rather to be accounted free nature; and by conquence, the only remedy any person had for the damage sustained by the birds feeding on his ground, was to kill them, and take them to himself; which was the proper relief according to the Common law, inasmuch as the birds were accounted no man's property. 2 Rot. Abr. 138. Pap. 421. Cro. Jac. 382. Gath. 259. Cro. Eliz. 548. 1 Rot. Rep. 136, 200. 2 Rot. Rep. 3, 30. 5 Co. 104.

Thus it appears by the Common law, that a property in those living creatures, which by reason of their twif- tedness did not belong naturally under the power of man, was gained by the mere capture or seizure of them; but as by this toleration persons of quality and distinflion were deprived of their recreations and amusements, it was thought necessary to make laws for preferring the game from idle and indigent people, who by their los of living from this sport, were frightened to pursue it. Pursuits were mighty impoverisht. 2 Bac. Abr. 615.

2. Statutes concerning the game in general, with estates determined upon them.

3. Statutes concerning the several kinds of game, with estates determined upon them.

1. Statutes concerning game-keepers, and the qualifications to kill game.

By Stat. 15 Ric. 2. 1. r. 1r. 13. it is enacted, That no layman which hath not lands or tenements of 40s. a year, nor clergyman if he be not advanced to 10l. a year, shall have or keep any greyhound, hound, nor other dog, or beare, that shall use any nets, arch-pipes, nor cords, or other engines for to take or destroy hares, hares, or conies, or other gentlemens game, upon pain of one year's imprisonment; and that the justices of peace have power to inquire [in their terms] and shall inquire of the offenders in this behalf, and punish them by the pain aforesaid. See the qualifications for killing conies, deer, hares, partridges, &c. in the next division of this title.

By Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. 2. 25. felt. 2. it is enacted, That all lords of manors, or other royalties, not under the degree of an esquire, may from henceforth by writing under their hands and seal, authorize one or more game-keeper or game-keepers within their respective manors or royalties, who being thereto authorized, may take and seize all such guns, bows, greyhounds, fettng dogs, lurchers, or other dogs to kill hares or conies, ferrets, foxes, or other such wild or tame beasts, or other engines for the taking and killing of conies, hares, pheasants, partridges, or other game, as within the precincts of such respective manors shall be used by any person or persons, who by this act are prohibited to keep or use the same: And moreover, that the said game-keeper or game-keepers, or any other per- son or persons (being thereto authorized by warrant under the hand and seal of any justice of the peace of the county, division or place) may in the day-time search the houfes, out-houfes, or other places of such any such person or persons by this act prohibited to keep or use the same, or within their proper ground shall be entitled to have or keep in his or their custody any guns, bows, grey- hounds, fettng-dogs, ferrets, coney-dogs, or other dogs to destroy hares or conies, hares, tracemels, or other nets, lowbells, arch-pipes, fiares, or other engines aforesaid, and the same, and every or any of them to seize, detain and sell, and dispose of the same as they shall think fit for their own right, or royalty where the same shall be found or taken, or otherwise to cut in pieces or destroy, as things by this act prohibited to be kept by persons of their degree." And by felt. 3 of the said Stat. it is enacted, "That all and every person and persons not having lands and ten- ements, or some other eftate of inheritance, in his own or his wife's right, of the clear yearly value of 100l. per annum, or for term of life; or having leave or leaves of 99 years, or for any longer term, of the clear yearly value of 150l. other than the fon and heir apparent of an esquire, or other person of higher degree, and the owners and keepers of forests, parks, chases or warrens, and are hereby declared to be persons, by the laws of this realm, not allowed to have or keep for themselves, or any other person or persons, any guns, bows, greyhounds, setting-dogs, ferrets, coney-dogs, lurchers, hayes, nets, lowbells, hare-pipes, gins, snares, or other engines aforesaid, but shall be, and are hereby prohibited to have the same upon pain of the law; and the name of such person shall be entered with the clerk of the peace; such entry to be made and viewed without fee, and a copy thereof to be granted by the clerk of the peace, upon payment of 1s. and in case any other game-keeper, who shall not be otherwise qualified to kill game, shall kill any hare, peafant, partridge, moor, heath-game or gruze, or if any game-keeper, or other person not qualified in his own right to kill game, shall fall or expose to sale, any hare, &c. the offender shall incur such peasalties as are inflicted by the 5 Ann. cap. 14. upon higlars, carriers, inn-keepers or vichuellers, for buying or felling of game; such forfeitures to be recovered as preferrable by the said act.

Sect. 4. 5 & 6 Will. & Mar. c. 23. feft. 3. Every con-vable, headborough and tithingman, being authorized by warrant of one justice of peace, shall enter into and search for dangerous poisons, ferrets, or any other engines for punishment of deer-keepers in such manors, &c. as are appointed by the acts 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10.) the bacons of suspected persons not qualified; and in case any hare, partridge, peafant, pigeon, fift, fowl or other game, shall be found, the offender shall be carried before some justice of peace; and if such person do not give a good account how he came by such game, or the danger of his doing so, the justice, produce the party of whom he bought the fame, or some other credible person to depofe upon oath such fale thereof; he fhall be convicted by the justice of fhuch offence, and shall forfeit for every hare, partridge, fift or other game, any form not under 1. and not exceeding 20s. to be adefertained by the justice, one moiety thereof to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish where the offence was committed, to be levied by diftablons and fale of goods, by warrant of the justice; and for want of diftablons the offender fhall be committed to the county gaol, for the foufe correclion, for any time not exceeding one month, and not less than ten days, thereto be whipt, and kept to hard labour ; and in cafe any person not qualified shall keep or ufe any bows, greyhounds, setting-dogs, ferrets, coney-dogs, hayes, lurchers, nets, tunnels lowbellas, hare-pipes, snares, or other engines for punishment of deer-keepers in such manors, &c. as are aforesaid, he fhall be convicted to the same penalties as are to be inflicted upon the persons who shall be found to have any hare, par- 	ridge, fift, fowl or other game, as aforesaid; and if any person produced shall not before the justice give evidence of the infubordinaclion of his act, being of the same manner as the perfon first charged, and fo from judgment, 1. That it was not faild, that the defendant is not qualified by estate to hunt, without incurring the penalty of the act; for if he be, he might hunt by law. But to this it was replied by the court, that hunting is a trade of a man of the inferior rank, and therefore not a party to hunt another's ground; and therefore it is not material, how the person is qualified, in the case of an inferior trader, as to his estate. Then it was moved, that the plaintiff having declared, con ter foramin statuti, this goes to the whole, and therefore it is faild; for the trefpafs is by an act of the party, and not by another's act or failure. But to this Holt Chief Justice answered, that if an act of parliament increases the penalty, or deprives the party of the benefit of the Common law, there he ought to conclude contra foramin statuti. But if a man brings an action for such an offence, and for a thing that is an offence only at Common law, and concludes contra foramin statuti, though in grammar this goes to the whole, yet the court will refer it only to the offence that is prohibited, &c. by the statute, and it shall be punished as to the offence at Common law. And he referred it to the case of Page and Harwood, Allen 43. 45. It is held, that if the party there is no statute, then the contra foramin statuti shall be allowed. And he cited a case in Vent. 103. where a brought an action for withdrawing his wife contra foramin statuti; and because there was no statute, this was adjudged unpunishable. But in this case the act of Holt & Allen does not create a new penalty, but is a restitution of the Common law; and therefore the party has no need to declare contra foramin statuti; and therefore it will be the better way hereafter to omit the contra foramin statuti in such cases. And if the plaintiff declares that the defendant was an inferior trader, he shall have full recovery. The law is declared, contra foramin statuti, where there was no need of it, without doubt it shall be unpunishable. And therefore judgment was given for the plaintiff, &c. &c. And in Eager term it was absolutely given for the plaintiff.

Lord Rom. 149. Carth. 382.

By the 5 Geo. enr. cap. 4 sect. 2, it is enacted, "That if any person, gentleman, carman, innkeeper, victualler, or alehouse-keeper, shall have in his or their custody or possession, any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, or shall buy, sell or offer to sell any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, every such higler, &c. and for every of such, and for every person who buy or sell any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, for whom such a person or persons are convicted of the same, shall forfeit for every hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, the sum of 5l. one half to the informer, and the other half to the poor of the parish where the offence was committed; and if upon view, or upon the oath of one or more credible witnesses, shall be convicted of the same, so that forfeit for every hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, the sum of 5l. one half to the informer, and the other half to the poor of the parish where the offence was committed; the same to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, by warrant under the hand and seal of the judge of the county, or other justices of the peace before whom such offender or offenders shall be convicted, rendering the overplus (if any be), the charge of disclaiming being first deducted; and for want of disclaim, the offender or offenders to be committed to the house of correction for the first offence for the space of three months, without benefit of bail or recognisance; and for every such other offence for the space of four months; provided that such conviction be made within three months after such offence committed; and that if any certisvari shall be allowed to remove any conviction made, or other proceedings of any person in respect of any thing that was done in this case, either by the several courts at Westminster, upon any pretence whatsoever, unless the party or parties, against whom such conviction shall be made, shall, before the allowance of such certisvari, become bound to the person or persons prosecuting the same, in the sum of fifty pounds, with such sufficient sureties, as the justice or justices of the peace, before whom such offender shall be convicted shall think fit, with condition to pay unto the officer or officers per respirando, or per procedendo, for such conviction or procedendo granted, their full costs and charges, to be ascertained by their oaths; and that in default thereof, it shall be lawful for the said justice or justices, or other, to proceed for the due execution of such conviction, in such manner as if no such certisvari had been awarded. See flat. 28 Geo. c. 1, 2, 3, 2. hereafter inferred in this division."

Sec. 3. And for the better discovery of such higher, carman, carrier, innkeeper, alehouse-keeper and victualler, shall offer to buy or sell any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, if it is convicted. That any person, that shall destroy, fell or kill any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, and shall within three months make discovery of any higher, carman, carrier, innkeeper, alehouse-keeper, or victualler, that hath bought or sold, or offered to buy or sell, or had in their possession, any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, so that any one or more of such should be convicted of such offence in manner as aforesaid, such discoverer to be discharged of the pains and penalties hereby enacted for killing or selling such game as aforesaid, shall receive the same benefit or advantage, as any other party who had in his or her possession, by virtue of this act, for such discovery and information.

Sec. 4. And it is further enacted, "That if any per son or persons, not qualified by the laws of this realm so to do, shall keep or use any greyhounds, setting-degs, hares, beagles, hounds, hares, tortoils, or any other engine to kill or destroy the game, or shall keep any person or persons, for the purpose of killing the game, or of the offender's goods, by warrant under the hand and seal of such justice or justices, before whom such per son or persons shall be convicted, as aforesaid, and for want of such distress, the offender or offenders shall be sent to the house of correction for the space of three months, and that such may and shall be lawful to and for any of her Majesty's justices of the peace in their respective counties, ridings, cities, towns corporate or liberty, and the Lords and Ladies of his, her, theirs, or any of their respective manors, within the said manors, to take away any such hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, or any other game whatsoever, from any higher, carman, carrier, innkeeper or victualler, or any other person or persons not qualified by the laws to keep the same under his or her own hand and seal, to impair his or her game-keeper or game-keepers upon his or her own lordship or manor, as aforesaid, to kill hare, pheasant, partridge, or any other game whatsoever, if the game be killed by distress or sale of the offender's goods, by warrant under the hand and seal of such justice or justices, before whom such person or persons shall be convicted, or for want of such distress, to kill or take the same for the use of such Lord or Lady, afterwards fell or dispose thereof, to any person or persons whatsoever, without the consent or knowledge of the Lord or Lady of such manor or manors that hath given such power or authority in manner as aforesaid; and having formally convicted of the same, to the use of such Lord or Lady of any manor, and upon the oath of one or more of such Majesty's justices of the peace, as aforesaid, upon such conviction, such game-keeper shall be committed to the house of correction for the space of three months, or there to be kept to hard labour.

Sec. 4. Not qualified by the laws of this realm. The de-defendant was convicted by Sir Henry Battleman, a justice of the peace of Middlesex, for unlawfully keeping a lutcher lurcery, and a gun to kill and destroy the game, New:

exiguitas qualifications per leges bajus regni ad hoc facendant, corpora formar statuti in buncmodi causa editi et proeli.

And this conviction being removed into the King's Bench by certiorari, was quashed a general rule will not apply.

because it was only averred generally, that he was not qualified, and did not aver that the defendant had not the particular qualifications mentioned in the statute as to degree, elate, &c. Lord Raym. 1445.

And it was said by the defendant, that he was not a person authorized by a lord (or lady) of a manor to kill game for his life.

And he certainly alleged, that he was not being a person qualified according to law, and so on, it had been enough; but the qualifications being difinitely and generally mentioned, the omission of one is fatal.

there was a conviction for keeping a greyhound; reciting that one William Towe came and informed, that the defendant being a person not qualified to keep a greyhound, did evertheless keep one at such a place, and therewith killed several hares; and that he being summoned did appear, and was admitted to have done nothing in excess, and therefore the justice convicted him.

It was objected, that the justice should let out, why the defendant was not a qualified person, as that he is not the son of an esquire, nor has 1000 a year in his own or his wife's right; for he ought not to make himself the sole judge of the law, when the case was so weighty, and it was unseemful to think the conviction would be good, having followed the words of the statute, and that if the defendant was qualified, he ought to have sworn it before the justice, being summoned for that purpose.

Eyre J. started an objection on this point. It was not the question to be decided, whether a person be of a sufficient age to keep a greyhound, or chiefly the opinion of the witnesses; for the conviction runs, that the witnessew as sworn fact, that the defendant being a pergon

no way qualified, did such a day keep a greyhound; so that it appears, the witnesses have given the law to the justice, and take upon them to judge of the defendant's qualifications, and the justice is only made use of as an infrument, to reduce the opinion of the witnesses into a conviction.

By Parker Ch. J. The being not qualified should be the conclusion of the justice, and not the words of the witness; for he ought not to swear generally a man is qualified, and at a particular time, it is not good:

This is only an invention, to support a conviction in general terms, which would be bad if the particular facts were alleged. Pratts J. Where the justices have a funnary jurisdiction, and no appeal lies (as in this case), we must keep them up firstly to the law, and I should be glad if we could make them fret out the whole particularly.

The case was adjourned; and afterwards Pengelly ferjeant mentioned two cases, 2d. and Hopyard, 8.

22 Ann. there was "not being qualified, licenc'd, or authorized to keep any game" and it was qualified.

The other was the same term, and qualified, because no qualifications were mentioned. And towards the end of the term this conviction was qualified; and the principal rea-

don declared to be, because the witnesees had taken upon themselves to judge of the qualifications.

the act of parliament had only given the justices jurisdiction to convict, but not the power of one another. The offences, whereas this was upon his own confession, which he admitted the justices had no power to take; and it follows in the act, that the person so convicted shall forfeit, which word so is relative to the former method by oath of one or more credible witnesses: and he put the common usage upon the matter, as the opinion of a poor person, which must be uncomplain of the churchwardens over the justices; the justices

Vol. II. No. 81, having jurisdiction only in that manner. Sed per curiam, (prater Eoy J.) The conviction must be confirmed. The intent of mentioning the oath of one witeness was only to direct the justices, that they should not convict on this evidence. Suppose the confession had not been before the justices, but before two witnesses, who had admitted, it that would be convining him on the oaths of witenesses, and yet the evidence would not be so strong as this.

By the Civil law, confession is esteemed the highest evidence, and in some cases, though there are one hundred witenesses, the party is tortured to death. Hence the justices had a better evidence than the oath of any single witeness, and it is a monstrous thing to say that a better form of evidence shall not do. Eyre J. conlices, thought there was no occasion to carry this art of parliament so far, as the disjunctive keep, or use, so that the bare keeping a lurcher was sufficient; and for this reason the confession of one witeness is sufficient, and that it ought to have been a conviction upon that statute.

The conviction was confirmed. Sirans, 546. Hil. 9 gen. 1. v. Gage.

Conviction on 5 Ann. c. 14, for keeping a lurcher to destry game, not being sworn the Mr. Eyre excepted,

That it is not shown he made use of the dog to destroy game; and it may be he only kept it for a gentleman who was qualified, it being common to put out dogs in that manner. Sed per curiam; The statute 5 Ann. c. 14, shall be disjunctive, keep or use, so that the bare keeping a lurcher was sufficient; and for this reason the convi-

sion of one witeness is sufficient, and that it ought to have been a conviction upon that statute: And in that case a diference was taken as to keeping a dog, which could only be to destroy the game, and keeping a gun, which a man might do for the defence of his house. The conviction was confirmed.

Sira, 496. Hil. 8 gen. 1. v. Thel.

The defence was confided in the peace of office for keeping a gun, contrary to 5 Ann. c. 14, and it was objected, that a gun is not mentioned in that statute, and though there are many things, for the bare keeping of which a man may be convinced; yet they are only such as can only be used for destruction of the game, whereas a gun is peculiarly for defence of a house, or for a farmer to shoot crows. Et contra it was said, that a gun is mentioned in 22 & 23 Car. 2, cap. 25, and considered there as an engine; and the 5 Ann. giving the words other engines, still be therefore to be included the gun, Sed per curiam, The statute 5 Ann. c. 14, shall be disjunctive, keep or use, so that the bare keeping a gun was an engine as is within that statute: And in that case a diference was taken as to keeping a dog, which could only be to destroy the game, and keeping a gun, which a man might do for the defence of his house. The conviction was confirmed.

Conviction on 5 Ann. c. 14, for keeping a gun not being qualified; and exception was 'taken by Mr. Faw-kerley, that there was not a reasonable fummon, for it was made on 5 October to appear the same day, which might be impossible upon account of distance, or the fum-mons being ferved late, and his witenesses might not be together on so short a time; then it is to appear upon parceI, parceI, whereas there are two parishes mentioned before, for the man may have gone to one, whilst they were convincing him at the other. Sick. 181. Wtjur cert.

The defendant appeared at the time and made defence, so that cures all defecals in the summons. Et per curiam; The answer is right. Then it was objected, that the statute requires the conviction to be by justices of the county where the offence was committed, and that does not appear in this case. Et per curiam; That must appear, or else they have no jurisdiction. Et per curiam, It does, for they distribute part of the penalty to the poor of the parish of Gobfield in co. Kent, infra quarn parceI, effigiam praed. eummmium fuit. And the justices are justicesthe county of Kent, and file themselves fo. Depositions being given it was qualified 4 per curiam.

ained shall extend, to prevent any person or persons from killing and destroying, or from taking and carrying away, in the day-time, any conies that shall be found on any sea or river banks, erected, or to be erected, for the preservation of the adjoining lands from being overflowed by the sea or river waters, so far as the flux and reflux of the tide does or shall extend, or upon any land or ground within one furlong distance of such sea or river banks; but that it shall and may be lawful to and for any person or persons, to enter upon any such banks, land, or ground as aforesaid, within the said county of Lincoln, and to kill, destroy, take, and carry away in the day-time, to his or their own use, any conies so found upon any such banks, land, or ground as aforesaid, within the said county, be or they doing as little damage as may be to the owner or tenant of such banks, land, or ground; any thing in this or any other act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sel. 9. Provided also, That no person or persons shall be obliged to make satisfaction for any damages that may be occasioned by such entry, unless such damages shall exceed the value of the conies slain.

Dor. Stat. Weff. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 20. If treffapers in parks be thereof attainted at the suit of the party, great and large amends shall be awarded according to the trespass, and they shall have three years imprisonment, and after the fine be made, at the King's pleasure (if they have whereof), and then shall find good sureties, that after they shall not commit the like trespass: and if they have not whereof to make fine, after three years imprisonment, they shall find like sureties; and if they cannot find like sureties, they shall abjure the realm. And if none fine be made within the year and day, the King shall have the fine.

Treffapers] This is, when a man either chafeth in a park, or endeavours to kill some of the game thereof. 2 Etbu. 199.

In parks] This act is to be understood of a lawful park only, whereunto three things are required: 1. A liberty, either by grant or prescription. 2. Inclosure by pale, wall or hedge, and 3. Beasts savages of the park. 2 Etbu. 199. Stat. 1 Hen. 7. c. 7. When information shall be made, that any person is hunting in any forest or park, by night, or with painted clothes, to any other of the king's forests, or to a justice of the peace, of any person to be suspected thereof, he may make a warrant to take the person, and to have him before the maker of the warrant, or any other of the said council, or justices of the peace; who may by their discretion examine him of the said hunting, and of the said doers in that behalf: And if the said person willfully conceal the said hunting, or any person with him defecive thereby, that then the same concealment be, against every such person so concealing, felony. But if he shall then avow the truth, and all that he shall be examined of, and know in his heart, if the said offences of hunting by him done, shall be but trespasses fenceable at the next general seisions. And if any rescues or disobeyance be made to any person having authority to execute the warrant, by any person which so should be arrealted, so that the execution of the warrant thereby be be not had, then the said rehus and doleourse shall be felony. And if any person shall be convict of any such hunting in any woods, walled parks, or gardens, or public walks, on pain of 12s. 4d. a month, to him who shall sue by act of debt; or the justices in seions may call before them any persons suspected, and examine them; and if they be found in default, may commit them till they have found surety for payment of the forfeiture to the King; and shall have the tenth part of such forfeiture for their labour.

Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 21. sct. 3. If any person unlawfully break or enter into any park impaled, or any other seeral ground closed with wall, pale or hedge, and take, or bear with him, or allow to be borne, or have, or take or kill, any deer within such park, &c. or shall take away any hawks, or the eggs of them, unlawfully out of the woods or ground of any person, (not having lawful authority to do) and thereof be convicted as aforesaid, he shall likewise suffer imprisonment for three, or seven years, and after the said three months expired, shall find sureties for his good behaviour for seven years; or else remain in prison until he find such sureties during the said seven years.

Sect. 4. Provided, that this act extend not to any park or inclosed ground, to be made and used for deer, without the grant and licence of the Queen.

Sect. 5. It shall be lawful for the party grieved to take his further remedy against all such offenders for his damages, and to recover the treble value of the same, as well before justices of oyer and termers, justices of affize, and justices of peace, as elsewhere in any other the Queen's courts of record; and upon satisfaction of the treble damages, or upon the confession thereof by the party, before the justices in open seions, it shall be at the liberty of the party grieved, to release the forfeiting party, from the act.

Sect. 7. If any person shall be bound before any of the justices to the Queen, for his good abearing for seven years, according to this act, and the party so bound within the seven years come before the justices of peace of the county, where the offence was committed, in open seions, and there confess the same; and of his own accord, and freely the party grieved according to this act; the justices may within the seven years discharge the recognizance and the party.

Stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 13. sect. 2. If any person shall unlawfully enter into any park, or inclosed ground with ground inclosed with wall, pale, or hedge, and used for the keeping of deer or conies, and unlawfully hunt, chase, take, or lay any deer or conies within such park or grounds, against the will of the owners, and thereof shall be convicted at the suit of the King or the party, he shall suffer imprisonment of three months, and shall pay to the party treble damages and costs, to be ascribed by the justices before whom he shall be convicted, and shall find sureties for his good abearing for seven years, or else shall remain in prison until he find such sureties during the said seven years.

Sect. 3. The justices of oyer and termers, justices of of affize, justices of the peace and gaol delivery in their eniors shall have power to inquire, hear; and determine the said offences by examination of the offenders, and to award process as well upon indictments taken before them, as by bill of complaint, or other action.

Sect. 4. It shall be lawful to the party grieved to take his further remedy against such offender for his damages, and to recover the treble value of the same, as well before the justices of oyer and termers, justices of affize, and justices of peace and gaol delivery in their seions, or in the courts at Westminster, and upon satisfaction of the treble damages to the party, or upon the acknowledgment thereof before the justices, it shall be at the liberty of the party grieved to release the forfeithip of the good behaviour at any time within the seven years.

Sect. 5. If any person not having hereditaments of the yearly value of forty pounds, or not worth in goods two hundred pounds, shall use any gun, bow or cross-bow to hunt or shoot deer within the kingdom, or shall keep hounds, or bear or shoot for the deer, hares, hares' backs, or bucks, on pain of 12s. 4d. a month, to him who shall sue by act of debt; or the justices in seions may call before them any persons suspected, and examine them; and if they be found in default, may commit them till they have found surety for payment of the forfeiture to the King; and shall have the tenth part of such forfeiture for their labour.

Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 21. sct. 3. If any person unlawfully break or enter into any park impaled, or any other seeral ground closed with wall, pale or hedge, and take, or bear with him, or allow to be borne, or have, or take or kill, any deer within such park, &c. or shall take away any hawks, or the eggs of them, unlawfully out of the woods or ground of any person, (not having lawful authority to do) and thereof be convicted as aforesaid, he shall likewise suffer imprisonment for three, or seven years, and after the said three months expired, shall find sureties for his good behaviour for seven years; or else remain in prison until he find such sureties during the said seven years.

Sect. 4. Provided, that this act extend not to any park or inclosed ground, to be made and used for deer, without the grant and licence of the Queen.

Sect. 5. It shall be lawful for the party grieved to take his further remedy against all such offenders for his damages, and to recover the treble value of the same, as well before justices of oyer and termers, justices of affize, and justices of peace, as elsewhere in any other the Queen's courts of record; and upon satisfaction of the treble damages, or upon the confession thereof by the party, before the justices in open seions, it shall be at the liberty of the party grieved, to release the forfeiting party, from the act.

Sect. 7. If any person shall be bound before any of the justices to the Queen, for his good abearing for seven years, according to this act, and the party so bound within the seven years come before the justices of peace of the county, where the offence was committed, in open seions, and there confess the same; and of his own accord, and freely the party grieved according to this act; the justices may within the seven years discharge the recognizance and the party.

Stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 13. sect. 2. If any person shall unlawfully enter into any park, or inclosed ground with ground inclosed with wall, pale, or hedge, and used for the keeping of deer or conies, and unlawfully hunt, chase, take, or lay any deer or conies within such park or grounds, against the will of the owners, and thereof shall be convicted at the suit of the King or the party, he shall suffer imprisonment of three months, and shall pay to the party treble damages and costs, to be ascribed by the justices before whom he shall be convicted, and shall find sureties for his good abearing for seven years, or else shall remain in prison until he find such sureties during the said seven years.

Oath of one witness) This must not be upon the single oath of the informer; and a conviction was qualified for that reason; divers convictions having been quashed for the same reason before. Ld. Raym. 1454. Stran. 316.

Proceeded in 12 months after the offence] A conviction being returned on a certiorari, the objection was, that the conviction appeared to be a year after the day of the information. But it was held sufficient that the information be prosecuted within a year after the Act; for that it is a good commencement of the suit, and it is from that the computation is made in all such cases. 1 Salk. 383.

But by the Black act, this prosecution may be commenced at any time within three years after the offence. Wounded, taken or killed thirty pounds Where several persons charged, they shall forfeit each 30l. and not one sum of 30l. for all. 1 Salk. 182.

Leved by diffrefs] Tho' the fale of the goods is not mentioned in the statute, yet, nevertheless where the law gives a diffrefs for a publick benefit, the officer may fell. 1 Salk. 579.

By warrant from the justices Altho' the confable is not appointed to execute this warrant, nor is he so much as named in the clause; yet he is bound to obey the warrant, and is indifpensible if he does not. But he need not return to the warrant, merely to diffrefs; for that is not required, and it may be necessary to keep it for his own justification; but he must either return the warrant, or certify what he has done upon it. 1 Salk. 381.

One third part to the informer] The penalty need not be distrubuted by the conviction, viz. 10l. to the informer, 10l. to the poor, and 10l. to the party grieved; for the judgment in such cases seldom mentions a distribution; it is enough to say, that he is convicted, and has forfeited 30l. according to the statute. 1 Salk. 383.

Sufficient diffrefs If the justice finds there is nothing to distrain, then he must make a record thereof, and make an adjudication for corporal punishment; but the offender is not to pay part, and suffer corporally for the refuse. Ld. Raym. 545. 1195. 6.

The defendant was committed for want of diffrefs; and the warrant set forth, that it had been certified to the justice by the confable, that there was not sufficient diffrefs. It was objected, that there ought to have been a warrant to levy, and a return to that, that there was no diffrefs; it may be the confable only told him so. But by the court, the warrant was well enough; and the word certified imports to be in a legal manner. Stran. 263. See all these cases at full length in A New Treatise on the Laws of the Game, lately published. p. 90—136.

Stat. 5 Gen. 1. cap. 15. selt. 1. *No certiorari shall be allowed to remove proceedings concerning any matter in the act 3 & 4 W. IV. & M. cap. 101. unless the party convicted shall before allowance of such certiorari, and at the same time that security is given for payment of costs, become bound to the justice before whom such conviction was made, with forfeitures to be approved of by the justice, in the penalty of thirty pounds for each offence, with condition to prosecute such certiorari with effect, and to pay such justice the forfeiture due by such conviction, to be distributed as the statute directs, or to render the personal convicted to such justice in one month after the conviction shall be confirmed, or a procedendo granted; and in default the justice may proceed to execution as if no certiorari had been awarded.*

Selt. 2. After confirmation of any conviction on the said statute by any superior court, and delivering the rule to the justices, whereby such conviction hath been so confirmed, such justice may proceed against the party convicted with all the proceedings had before granted. Selt. 3. Any person sued for any thing done in pursuance of this act, or of the said act of 3 & 4 W. IV. & M. cap. 10. may plead the general issue, and if a verdict be had against him, the defendant, &c. the defendant shall have treble costs.

Vol. II. No. 82.
Sel. 6. Every person convicted by virtue of the said statute shall, before he be discharged out of custody, become bound to the person against whom the offence was committed in fifty pounds, with condition for his good behaviour, and not to offend in like manner, and on a refusal to appear, such person shall be committed to the county gaol till such bond be given; and if such person after his becoming bound be convicted of any matter in the said statute, the bond shall be forfeited and the penalty recovered, with costs, in any court at Wignallers, where such penalties shall be distributed in the same manner as the forfeitures are such. If he or she be convicted, he or she shall forfeit fifty pounds for each day so killed, &c. to be levied by diffrets, and distributed as the forfeitures in the said act are to be, and for want of diffrets he shall be imprisoned three years, and be sent in the pillory two hours in some market-day in the town next the place where the offence was committed, by the chief or under-officers of such town.

Sel. 5. If the keeper or other officer of any forest, &c. where deer are usually kept, shall be convicted on the statute of 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 10. for killing and taking away any deer, or any being killed without contradiction the owner or person chiefly intrusted with the custody of such forest, &c. he shall forfeit fifty pounds for each deer so killed, &c. to be levied by diffrets, and distributed as the forfeitures in the said act are to be, and for want of diffrets he shall be imprisoned three years, and be sent in the pillory two hours in some market-day in the town next the place where the offence was committed, by the chief or under-officers of such town.

Sel. 6. If any person shall pull down or destroy the piles or walls of any park, &c. where any deer shall be kept, without the consent of the owner or person chiefly intrusted with the custody thereof, and on the oath of one or more witnesses, before one justice of the county where the offence is committed, he shall be subject to the forfeitures by the act 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 10. inflicted for killing one deer.

The defendant being brought up from Quatreto by balbuc corpus, it appeared upon the return, that he was committed for deer-dealing, as the statute of the 3 W. & c. 10. directed, not having sufficient diffrets; and that it was done by one justice under the statute of the 5 G. And exception was taken to the warrant, that it doth not appear, the conviction was ever confirmed in this court, or that the rule for confirmation was delivered to the justice, and therefore the justice could not proceed to execution: For the statute gives to the justice a jurisdic tion after confirmation, which he had not before; and therefore he ought to have tried every thing requisite to found his jurisdiction upon. But by the court; We take notice of our own records, and by them it appears that the prosecution is unreasonable: And the statute doth not give the justice a new jurisdiction, but only revives his old one, which was suspended by the certiorari. And the defendant was remanded. Str. 203.

Stat. 5 Geo. 1. cap. 28. sect. 1. If any person shall enter any park or other enclosed ground, and there being no sufficient dace to be levied, or to kill any deer there, without the consent of the true owner or person intrusted with the custody of such park, &c. or shall be aiding therein, and being indicted for such offence before any judge of gaol delivery in the county wherein such park, &c. shall lie, and be convicted thereof by verdict or confession, he shall be sent to some of his Majesty's plantations in America for seven years; and the court before whom he shall be convicted, or any subsequent court, shall have power to transfer such offender by order of court to the use of any person who shall contract for the performance of such plantation.

Sel. 2. Nothing hereof shall repeal any former law made for the punishment of deer-dealers, and when any offender shall be punished by force of this act he shall not be prosecuted by force of any other law.

Stat. 9 Geo. 1. cap. 22. sect. 13. Any prosecution for any offence against the statute 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 10. may be commenced within three years from the offence committed.

Sel. 17. If any venison or skin of a deer be found in the custody of any person, and it shall appear that he bought it of one that might justly be suspected to have unlawfully killed or taken it, and that the venison does not produce the party of whom he bought it, or prove upon oath the name and place of abode of such party; then the person who bought the same shall be convicted of such offence by any one justice of peace, and shall be liable to the penalties for killing a deer, by Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 10. See title Wiltshire Act.

Stat. 9 Geo. 1. cap. 22. sect. 7. If any person who shall hereafter be convicted of unlawful hunting, killing, wounding or taking deer in any enclosed forest or chase where deer are usually kept, shall during the continuance of the act 9 Geo. 1. cap. 22. [which see in Wiltshire Act] be guilty of a second offence of the like nature, and shall thereof be convicted upon information or information; such person shall be transported to one of his Majesty's plantations in America for seven years: And if he shall return to Great Britain or Ireland within the said seven years, he shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

Sel. 9. The offender may be tried for such second offence before the justices of affize,oyer and terminer, or gaol-delivery of the county or place where such second offence shall be committed, and the justice before whom such offender was convicted of such former offence, shall certify a copy of such conviction to the next quarter sessions of the county wherein such first offence was committed, to be kept amongst the records; and the clerk of the peace shall at the request of the preceptor, or any other in his Majesty's behalf, certify a transcript briefly containing the effect of the first conviction, which shall be a sufficient proof that such offender hath been convicted of such former offence.

Sel. 9. If any person armed with offensive weapons shall, during the continuance of the said act, come into any forest, chase or park wherein deer are usually kept, with an intent to pursue, hunt, take in toils, kill, wound, or take away any red or fallow deer, and shall there unlawfully bestow or wound any keeper or page of any such forest, chase or park, his servants or aidsants in the execution of their offices, and be thereof convicted; such person shall be transported to his Majesty's plantations in America for seven years; and if such person returns to Great Britain or Ireland within the seven years, he shall be liable to death.

Stat. 28 Geo. 2. cap. 19. sect. 3. Whereas the burning and destroying of gos, furze, and fern in forests and chases, doth destroy the cover necessity for the preservation of the deer and game there; therefore if any person, not having a right or legal licence to do the same, shall set fire to, burn, or destroy (or be aiding therein) any gos, furze, or fern in any forest or chase, without consent of the owner, or person chiefly intrusted with the custody of such forest or chase, or of some part thereof, and being brought before a justice, shall be thereof convicted by confession, or oath of one witness, or of two witnesses, or of three witnesses, be committed to some of his Majesty's plantations in America for five years, or not less than forty shillings, half to the informer, and half to the poor, and if not forthwith paid, to be levied by diffrets; and if no sufficient diffrets can be found, the justice shall commit him to the common gaol, for any time not exceeding three months, nor less than one month. See title Fifth.

Graves or Moor-games. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. sect. 2. Every person who shall shoot at, kill or destroy, with any gun or bow, any gos, heath-cock or moor-game, shall, on conviction before two justices, by confession, or oath of two witnesses, be committed to some of his Majesty's plantations in America for three months, unless upon conviction he pay to the churchwardens for the use of the poor, 20s. or, after one month after his commitment, become bound by recognizance with two footies in 20l. each, before two justices, not to offend again in like manner: The recogniz ance to be taken before the next fair.

Stat. 4 & 5 W. 3. c. 23. sect. 11. For the better preserving the red and black game of gosou commonly called cocks or heath-polls, no person whatsoever on any mountains, hills, heaths, moors, forests, chases, or other wastes, shall presume to burn between February the first and the third day of May next, any green heath, furze, heath, furs, gos, or fern, on pain of being committed to the house of correction for any time not exceeding one month, month, nor less than ten days, there to be whipt, and kept to hard labour.

Stat. 9 Ann. c. 25, s. 3. If any person whatsoever shall take or kill any moor, heath-game, or grouse, in the 20 l. an apiece, shall two justices, not to offend justice, on oath of one witness, forfeit five pounds, half to the informer, and half to the poor, by drittis; and for want of drittis to be sent to the house of correction for three months for the first time, and for every other offence four months.

15 & 17 Hen. 8. c. 10. No person or persons, of what estate, degree or condition they be, from henceforth shall trace, destroy and kill any hare in the snow with any dog, bitch, nor otherwise. And that the justices of the peace, within every shire, at every sessions of the peace, and in their several sessions, shall have authority and power to inquire of such offenders. And after such inquisitions found, the said justices of the peace, and stewards of leets, for every hare so killed, shall cett upon every such offender six shillings and eight pence, to be forfeited to their said Sovereign Lord, that shall be so found by the justices of peace in their seale, and the forfeitures found in every leet to be to the Lord of the leet.

Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 10. sect. 5. If any manner of persons shall hunt with spaniels in any ground where corn or other grain shall then grow (except in his own ground), at such time as any eared corn or grain shall be Growing therein, and be thereon trodden on, or offend justice, and be thereof convicted at the assizes, sejissions, or leet; he shall forfeit 40 l. to the owner of the corn; and if not paid in ten days, he shall be imprisoned for one month. And any justice may examine the offender, and bind him over to appear at the next sessions to answer the offence, and to pay the damage.

Stat. 1 &c. 27, sect. 2. Every person who shall shoot at, kill or destroy any hare, with any gun or bow, shall on conviction before two justices, by confession, or oath of two witnesses, be committed to gaol three months, unless he pay to the churchwardens, and be thereon to purge the poor 20 l. for every hare; or after one month after his commitment become bound by recognizance with two sureties before two justices, in 20 l. apiece, not to offend again in like manner. The recognizance to be returned to the next sessions. And every person, who shall trace or course any hares in the field, shall on conviction before two justices, by confession, or oath of two witnesses, be committed to gaol for three months, unless he pay to the churchwardens for the use of the poor, 20 l. for every hare; or after one month after his commitment become bound by recognizance with two sureties before two justices, in 20 l. apiece, not to offend again in like manner. And every person who shall at any time take or destroy any hares, with hare-pipes, cords, or any such instruments or other engines, shall forfeit for every hare 20 l. in like manner.

Sect. 4. Every person who shall fell, or buy to sell again, any hare, shall, on conviction at the assizes or sejussions, or before two justices out of sejissions, forfeit for every hare 10 l. half to the poor, and half to him that will sue.

Stat. 23 & 25 Car. 2. cap. 25, sect. 6. If any person shall be found or apprehended setting or using any flairs, hare-pipes, or other like engines, and shall be thereon convicted, by confession, or oath of one witness, before one justice, in one month after the offence; he shall give to the party injured such damages, and in such time, as the justice shall appoint, and shall pay down presently to the overseers for the use of the poor, such sum not exceeding 10 l. for every hare, except he be thereon convicted, and shall pay the justice the full damage, which if he shall not do, the justice shall commit him to the house of correction not exceeding one month.

Stat. 9 Ann. c. 25, sect. 3. If any person whatsoever shall take or kill any hare in the night-time, he shall on conviction before one justice, on oath of one witness, forfeit 5 l. for every hare, and all the information, if any, to the justices, by drittis; and for want of drittis to be sent to the house of correction for three months for the first offence, and for every other offence four months.

By Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. commonly called the Black Act, if any person, armed and disguised, shall appear in any warren or place where hares are usually kept, or unlawfully rob any such warren, or (whether armed and disguised or otherwise) shall refuse any person in custody for either of the said offences, and shall not then have any certificate or warrant in any such unlawful act; he shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

Hawks and hawking. Stat. 34 Ed. 4. c. 22. Every person who findeth a faulcon, terrece, laver, or laneret, or other hawk that is left, he shall presently bring the same to the seire; and the seiriff shall make a proper record in all the good towns in the county, that he hath such an hawk in his custody; and if he is challenged in four months, the owner shall have him again, paying the costs: If he be not challenged in four months, the seiriff shall have him, making good all damages which be done by, or for him, if he be a simple man, but if he be a gentleman, and of estate to have the hawk, taking of him reasonable costs for the time that he had him in his custody.

Stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 19. If any man flie any hawk, and the same carry away, not doing the ordinance aforefaid; it shall be done of him as of a thief, that flieeth a horfe or other thing. (That is, he shall be guilty of felony, but shall have his clergy. 3 Eliz. c. 8.)

Stat. 14 Hen. 7. c. 17. No manner of person, of what condition or degree he be, shall take or cause to be taken, on his own ground, or any other man's, the eggs of any fow, pheasant, hawk, or partridge, under 20 l. for every egg, or the price of the same, and all the cost of the same, for taking (being convicted thereof before the justices of the peace) of imprisonment for a year and a day, and fine at the King's will; half to the King, and half to the owner of the ground where the eggs were taken. And no man shall bear any hawk of the breed of England, called a parson, goلفohawk, tafel, laver, laneret, or faulcon; on pain of forfeiting his hawk to the King. And if he bring any of them over sea, or out of Scotland, he shall bring a certificate thereof from the officer of the port, or warden of the march; on the like pain of forfeiting the same to the King.

And the person that bringeth any such hawk to the King, shall have a reasonable reward of the King, or else the hawk for his labour. And no man shall take any ayre, faulcon, goلفohawk, tafel, laver, laneret, or saulcon, in their warren, wood, or other place; nor purposely drive them out of their coverts accustomed to breed in, to cause them to go to other coverts to breed, or flay them for any hurt done them; On pain of ten pounds, half to him that will sue before the justices of the peace, and half to the King.

Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 21. sect. 3. If any person shall take away any hawks or their eggs, by any means unlawfully, out of the warren or ground of any person; and be thereof convicted at the assizes or sejissions, on information, bill, or information, at the suit of the King, or of the party; he shall be imprisoned three months, and shall pay treble damages; and after the three months expired, shall find securities for his good behaviour for seven years, or remain in prison till he do.

Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 10. If any manner of person shall hawk in another man's corn after it is eared, and before it is stocked; and be convicted at the assizes, sejussions, or leet; he shall forfeit 40 l. to the owner: And if not paid in ten days, he shall be imprisoned for a month.

Partridges and pheasants. Stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 17. it is enacted, That no person, of what condition he be, shall take or cause to be taken, any pheasants or partridges, by nets, fnares or other engines, out of his own warren, upon the freehold of any other person, without the special licence of the owner or possessor of the same; on pain of 10 l. half to him that shall sue, and half to the owner or possessor, the ground where they shall be taken.

Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 10. If any person, of what estate, degree or condition soever, shall take, kill or destroy any pheasants or partridges in the night-time; and shall be thereof convicted at the assizes, sejussions, or leet; he shall forfeit for every pheasant 20 l. and for every partridge 10 l. half to him that shall sue, and half to the lord of the manor, manor, unless such lord shall license or procure the said taking or killing, in which case the said half shall go to the poor, to be recovered by any churchwardens of the parish at the rate of 10s. per day after conviction, he shall be imprisoned for one month. And moreover, besides such forfeiture and imprisonment, he shall give bond to some justice of the peace, with good sureties not to offend again in like manner for the space of two years.

Sed. 1. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. Sed. 2. Every person who shall shoot at, kill or destroy any pheasant or partridge, with any gun or bow; or shall take, kill or destroy them with setting-dogs and nets, or with any manner of nets, snares, engines or instruments whatsoever; shall be liable to conviction before two justices, by confession, or oath of two witnesses, to be committed to gaol for 3 months, unless he pay upon conviction to the churchwardens for the use of the poor 20l. for every pheasant, partridge, or egg; or after one month after his commitment, become bound by recognizance with two sureties, before two justices, in 20l. each, not to offend again in like manner. The recognizance to be returned to the next sessions.

Sed. 4. Every person who shall kill, or buy to sell again, any partridge or pheasant (except of the partridges and brought home from beyond sea), shall be liable to conviction at the assizes or sessions, forfeit for every partridge 10s. and for every pheasant 20s. half to him that will sue, and half to the poor.

Stat. 7 Jac. 1. t. 1. s. 1. Sed. 2. Every person whatsoever, who shall hawk at, destroy or kill, and carry off any hawk or dog, by colour of hunting, between the first of July and the last of August, shall, on conviction before two justices, by confession or oath of two witnesses, in six months after the offence, be committed to gaol for one month, unless he pay upon conviction to the churchwardens for the use of the poor, 40s. for every hawk or dog, and 20s. for every pheasant or partridge which he, his hawk or dog shall take or kill.

Sed. 7. Every free warrener, lord of a manor, or freeholder feised in his own or his wife’s right, of 40l. a year liable of inheritance, or of the value of 60l. or worth in goods 400l. may take pheasants and partridges (in the day-time only) in his own free warren, manor or freehold, betwixt Michaelmas and Christmas yearly.

Sed. 8. Every person, who shall take, kill or destroy any pheasant or partridge, with setting-dogs and nets, or otherwise with any manner of nets, snares, engines or instruments whatsoever, shall, on conviction before two justices, by confession, or oath of one witness, be committed to gaol for three months, unless he forthwith pay to the churchwardens or overseers 20s. for every pheasant or partridge and further to become bound by recognizance of 20l. before one justice, that he shall not thereafter kill or destroy any pheasant or partridge. The recognizance to be filed at the next sessions.

Stat. 9. Geo. c. 25. If any person whatsoever shall take or kill any pheasant or partridge in the night-time, he shall, on conviction before one justice, on oath of one witness, forfeit 5l. half to the informer, and half to the poor, by day or night, by way of different, or be sent to the house of correction for three months for the first offence, and for every other offence four months.

Stat. 2. Geo. 3. c. 19. For the better prescription of this game in this kingdom, it may please your most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted and be it enacted by the King’s most Excellent Majesty, and by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that no person or persons, after the first day of June 1752, shall, upon any pretence whatsoever, take, keep, destroy, carry, sell, have, live, keep, or have in their possession or cornany, either pheasant or any partridge, between the 12th day of February and the first day of September in any year; or any pheasant between the first day of February and the first day of October in any year; or any heath-fowl, commonly called black-game, between the first day of January and the 20th day of August in any year; and to recover all manner of lands and game, between the first day of December and the 25th day of July in any year.

2. Provided always, that nothing in this act shall extend to any pheasant which shall be taken in the season allowed by this act, and kept in a mew or breeding place.

3. Provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend to that part of Great Britain called Scotland.

4. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that if any person perform for two years this act in any of the several said cafes, and shall be lawfully convicted thereof by the oath of one or more credible witnesses or witnesses; every pheasant shall, for every partridge, pheasant, heath-fowl, or grouse, so taken, killed, destroyed, carried, sold, bought, or found in his, her or their possession or use, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, forfeit and pay the sum of five pounds to the person or persons who shall inform or sue for the same; and it shall and may be lawful to and for any person or persons to sue and prosecute for, and recover the said penalty of five pounds, with full costs of suit, and if the suit is brought before any one of his Majesty’s courts of record at Westminster; and in such action or suit, no ejectment, warrant of law, or more than one impression, shall be allowed.

Pigeon. A lord of a manor may build a dove-cote upon his own land, parcel of the manor; but a tenant of a manor without the land of the lord has not the same privilege.

3 Stat. 248. But any freeholder may build a dove-cot on his own ground.

Cra. El. 548. Cra. 3. 392. And it hath been adjudged, that erecting of a dove-house is not a common nuisance, nor preterable in the least. Cra. 4. 490. 491.

Stat. 1. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. Every person who shall shoot at, kill or destroy any house-dove or pigeon with a y gun or bow; or shall take, kill or destroy the same with setting-dogs and nets, or with any manner of nets, snares, engines, or instruments whatsoever; shall, on conviction before two justices, by confession, or oath of two witnesses, be committed to gaol three months, unless he pay to the churchwardens for the use of the poor, 20l. or, after one piece after his commitment, become bound by recognizance with two sureties, before two justices, in 20l. a-piece, not to offend again in like manner; the recognizance to be returned to the next sessions.

Stat. 2. Geo. 3. c. 39. sect. 1. If any person or persons shall shoot at, with an intent, or shall by any means whatever kill or take, with a wilful intent to destroy, any house-dove or pigeon, and shall be thereof convicted by the confession of the party offending, or the oath of one or more credible witnesses or witnesses, before one or more justices or justices of the peace of the county, city, town corporate, division, riding, or place (where a oath fuch justice or justices are hereby authorized to administer) whatsoever any such offence or offences shall be committed, or the party or parties offending shall be apprehended; and who shall be provided as aforesaid in such offense, shall, for every such offense forfeit and pay the sum of twenty shillings, to the person or persons who shall inform against, and prosecute to conviction, any such offender or offenders; and in case the money so forfeited shall not be forthwith paid on every such conviction, then shall and may be lawful for any justice or justices to commit any such offender or offenders, who shall be so convicted as aforesaid, to the common gaol of the county, or place where the party is convicted or apprehended, there to remain and be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months,

Stat. 22 Ed. 4. c. 4.

No perfon (other than the King's fon) unlefs he has lands to hold free of the value of five marks a year, fhall have any mark or game of fowl, unless for the fouling the fawns, or other laws, unlefs he fhall be liable to fenpay for the fame, to be conducted on with effect within the space of two calendar months after every fuch offence fhall be committed, and that when the perfon fhall fuffer imprisonments for default of payment of any penalty imposed under this act, fuch perfon fhall not be liable afterwards to pay fuch penality.

Stat. 17 Hen. 7. c. 17.

No perfon fhall take or caufe to be taken, on his own ground, or any other man's, the eggs of any fawn; on pain of conviction before the juftices of the peace of imprisonment for a year and a day, and fine at the King's will, half to the King, and half to the owner of the fawns.

Stat. 1 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. fet. 2.

Every perfon who fhall take the eggs of any fawns out of the net, or wilfully spoil them in the net; and fhall be convicted there- of before two juftices, by confeffion, or oath of two witneffes; fhall be committed to gaol three months, unlefs he pay to the churchwardens for the ufe of the poor the half to the King, and half to the owner of the fawns.

Stat. 1 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. fet. 2.

Every perfon who fhall take the eggs of any fawns out of the net, or wilfully spoil them in the net; and fhall be convicted there- of before two juftices, by confeffion, or oath of two witneffes; fhall be committed to gaol three months, unlefs he pay to the churchwardens for the ufe of the poor the half to the King, and half to the owner of the fawns.

It is fenfible to take any fawns that be lawfully marked, tho' they be at large, and to take fawns unmarked; if they be domestical or tame, that is, kept in a mote, or in a pond near to a dwelling-house, to fteal fuch is herein mentioned.

It is fenfible to take any fawns that be lawfully marked, tho' they be at large, and to take fawns unmarked; if they be domestical or tame, that is, kept in a mote, or in a pond near to a dwelling-house, to fteal fuch is herein mentioned.

So it feemeth of fawns unmarked, fo long as they keep within a man's manor, or within his private rivers; or if they happen to escape from thence, and be purfued and taken, and brought in again. But if fawns that are unmarked fhall be abroad, and fhall attain to their places within a certain precept or place. Deft. c. 156. 7 Ga.

No perfon, between the laft day of May and the laft day of August yearly, fhall take, or caufe to be taken, any wild ducks, mallards, widgons, teal, or wild geese, with nets or other engines, on pain of a year's imprisonment, and of fo much as fhall be due by law to the half, and half to him that will fufe by action of debt: Alfo the juftices of the peace may inquire of, hear and determine the fame, as in cafes of trefpas.

Sect. 4. But any gentleman, or any other that may difpleafe the King, or be caufe to be taken, any wild ducks, mallards, widgons, teal, or wild geese, with nets or other engines, on pain of a year's imprisonment, and of fo much as fhall be due by law to the half, and half to him that will fufe by action of

debt: Alfo the juftices of the peace may inquire of, hear and determine the fame, as in cafes of trefpas.

Sect. 4. But any gentleman, or any other that may difplease the King, or be cause to be taken, any wild ducks, mallards, widgons, teal, or wild geese, with nets or other engines, on pain of a year's imprisonment, and of such as shall be due by law to the half, and half to him that will sue by action of debt: Also the justices of the peace may determine the same, as in cases of trefpafs.

No manner of perfon, from the first day of March to the laft day of June yearly, fhall take or destroy the eggs of any mallard, teal or other water fowl, on pain of a year's imprisonment, and of fo much as fhall be due by law to the half, and half to him that will sue by action of debt: Also the justices of the peace may determine the same, as in cases of trefpafs.

No manner of perfon, from the first day of March to the laft day of June yearly, shall, by day or night take or destroy any eggs of any kind of wild fowl, from any net or place for the county where they may chance to be laid by any of the fame wild fowl, on pain of imprisonment for a year, and to forfeit for every egg of a buffard 20 l. of a bitour or chovelard 8 d. and of other wild fowl (except crews, ravens, bolards, or other fowls used to be eaten) 1 d. half to the King, and half to him that will sue by action of debt: Also the justices of the peace may determine the same, as in cases of trefpafs.

Every perfon who fhall fhoot at, Kill, or deftroy with any gun or bow, any mallard, duck, teal, or widgon, and the fame to be proved by the judgemen of two witnesses, who fhall be committed to gaol for three months, unlefs he pay to the churchwardens for the ufe of the poor the half to the King, and half to the owner of the fawns.

reciting, That whereas very great numbers of wild fowl of several kinds are destroyed by the pernicious practife of driving and taking them with hayes, tunnels, and other nets, in the fens, lakes, and broad waters, where bowls refert in the nature of a wild deftruflion, and that at the time, when the bowls alfo are fick and inftilling their feathers, and the fowl unfavourly and unwholesome, to the prejudice of them, and to the great damage and decay of the breed of wild fowl; it is therefore enacted, That if any perfon or perfon whatsoever, (between June 1. and October 1. yearly, at 10 Ga. c. 32.] fhall by hayes, tunnels, or other nets, drive and take any wild duck, teal, or widgon, or any other fowl, commonly reputed water fowl, in any of the fens, lakes, broad waters, or other places of refert for wild fowl in the mold-ling feaon, fuch perfon or perfon who fhall fo offend, and therefore, shall be convicted before any one or more of her Majesty's juftices of the peace, for the saufon, that fuch offence fhall be committed by oath of one or more creditable witneffes, fhall, for every wild duck, teal, or other water fowl fo taken as afoard, forfeit and pay the fum of five tholfings; one moiety thereof to be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish where fuch offence fhall be committed; the fame to be levied by diftreff and fale of the offender's goods, by warrant under the hand and feal of the juftice and ju-tices of the peace before whom the offender fhall be convicted, rendering the overplus, (if any be) above the penalty above mentioned as diftreff, and for want of diftreff the offender fhall be committed to gaol for one year, and for any time not exceeding one month, nor lefs than fourteen days, there to be whipped, and kept to hard labour; and the juftice or juftices of the peace, before whom fuch perfon or perfon offending fhall be convicted, fhall order fuch hayes, nets, or tunnels, that were used in driving and taking the said wild fowl, as afoard, to be fected and immediately deftroved in the preference of fuch juftices or juftices.

Cautions. It feems that by the Common law, the playing at cards, dice, &c. when prafticed innocently as a recreation, the better to fit a perfon for businefs, is not at all unlawful, nor punishable by a fentence whatsoever. 2 Bent. 175. 5 Mod. 1. 1 Salt. 100.

Alfo it is agreed, that a perfon who wins money at gaming, may maintain a special indebtedness affummoit for it; for the contract is not unlawful in itself, and the winner's venturing

venturing his money is a sufficient consideration to in-title him to the action. 3 Lev. 118. 6 Mod. 128.
5 mod. 173. 1 Vent. 112.
But it seems to be the better opinion, that a general indictus assault is not for money won at play, for the contract is executory, and but a wager, which is but a collateral promise; and this action will lie in the coffee but where debt will lie, which must be on a contract exceded, fully a labour done, or some other meritorious cafe. 6 Mod. 128. Lott. 180. 5 Mod. 13, and Carth. 336. S. P. where it is said, that the chief reason of this opinion was, because the court would not contenance gaming, by giving such an easy remedy for money won at play; and for 3 Lev. 118, and 1 Vent. 175.
An indictment assault lies against him who holds the wager, because it is a promise in law to deliver it, if won. 5 Mod. 13. If upon a wager the money is deposited in the hands of a third person, and the determination left to two, and one of them refuses to determine the matter, no action lies on such a wager till the adjudication, and the party may justify the detainer; but if it happened that the wager became impossible to be determined, as if the judges died, or the time was past, then the wagers dissolve, and each party shall have his money again.
2 Bat. Abr. 670.
And although gaming, in the manner as has been said, may be lawful, yet if a person be guilty of cheating, as by playing with false cards, dice, &c. he may be indicted for it at Common Law, and fined and imprisoned according to the circumstances of the cafe and heuineofs of the offence. 2 Bat. Abr. 670.
Also all common gaming houses are nuisances in the eye of the law, not only because they are great tempta-ations to idleness, but also because they are apt to draw together great numbers of disorderly persons, which cannot but be very inconvenient to the neighbourhood.
1 Hawk. P. C. 198.
Also from the destructive and pernicious consequences which such meetings necessarily attend excessive gaming, both the courts of law and equity have shown their abhorrence of
it. Hence in a cafe where A. came to the house of B. and won of him 500l, which he carried away, and afterwards won 1500l, more, which he had in his posfession, which B. and his servant took from him by violence, and A. having brought an action of trespass, the court of Chancery granted an injunction. 1 Vern. 489.
Sir Basil Forevraje v. Bret. 2 Vern. 71. S. C. where the cause came to a hearing, and the defendant finding, that the court inclined so strongly against him, submitted to a proposition made by the counsel, which was aftertwards decreed as by consent; and on this occasion the Lord Chancellor said, "I am glad to hear the express cafe of Sir Cecil Bishop, and Sir Thomas Stagles, that came before the Lord Chief Justice Hale in the King's Bench, upon a woman at a horse-race, where Lord Hale declared, he would give the defendant leave to impair from time to time.
So where one apprentice lost 100l at two fights at Exeter, to which he was paid in ready money;
and for the other 50l. he gave his bond of 100l, penalty, and on a bill to be relieved against it, the court of Chancery decreed the bond to be delivered up and cancelled, although the defendant insisted by his anwser, that he was unwilling, and declined paying for so much, and that he was precluded to the plaintiff. 2 Vern. 271.

Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 9. sect. 11. No person shall for his gain, lucre, or living, keep any common house, alley, or place of bowing, coting, cloth-cays, half bowl, tennis, dicing-table or carding, or any unlawful game, on pain of forty shillings a day.—But it was resolved upon this clause, in the third year of Jac. 1. that if the goods in an inn or tavern, call for a pair of dice or tables, and for their recreation play with them, or if any neighbours play at bowls for their recreation, or the like, there are not within this statute; for alfo the games be used in any inn, or tavern, or other house, yet if the play be only for recreation, better or gain, but they play only for recreation, and for no gain, and if any game of the house, this is not within the statute, nor is such person that plays in such house that is not kept for lucre or gain within the penalty of that law.
Dow. cap. 40.
Sect. 12. Every person using and haunting any the said houses, and there playing, shall forfeit five shillings and eigthpence.
Sect. 14. And all and every justice of the peace, mayors, thriftiers, and other head officers, may enter all such houses and places, where such games shall be suspected to be held; and as well the keepers of the same, as also the persons that were resorting and playing, may take, arrest and imprison, and keep in prison, until the said keepers have found sureties to the King's use, to be bound by recognition or otherwise, no longer to use, keep or occupy such house, play, game, alley or place; and also that the persons there so found, be in like cafe bound thereunto, no more than the said places shall be suspected to be kept; and if they shall not make such search at the farthest once a month, if the cafe so require, every such person offending shall forfeit forty shillings for each month.
Sect. 16. No manner of artificer, handicraftsmen, hunters, or gamekeepers, labourers, for the wharte journeyman or servant of artificer, mariners, fishermens, watermen, or any serving man, shall play at the tables, tennis, dice, cards, bowls, billiards, croquet, logaring, or any other unlawful game, out of Christmas; on pain of twenty shillings; and in Christmas to play at the said games only in their master's houses, or in their master's preference; and also no person shall at any time play at bowls in open places out of his garden or orchard, on pain of five shillings and eigthpence.
Sect. 18. And where any the forfeitures above-mentioned shall be found within the precincts of any leet, the said forfeitures shall be imputable to him that shall foul in any of the King's courts, and elsewhere they shall be half to the King, and half to him that shall foul in like manner.
Sect. 22. But any master may licence his servant to play at cards, dice, or tables with himself, or with any other gentleman openly in his house, or in his presence.
Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 4. sect. 7. All persons to be punished upon any flatute [that is, any statute then in force] for using any unlawful game, shall be fined and prosecuted, or otherwise heard and determined, in the general quarter sessions or assizes of the county where the offence shall be committed, or in the leet within which it shall happen,
and not in the county court, or the county court.
By stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 7. sect. 2. it is enacted, "That if any person or persons of any degree or quality whatever, at any time or times do or shall, by any fraud, theft, cozenage, circumvention, deceit, or unlawful devise, or ill practice whatsoever, in playing at or with cards, bills, or other unlawful games, bowls, kettles, fishboards, or in or by cock-fighting, horse-races, dog-matches or foot-races, or other pastimes, game or games whatsoever, or in or by bearing a share or part in the flakes, wager, adventures, or in or by betting on the odds or hands of such as do or shall play, act, ride, run or as offender, without the licence of him to whom or themselves, or to any other or others, any sum or sums of money, or other valuable thing or things whatsoever; that then every person and persons so offending as aforesaid, shall ipso facto forfeit
forfeit and lose treble the sum or value of money, or other thing or things so won, gained, obtained, or acquired; the one moiety thereof to our Sovereign Lord the King, his heirs and successors, and the other moiety thereof to such person or persons thereof, at whose own free will, or within one year next after the said six months expired; and that the said forfeitures shall and may be used for or recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, wherein no effusion, protection, or favour, of any kind, or whatsoever, shall be given, acknowledged, or entered into for security or satisfaction of or for the said, or any part thereof, shall be utterly void and of none effect; and that the person or persons for so winning the said monies or other things, shall forfeit and lose treble the value of all such sums and sums of money, or other thing or things, whatsoever. Provided, and it is declared, that no recovery shall be had or obtained, or generally to be had, nor shall any of our Majesty's courts hold any action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, wherein no effusion, protection, or wager of law shall be allowed; and that every such plaintiff or plaintiffs, informer or informers, shall in every such suit or prosecution have and receive their treble costs against the person or persons offending and forfeiting as aforesaid.

And 3d. It is further enacted by the said statute, That if any person or persons shall at any time play at any of the said games, or any other game, or games whatsoever, (other than with and for ready money,) or shall bet on the sides or hands of such as do, or shall play therein, and shall lose any sum or sums of money, or other thing or things so played for, exceeding the sum or value of one hundred pounds, at any one time or meeting, without licence, warrant, or other ways, and shall not play down the same at the time when he or they shall so lose the same; the party and parties who lost or shall lose the said monies, or other thing or things played, or to be played for, above the said sum of one hundred pounds, shall have it in case be bound or committed, or otherwise liable to pay or make good the same, the said contract or contracts for the same, and for every part thereof, and all and singular judgments, statutes, recognizances, mortgages, conveyances, alliances, bonds, bills, specialties, promissory, covenants, agreements, and other acts, deeds and securities whatsoever, which shall be obtained, made, given, acknowledged, or entered into for security or satisfaction of or for the said, or any part thereof, shall be utterly void and of none effect; and that the person or persons so winning the said monies or other things, shall forfeit and lose treble the value of all such sums and sums of money, or other thing or things, whatsoever. Provided, and it is declared, that no recovery shall be had or obtained, or generally to be had, nor shall any of our Majesty's courts hold any action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, wherein no effusion, protection, or wager of law shall be allowed; and that every such plaintiff or plaintiffs, informer or informers, shall in every such suit or prosecution have and receive their treble costs against the person or persons offending and forfeiting as aforesaid.

In the construction of this statute the following opinions have been held; 1. That if the loser draws a bill for 120 guineas on his banker, who accepts the bill, to an action brought against the winner, the banker may well plead this statute; altho' it was objected, that the nature of the duty was altered, and a new contract created by the acceptance: and that it would endanger the credit of such bills, if they could be avoided on this account; but these reasons did not prevail for tho' it be in the nature of a new contract, yet it is founded on an illegal and toracious winning, to which the plaintiff is privy. 2. 344. Car. 356. 5 Mod. 175. 8 C. 2. But it is feard, that if the winner had assign'd this bill or note bond foile, upon good consideration, to a stranger, he had not been within the statute, not being privy to the bill, nor an honest creditor. 1 Salt. 345. 346. Car. 357.

3. Also it had been adjudged, that if a man wins above the sum mentioned in the statute at play, and the winner owes f. S. the like sum, who demands his money, and thereupon the winner tells him, that such an one, viz. the loser, was indebted to him, and that he would give him his bond for the money, which he accordingly does, it does not thereby exempt the said f. S. from being paid to the monies being won at play, he is not within the statute. 2 Mod. 279.

4. It seems to be the better opinion, that a person's losing 800l. at one meeting, for which he gives security, and 70l. more at another meeting, to the same person, is not within the statute; but if these several meetings were appointed to evade the statute, it might be otherwise. 2 Mod. 54.

5. But it hath been adjudged, that if A. and B. enter into articles to run a horse-race such a day for 100l. which is won by A. and further in the same articles, that on a subsequent day, A. should request B.'s errand, bring his horse to run against him for 200l. more, which B. never requests, tho' only 100l. is won by A. which is not above the sum mentioned in the statute, yet the contract being for more than 100l. makes the whole bargain void ab initio, and within the statute; which being made to prevent the use of excessive gaming, ought to be continued in the most extensive manner that can be to answer that end. 2 Ltv. 94. 1 Vent. 253. 8 C.

6. If A. wins a watch from B. of 10l. value, which is presently delivered, and allo 100l. for which a bond is given; this is not within the statute, which extends to cases where credit is given, to pay the said 100l. sum of money, or to pay above 100l. without any regard to what was lost in ready money; and here the watch is in the nature of ready money, and therefore not within the statute. 1 Ltv. 244. 1 Sle. 394. 8 C. 1 Salt. 345. 8 C. cited as law by Holt, Comment. 7.

7. It hath been adjudged, that if a person lores 60l. to one, and 60l. to another, at one sitting, or if he lores to each of three or four persons 50l. or any other sum not exceeding 100l. that this is not within the statute.

8. If two are at play at backgammon, and one of the players flirs a man, but does not move it from the point, upon which there ensues a wager of 100 guineas, viz. whether he who flour the man was obliged to play it, and the determination left to the groom- porter, who determines that he was not; this is not within the statute, for the money was not lost on the chance of the play, but on the right of the play, which was a collateral matter. 1 Salt. 344. 484. 487. 4 Mod. 409. 5 Mod. 1. Comb. 328. Sim. 572. 1 Lutw. 487.

Stat. 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 17. sect. 1. All lotteries are declared to be public nuisances; and all grants, patents, and other licences for any lotteries are against law.

sect. 2. No person or persons shall expoe to be played, drawn or thrown at, or shall play, draw or throw at any lottery, either by dice, lots, cards, balls or any other numbers of figures, or any other way whatsoever: And every person who shall expoe to be played, drawn or thrown at, any such lottery, play or device, shall forfeit five hundred pounds, one third to the King, one third to the poor, and one third with double costs to him that shall sue in the courts at Westminster; and the offenders shall likewise be prosecuted as common rogues, according to the statutes in that case made and provided.

sect. 3. And every person who shall play, throw or draw at any such lottery, play or device, shall forfeit twenty pounds in like manner.

And by stat. 9 Ann. cap. 6. sect. 5. All judgments of the peace, mayors, constables and other civil officers, shall use their utmost endeavours to prevent the drawing of any such unlawful lottery, by all lawful ways and means; and shall not suffer or by writing or printing publish any such unlawful lotteries; with intent to have such lottery drawn, shall forfeit 100l. one third to the King, one third to the poor, and one third with full costs to him who shall sue in the courts at Westminster.

By the stat. 9 Ann. cap. 14. sect. 1. it is enacted, "That all notes, bills, bonds, judgments, mortgages or other securities or conveyances whatsoever given, granted, granted, or entered into, or executed by any person or persons whatsoever, whether the whole or any part of the affected or used for such conveyances or securities shall be for any money or other valuable thing whatsoever won by playing or playing at cards, dice, tables, ten-nim, bowls or other game or games whatsoever, or by betting on the falls or hands of such as do go at any of the games aforesaid, or for the benefit of any such mortgage or secured of for such gaming or betting, as aforesaid, or lent or advanced at the time and place of such play, to any person or persons so gaming or betting, as aforesaid, or that shall, during such play, so play or bet, shall be utterly void, frustrate, and of none effect, to all intents and purposes whatsoever: And if such mortgages, securities or other conveyances, shall be of lands, tenements or hereditaments, or shall be such as incumbent or affect the same, such mortgages, securities or other conveyances, shall enure and be to and for the use and benefit of, and shall devolve upon such person or persons as should or might have, or be intitled to such lands, tenements or hereditaments, in case the said grantor or grantors thereof, or the person or persons, so incumbering the same, had been naturally dead, and as if such mortgages, securities or other conveyances had been made to such person or persons so incumbering the same; and that all grants or conveyances to be made thereunto of such lands, tenements or hereditaments, from coming to, or devolving upon such person or persons hereby intended to enjoy the same, as aforesaid, shall be deemed fraudulent and void, and of none effect,
to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

Sect. 2. And it is further enacted, That any person who shall at any time or sitting, by playing at cards, dice, table or other game or games whatsoever, or by betting on the falls or hands of such as do go at, or play at, any of the games aforesaid, lose to any one or more persons or persons so playing or betting in the whole, the sum or value of ten pounds, and shall pay or deliver the same, or any part thereof, the person or persons so losing and paying, or delivering the same, shall be at liberty within three months then next to sue, for, and recover the money or goods so lost, and paid or delivered, or any part thereof, from the respective winner and winners thereof, with cost of suit, by action of debt founded on this act, to be procured in any of her Majesty's courts of record, in which actions or suits, no effinition, protection, wager of law, peremptory or summary, or any other implication shall be allowed; in which actions it shall be sufficient for the plaintiff to allege, that the defendant or de-defendants are indebted to the plaintiff, or received to the plaintiff's use, the monies so lost or paid, or converted the goods won of the plaintiff to the defendant's use, whereby the defendant's action accrued to him, according to the form of this statute, without setting forth the special matter; and in case the person or persons, who shall lose such money or other thing, as aforesaid, shall not within the time aforesaid, really and bona fide, and without covin and collusion flee, and with effect prosecute for the money or other thing, so by him or them lost and paid or delivered, as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to and for any person or persons, by such action or suit, as aforesaid, to sue for and recover the same, and the value thereof, with costs of suit against such winner or winners, as aforesaid; the onemony thereto to the use of the person or persons that will sue for the same, and the other part shall be in the custody of the parish of the parish where the offence shall be committed.

Sect. 3. And for the better discovery of the monies, or other thing so won, and to be sued for and recovered, as aforesaid, it is further enacted, That all and every the person or persons, who by virtue of this present act shall or may be liable to be sued for the same, shall be obliged and compelled, upon oath, and, upon such further oath or bills as shall be preferred against him or them, for discovering the money and sums of money, or other thing so won at play, as aforesaid.

Sect. 4. Provided, that upon the discovery and repayment of the money, or other thing so to be discovered and repaid as aforesaid, the person or persons, who shall so discover and repay the same as aforesaid, shall be acquitted, indemnified and discharged from any other punishment, forfeiture or penalty, which he or they might have incurred by the playing for, or winning such money or other thing so discovered and repaid as aforesaid.

Sect. 5. And it is further enacted, That if any person do or shall, by any fraud or theft, coinage, circum-vention, deceit or unlawful device or ill practice whatever, in playing at or with cards, dice or any the games aforesaid, or in or by betting a share or part in the stakes, wagers or adventures, or in or by betting on the falls or hands of such as do go at, or shall play as aforesaid, win, obtain, or acquire to him or them, any other or others, any sum or sums of money, or other valuable thing or things whatsoever, or shall at any one time or sitting win of any one or more person or persons whatever, above the sum of ten pounds; that then every person or persons so winning, by such ill practice as aforesaid, or winning at any one time or sitting, above the said sum or value of ten pounds, and being convicted of any of the said offenses, upon an indictment or information to be exhibited against him or them for that purpose, shall forfeit five times the value of the sum or sums of money, or other thing or things so won as aforesaid; and, in all other and further respects and cases of such intended and intended, infamous, and fufler corporal punishment as in case of willful perjury, and such penalty to be recovered by such person or persons as shall sue for the same by such action as aforesaid.

Sect. 6. And whereas divers lawd and dilliqtet persons live at great expenses, having no visible estate, profession or calling to maintain themselves, but support those ex-benses by gaming only; it is further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for any two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in any county, city, or liberty whatever, to cause to come or to be brought before them, every person or persons whatsover, playing or playing in parish or parishes within their respective jurisdictions, to whom they shall have just cause to suspect to have no visible estate, profession or calling to maintain themselves by, but do for the most part support themselves by playing; and if such person or persons shall not make it appear to such justices, that the principal part of his or their expences is not maintained by gaming, that then such justices shall require of him or them sufficient fur-ties for his or their good behaviour for the space of twelve months, and in default of his or their finding such secu-curities, to commit him or them to the common gaol, there to remain until he or they shall find such securities.

Sect. 7. And it is further enacted, That if such person or persons shall keep or maintain in his or their houses, in which he or they shall be so bound to the good behaviour, at any one time or sitting, play or bet for any sum or sums of money, or other thing exceeding in the whole the sum or value of twenty shillings, that then such playing shall be deemed or taken to be a breach of his or their behaviour, and a forfeiture of the recognizance given for the same.

Sect. 8. And for preventing of such quarrels as shall or may happen on the account of gaming, it is further enacted, That in case any person or persons whatsoever shall assault and beat, or shall challenge or provoke to fight, any other person or persons, by any note or account of any money won by gaming, playing or betting at any of the games aforesaid, such person or persons affecting and beating, or challenging or provoking to fight,such other person or persons, upon the account aforesaid, shall, being thereof convicted upon an indictment or information to be exhibited against him, shall cause to be assisted him or them to be answerable and liable to forfeiture, to her Majesty, all his goods, chattels and per-fonal estate whatsoever, and shall also suffer imprisonment without bail or mainprize, in the common gaol of the county where such conviction shall be had, during the term of two years.

Sect. 9. And whereas it is not in this act shall extend to prevent or hinder any person or persons from gaming at any of the games aforesaid, within any of her Majesty's palaces of St. James or Whitehall, during such time as her her Majesty, her heirs or successors, shall be actually resid- dent at either the said two palaces, or in any other royal palace, where her Majesty, her heirs or successors shall be actually resident, during the time of such reference; so as to furnish them not with unreasonable difficulties, where the other part of any of the said palaces, the freehold and inheritance whereof is or shall be out of the crown, or is or shall be in lease to any persons or persons, during such time as such freehold and inheritance shall be out of the crown, or such lease continue, and as such playing be for real and not only.

Upon a cause stated at nisi prius in an action by the plaintiff as indorsee of several promissory notes, it appeared that the notes were given by the defendant to one John Church, for money by him knowingly advanced to the defendant, and that the game gave the note and the defendant endorsed them to the plaintiff for a full and valuable consideration, and that the plaintiff was not privy to or had any notice, that any part of the money for which the notes were given had been lent for the purpose of gaming.

Upon this a question arose upon the statute 9 Ann. c. 15, sect. 1, which states, That all the words whereby or any part of the consideration is money knowingly lent for gaming, shall be void to all intents and purposes whatsoever, whether the plaintiff could maintain this action against the defendant. And after two arguments the court were of opinion he could not; for it is making the words of the endorsement committed to him, and in the courts (hall be to the defendant, and as such playing be for real and not only.

An action was brought for 151. won as a wager at horse-race. And upon a cause made and argued, it was determined, that the action would not lie; for 16 Car. 2. c. 7. has these words horse-racing, and a great many other words, which are not particularly mentioned in 9 Ann. c. 15, but are that all the general words other game or games. And the court feared to be of this opinion in Oates v. Collins, Trin. 6 Geo. 2. that it was never determined. See 1 Ven. 253. The defendant had judgment. Stran. 1159.

The plaintiff and defendant gamed together at toffing up in horse-race. And the plaintiff having won all the defendant's ready money, lent him ten guineas at a time, and won it, till the defendant had borrowed 120 guineas. In an action for money lent, it was insisted for the defendant, that by the statute 9 Ann. c. 16, the plaintiff could not maintain an action; for he must see all notes, bills, bonds, judgments, mortgages, or other securities or conveyances, given, granted, drawn, entered into or executed, for money knowingly lent and advanced to game with, are made void; and the borrowing on an agreement to pay, is a security. But the Chief Justice saith, this was not a case within the act, for there is the word contracted, as in the statute of usury, and the word securities, as it stands in this act, must mean laffing liens upon the estate. The parliament might think there would be no great harm in a parol contract, where the credit was not like to run very high; and therefore confirmed the act to written securities; for therefore the plaintiff obtained a verdict for 126l. Stran. 1220.

The plaintiff brought his action for 200l. as the lesor of so much by gaming. And the question was, upon 9 Ann. c. 14, which gives an action of debts at any time within three months against the debtor. Whether the defendant could be held to special bail; the defendant's counsel comparing it to the case of actions upon penal statutes, where no bail is ever required. But the court held, there ought to be special bail in this case, which is at the suit of the party grieved, and wherein the said defendant is a debtor to the plaintiff. And the clause is to be considered as remedial. And therefore upon consideration, and talking with the other judge, special bail was ordered. Stran. 1079.

8 Gen. 1. c. 2. sect. 26. 37. Every person who shall keep any office or place, under the denomination of fates of houses, lands, advowsons, prebendations to livings, plate, jewels, ships, goods, or other things, for the improvement of small sums of money, or shall sell or expose to sale for any of them, by way of lottery, or by lost, tickets, numbers or figures, shall forfeit lawful, pernicious, or profane proposals or schemes for advancing small sums of money by several persons, amounting in the whole to large sums, to be divided among them by the chances of the prizes in some public lottery; or shall deliver, or cause to be delivered, to the persons advancing such sums, to divide them to a share of the money so advanced, according to such proposals or schemes; or shall make, print, or publish any proposal or scheme of the like nature, under any denomination whatsoever, and shall be thereof convicted, on oath of one witness, by two justices where the offence is committed, or the offender shall be found, he shall, over and above any penalties by any former act made against private lotteries, forfeit five hundred pounds; one third to the King, one third to the informer, and one third to the poor; to be levied by diffrets and sale by warrant of such justices, and shall also by such justices be multiplied by ten, and divided among any twenty persons coming before the justices at any one time, and from thence till the said sum of five hundred pounds shall be paid; provided that persons aggrieved may appeal to the next quarter-fees. And every person who shall be adventurer in, or any way contribute on the account of any such fates, lotteries, proposals or schemes, shall forfeit double the sum of two hundred pounds, half to the King, and half to him that shall sue in the courts at Westminster.

Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 19. sect. 4, 5. If any person shall, by colour of any grant from any foreign prince or state, let any particular lotteries,Undertaking in the nature of a lottery under any denomination whatsoever, print, or publish any proposals for any such lottery or undertaking; or shall sell or dispose of any ticket in any foreign lottery, and shall be convicted thereof, on oath of one witness, before two justices where the offence shall be committed, or the offender shall be found, he shall, over and above any penalties by former acts against all foreign lotteries, forfeit two hundred pounds; one third to the King, one third to the informer, and one third to the poor; to be levied by diffrets and sale by warrant of such justices; and shall also by them be committed to the common gaol for one year, and from thence till the said sum of two hundred pounds be paid; Provided that persons aggrieved may appeal to the next quarter-fees. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 28. sect. 9. Where it shall be proved on the oath of two witnesses before any justice of the peace, as well as where he shall find upon his own view, that any person hath used any unlawful game contrary to the statute 33 H. 8. c. 9. the said justice shall have power to commit him to prison without bail, unless and until he shall enter into recognizance, with sureties or without, at the discretion of the justice, that he shall not from henceforth use or thereto go for an unlawful game.

Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 32. sect. 20, 29, 30. If any person shall sell, procure or deliver any ticket, receipt, chance or number, in any foreign or pretended foreign lottery, or in any clafs, part or division thereof, or in any undertaking in the nature of a lottery; or shall sell, procure or deliver any ticket, receipt, chance or number, in any clafs, part or division thereof, or shall sell, procure or deliver any complicate or pretended duplicate of any foreign or pretended foreign lottery; or shall receive any money for any such ticket, receipt, chance or number, or in consideration of any money to be reaped in any ticket or number, in any foreign or pretended foreign lottery, or in any class, part or division thereof, shall forfeit two hundred pounds; and shall be convicted thereof in the courts at Westminster, or on the oath of one witness before two justices where the offence shall be committed, or the offender shall be found, he shall forfeit two hundred pounds; one third to the King, one third to the informer, and one third to the poor; the

Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. Selt. 1. If any perffon shall erect, set up, continue or keep any office or place, under the denomination of a fale of houfes, lands, adwowfons, preffentations to livings, plate, jewels, fhips or other goods, by any game, method or device whatsoever, depending upon, or to be determined by any lot or drawing, whether it be out of a box or wherefey, by cards or dice, or by any machine, engine, or device of chance of any kind whatsoever; he shall, on conviction before any justice of the peace, (or mayor) on the oath of one witnefs, or view of such justice, or confeffion, forfeit two hundred pounds, by dirffers and fale, by warrant of one of the justices of the county or of the city wherein the offence shall be committed; which find forfeiture (after deducting reasonable charges of the prosecution) shall go, one third to the informer, and two thirds to the poor of the parish, except in Bath, where the faid two thirds shall go to the poor of the hospital there.

Selt. 2. The games of ace of hearts, faro, baffet and hazard, shall be deemed games or lotteries by cards or dice; and every perffon who shall set up or keep any of the fames, shall be liable to all the above mentioned penalitics for setting up or keeping any the games or lotteries in the manner aforesaid.

Selt. 3. And every perffon who shall play, fet at, flake, or punt at any of the faid games, shall forfeit fify pounds in like manner.

Selt. 4. Moreover, every fuch fale of houfes, lands, adwowfons, preffentations, plate, jewels, fhips or other goods, by any game, method or device of chance, depending upon any chance or lot, shall be void; and the fame being expoéed to fale in manner aforesaid, shall be forfeited to fuch perffon as fhall fuc the fame in any court of record or at the assizes.

Selt. 5. But if any perffon think himfelf aggrieved by any judgment of justice or of the fyne, or by any ap- peal to the next fefions, giving reasonable notice to the protector, and entering into a recognizance before fome justice of the peace, where the convifion was made, with two fureties, on condition to try fhuch appeal at fhuch next fefions; and if the convifion fhall be affirm- ed, the party appealing fhall pay to the protector treble cost.

Selt. 6. And no convidition shall be good by the fefions for want of form; nor fhall be removed by cer- tiorari, till after determination in the fefions.

Selt. 7. And if the offender fhall not have fufficient goods wherein to ley the penalitics, or fhall not immediate ly pay or give security for the fame; the judge or fome other perffon fo by him to be convicted may commit him to the common goal, not exceeding fix months.

Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 34. Selt. 1. No perffon fhall keep any houfe, room or place for playing, or fuffer any perffon within fuch place to play at roly-poly, or any other game with cards or dice, already prohibited by the laws of this land; and if any perffon fhall keep such houfe, or fuffer any perffon to play at roly-poly, or other game with cards or dice, prohibited by law, he fhall be liable to the penalitics and profecution as by the act of the 12 G. 2. c. 28.

Selt. 2. And if any perffon fhall play at roly-poly, or any game with cards or dice, prohibited by law, he fhall be liable to the penalitics and profecution as by the faid act of the 12 G. 2.

Selt. 4. And if any witnefs fhall neglect or refuse to appear upon committing, or fhall refuse to give evidence, or to attend upon the charge of forfeiture, he shall forfeit the dirffers, by warrant of the perffon infufing fuch commiting; and if he have not fufficient goods wherein to ley the fifty pounds, he fhall be committed to the common goal for fix months.

Selt. 5. No perffon, other than the plaintiff and defendants, fhall be incorporated from being a witnefs, touching any offence against the laws for preventing exe- cutive and deceitful gamings, by reason of having played, betted or played at any prohibited game.

Selt. 7. And no privilege of parliament fhall be al lowed to any perffon, against whom a profecution fhall be commenced, for keeping any, or committeng gaming houfe or place for playing at any prohibited game.

Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. Selt. 2. Whereas the mul- titude of places of entertainment for the lower sort of people is a great cause of thefts and robberies, as they are thereby tempted to spend their small falldance in riotous pleasures, and in that pursuit are put on unlawful meth- ods of supplying their wants and renewing their plea- sures: In order therefore to prevent the faid temptation to thefts and robberies, and to correct as far as may be the habit of idleness, which is become too general over the whole kingdom, and is productive of much mischief and misery to the publick; be it enacted, That any houfe, room, garden or other place kept for publick dancing, mufick, or other publick entertainment of the like kind, in the cities of London and Westminster, or within twenty miles thereof, without a licence had for that purpofe, from the laft preceding Michælmas quarter-fellonies of the peace, shall be held to be contrary to the county, city, riding, liberty or division in which fuch houfe, room, garden or other place is fittuate, who are hereby authorized and empowered to grant fuch licences as they fhall think proper; and any perffon who fhall be fett in keeping fuch houfe or fuch other place, and every fuch licence fhall be signed and sealed by the faid justices in open court, and afterwards be publicly read by the clerk of the peace, together with the names of the justices subscribing the fame; and no fuch licence fhall be granted at any adjournments of parliament; nor fhall any fuch licence or reward be taken for any fuch licence: And if fhall and be liable to and for any confatable or other perffon, being therefore au-thorized by warrant under the hand and feal of one or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace of the county, city, riding, division or liberty, where fuch houfe or other place is fittuate, to enter upon fuch houfe or place, and to feize every perffon who fhall be found therein, as well as that they may be dealt with according to law: And every perffon keeping fuch houfe, room, garden or other place, without fuch licence as aforesaid, fhall forfeit the fum of one hundred pounds to fuch perffon as fhall sue for the fame; and be otherwise punifhable as the law di rect in cafes of disorderly houfes.

Selt. 3. Provided, That in order to give notice what places are licensed pursuant to this act, there fhall be affixed and kept up in fome notable place over the door or entrance of every fuch houfe, room, garden or other place, or fite of fuch pig purpofes, aforesaid, an incifion in large letters in proper words following: videlicet, LICENSED PUR- SUANT TO ACT OF PARLIAMENT OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH OF KING GEORGE THE SECOND; and that no fuch houfe, room, garden or other place, or fite of fuch pig purpofes, aforesaid, be open for any of the faid purpofes, before the hour of five in the afternoon; and that the affixing and keeping up of fuch incifion as aforesaid, and the faid limition or restric- tion in point of time, fhall be inferred in, and made con- vincing by, proper and legal fuits; and in cases of either of the faid conditions, fuch licence fhall be forfeited, and fhall be revoked by the justices of the peace in their next general or quarter-fellonies, and fhall not be renewed; nor fhall any new licence be granted to the fame penon or persons, or any other penon on his or their or any of their behalf, or for their use or benefit, directly or indirectly, for keeping any bawdy-houses, gaming-houses or other disorderly houses, it is difficult to prove who is the real owner or keeper thereof, by which means many notorious offenders have escaped punishment.

Be it enacted, 67. That any person who shall at any time hereafter appear, act or behave him or herself as matter or mittler, or as the person having the care, government or management of any bawdy-house, gaming-house or other disorderly house, shall be deemed and taken to be the keeper thereof, and any person who shall give evidence against the defendant, or on behalf of the defendant in such prosecution, notwithstanding he or the shall not in fact be the real owner or keeper thereof.

Sect. 9. Provided nevertheless, That upon any such prosecution against any person for keeping a bawdy-house, gaming-house or other disorderly house, shall be removed by any writ of certiorari into any other court; but such indictment shall be heard, tried and finally determined at the same general or quarter-sessions or assizes, where such indictment shall have been preferred (unless the court think proper, upon cause shown, to adjourn the same); any such writ or allowance thereof notwithstanding.

Sect. 30. Gran. 2. cap. 24. sect. 14. If any person licensed to sell any sorts of liquors, or who shall fell or dispose of the same, for the purpose of fomenting disorder, or to the keeping of his or her apprentices; and shall be convicted thereof on confession, or oath of one witness before one justice, within six days after the offence committed, he shall forfeit for the first offence forty shillings, and for every other offence ten pounds, by detains by his or her aforesaid; but such justice, three-fourths of which shall be to the churchwardens for the use of the poor, and one fourth to the informer.

Sect. 15. And if any journeyman, labourer, apprentice or servant, shall game in any house, outhouse, ground, or apartment thereto belonging, wherein a like number of persons shall be placed; and complaint thereof shall be made on oath before one justice, where the offender shall be committed; he shall forfeit for the first offence forty shillings, and for every other offence ten pounds, by detains by his or her aforesaid; one fourth to the informer, and three fourths to the Overseers for the use of the poor; and if he shall not forthwith pay down the same, such justice shall commit him to the house of correction or some other prison of the place where he shall be apprehended, to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or as the justice shall Think proper.

Sect. 16. And any justice, unto whom complaint upon oath shall be made of any offence committed against this act, shall issue his warrant for bringing before him or some other justice of such place, the person charged with such offence; and the justice before whom he is brought shall hear and determine the matter, and proceed to judgment and conviction; and if it shall appear upon oath or other satisfactory evidence, that any person within his jurisdiction can give material evidence on behalf of the prosecutor or of the person accused, and who will not voluntarily appear, he shall issue his summons to convene him to give his evidence, and if he shall neglect or refuse to appear on such summons, and no just excuse shall be offered, then (on proof upon oath of the summons having been duly served upon him) he shall issue his warrant to bring such witnesses before him; and on his appearance, if he shall refuse to be examined on oath, without offering just cause for such refusal, the justice shall commit him to the publick prison for any time not exceeding three months.

Sect. 17. And no perdon charged on oath with being guilty of any of the offences punishable by this act, and which he shall require bail, shall be admitted to bail before twenty-four hours notice at least, shall be proved by oath to have been given in writing to the prosecutor, of the names and places of abode of the persons proposed to be bail for any such offender or offenders, unless the bail offered shall be sworn to the justice or justices, and he and they the shall approve of them; and every such off- fender and offenders, who shall be bound over to the gen- eral quarter-seffions of the peace, or gaol-delivery of the county, or town, wherein the offence charged on him shall have been committed, to answer any such of- fences punishable by this act, shall be bound to the general quarter-seffions of the peace, or, felonies of over and ter- miner and gaol-delivery which shall be held next after his, or her or their being apprehended, unless the court shall think it fit to put off the trial on just cause made out to them.

Sect. 18. And in all proceedings on this act, any perdon shall be admitted to be a witness, notwithstanding his being an inhabitant of the place wherein the offence shall have been committed.

Sect. 19. And the justice before whom any perdon shall be convicted upon this act, shall confine the con- victed to be drawn up in the form and to the effect fol- lowing:

To wit, B. E. it is remembered, that on this day of the in the year of our Lord reign, A. B. is convicted by me, one of his Majesty's Justices of the peace for the said county of or for the riding or division of the said county of (as the case shall happen to be) for and the said do adjudge him, or her, to pay and forfeit for the fame, the sum of Given under the day and year afterfigned.

The fame to be written upon parchement, and trans- mitted to the next seffions, to be filed amongst the records; and if any perdon shall appeal to the said seffions, the justices there shall, upon receiving the said convic- tion, proceed to call in the cause and determine the matter.

Sect. 20. And no croissor shall be granted, to remove any proceedings on this act.

Sect. 21. And if any perdon convicted of any offence punishable by this act, shall think himself aggrieved by the judgment of the justice before whom he shall have been convicted, he may appeal to the next seffions, and the execution of the judgment shall in such case be sus- pended; the perdon convicted entering into recognizance at the time of the conviction, with two sureties in double the sum he shall have been adjudged to pay, upon con- dition to prosecute such appeal with effect, and to be forthcoming to abide the judgment and determination of the said seffions; and the seffions shall award such costs as shall appear just and reasonable to be paid by either party; and if the judgment shall be affirmed, the appel- lant shall immediately pay the sum adjudged to be for- feited, together with such costs as the court shall award, or in default thereof shall suffer the pains and penalties by this act inflicted upon persons respectively who shall neglect to pay or shall not pay the forfeitures as shall be paid.

Sect. 22. And no perdon punished by this act, shall be punished by any other law.

2. Adition and pleadings.

In debt A. won 80l. at one meeting of B. and for which B. gave security, and then they appointed another meeting, and A. won 70l. more of it the question was, whether this was within the statute. The court was di- vided, which the plaintiff perceiving, discontinued his action; but the better opinion was, that it was not within the statute; tho' if it had been pleaded, that the several meetings were positively appointed to elude the statute, it might be otherwise. 2 Mod. 54. Hill. 27 Car. 2. C. B. 10. A. 14. A. 64. A. 202. A. 53. brings C. to B. who owed the debt, and B. gave C. a bond for the 100l. C. not being privy to the matter, accepted the bond, and afterwards put it in suit. The obigor pleaded the statute, but the plaintiff discharging the whole matter, the court were of opinion upon demurrs, that it was not a case within the statute; and for judgment for the plaintiff. 2 Mod. 278. In debt upon articles for 100l. won at a horse-race, defendant pleaded the covemants, by which it was farther agreed, that the plaintiff, but the request of the defendant, would run his horse again, at another day and place for 200l. more, and then pleaded the statute; the plaintiff replied, that the defendant did not make such request. But upon demurrer the defendant had judg- ment. For though the statute allows the losing of a 100l. yet in the case the 100l. was not lost [before] a decedent's time ran for more. And though there was but 100l. actually lost, yet the contract being [origi- nally] made for more, it was void for the whole bad ab init. and can't be made good by the subfequent event. 2 Lev. 94. But upon demurrer, judgment was given for the plaintiff; for the statute intends a remedy, where more than 100l. is lost to one person, and at one fitting; but if it be lost to several it is not within the act. 5 Mod. 351. Tern. 8 Ef. 3. B. R. Standhope v. Smith. As
As if A. lost 95l. to B. and B. refusing to play any longer with him, A. lost 10l. to C. at the same sitting, yet this last not defeat B. of the money which he lawfully won. 5 Med. 352. in the case of Sunnay v. Smith. This precedent, to lost being done in pursuance to and avoided the fault of the debt of 95l. B. may set out the fraud specially, and so avoid it. 12 Med. 258. in the case of Walker v. Walker. But Trin. 28 Car. 2. B. R. where A. had lost to B. at one fort of game 90l. and to C. at another fort of game 50l. and to D. at another fort of game 60l. and in an action of debt on bond brought for one of the fums, defendant pleaded the statute, and that he lost the several sums as above, at the same time; it was demurred to, because it did not appear, that the several winners were parties together, or in truft for one another, and that the statute only voids debt done, where they are parties or trusted for each other, and not to different gammeters. But it was adjudged for the defendant, the statute being to extended against play. 3 Keb. 671. Hadfun v. Malon.

In an action for money won at play, the first count was laid properly upon mutual promises, and the second count was cumque easim ad ludum pradictum jurisdict, &c. without a consideration; after verdict for the plaintiff, judgment was fiayd. Lord Reyom. 1034.

In an action brought for 80l. the defendant pleaded that he lost it to the plaintiff at play, and that at the time of the last mentioned, and to avoid the statute of gaming, &c. the plaintiff demurred; and adjudged a good plea since both the sums amounted to more than 100l. and were lost at one sitting; contra, if the 40l. had been lost by covin, to avoid the payment of the 80l. adjudged in C.B. Lord Reyom. 452.

The fatal of gaming may be pleaded by the acceptor of a bill of exchange payable to the plaintiff who was the winner. Lid. Reyom. 87.

The defendant was convicted on an information upon the gaming-act, which says that he shall forfeit five the value, to be recovered by a common informer, &c. without a consideration. And it was moved, that a fine should be set upon the defendant, if he refused to speak with the informer. Sed per curiam; All the judgment we can give is, good conviclus &c; and a new action must be brought upon that judgment for the forfeiture, which was thought sufficient to deter the offenders. Gaul, (Gaula, Fr. gols, i. e. cawsela, a cage for birds) Is used metaphorically for a prison, Cowl.

1. By what authority gaols are erected, to whom they belong, and who are to be the charge of repairing them.
2. To whom place offenders are to be committed.
3. At whose charge prisoners are to be carried to gaol; how they are to be set on work, and how maintained therein.
4. Of the offence of breaking gaol.

1. By what authority gaols are erected, to whom they belong, and who are to be the charge of repairing them.

Gaols are of such universal concern to the publick, that none can be erected by any lefs authority than an act of parliament. 2 Inf. 705. Hence the coroner is to inquire of the death of all persons whatsoever who die in prison, to lost end that the publick may be satisfied, whether such persons died of disease, or by the pleasant course of nature, or by some unlawful violence, or unreasonable hardships, put on them by those under whose power they were confined. 3 Inf. 52. 91.

Vol. II No. 83

Alfo all prisons and gaols belong to the King, altho' a subject may have the custody or keeping of them. 2 Inf. 100.

And in this purpose, by the 5 H. 4. cap. 10. reciting, "That divers contable[s] of castles within the realm, being signified justices of the peace by the King's commis- sion, had by colour of such commussion used to take people, to whom they bore evil will, and imprisoned them within the said castles till they have made fine and ransom, with the said contable[s] for their deliverance; and thereupon commisioned, that none may be imprisoned by any justice of the peace but only in the common gaol, saving to lords and others, which have gaols, their frances in this cafe."

And it hath been held, that the King's grant, since this statutes, to private persons to have the custody of prisoners committed by justices of peace, is void; and that the sheriff shall have the custody of all persons taken by virtue of any precept or authority to him directed, not-withstanding any grant by the King of the custody of prisoners to another person. 1 And. 345. 4 Ca. 34. 6. Co. 110. Cre. Eliz. 245. 830.

Alfo it is said, that none can claim a prison as a franchise, unlefs they have also a goa-delivery; and that therefore the dean and chapter of Westminster, tho' they have the custody of the Gatehouse prifon, yet as they have no goa-delivery, they must fend a kalenda of the prifon. S. to Newgate. 1 Salk. 343. Fars. 31. per Hilt. Ch. 1.

By the 14 Ed. 3. cap. 10. it is enacted, "In the right of the gaols, which were wont to be in ward of the sheriff, and annexed to their bailiwicks, it is affented and accounted that they shall be reipned to the sheriffs; and the sheriffs shall have the custody of the same gaols as before this time they were wont to have." And they shall put in such under-keepers for whom they will answer. This statute is confirmed by 19 Hen. 7. cap. 10.

By the 3 Ge. 1. cap. 15. None shall purchase the office of gaoler, or any other office pertaining to the high sheriffs, in the counties of Kent or York.

And a gaoler in fact, is as much punishable for a mist- demeanor in his office, as if he were a rightful gaoler. 2 Hatw. 134.

Altho' divers lords of liberties have the custody of pri- sons, and some in fee, yet the prifon itself is the King's property, and therefore it is to be repaired at the common charge. 2 Inf. 589.

But the matter is now regulated by the stat. 17 & 18 W. 3. cap. 19. by which it is enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace, or the greater number of them, within the limits of their com- mission, to purchase, upon a due examination of the grand jury, the said gaols, at the affile, great fees, and general gaoler. Delivery held for the said county, of the insufficient or in- conveniency of their gaol or prifon, to conclude and agree upon such sum or sums of money, as upon examination of able and sufficient workmen shall be thought necessary for the building, finishing or repairing a publick gaol or gaols, belonging to the thire or county wherefoer they are justices of the peace; and by warrant under their hands and seals, or under the hands and seals of the greater number of them, by equal proportion, to distribute and charge the sum to be levied for the uses aforesaid, upon the several hundreds, fums, and other divisions of the said county; and the justices of peace are hereby authorized and empowered at the general quarter-sessions, held for the respective division of the said county, to direct their warrants or precepts to high con- fiables, petty confiables, bailiffs, or other officer or offic- iers, as they shall think most expedient, for levyng and collecting the same. Revised and continued for seven years by the 10 An. cap. 14. and made perpetual."

And it is further enacted by the said statutes, sect. 2. "That if any sheriff shall refuse or neglect to pay his or their allowance, by the space of three months from the time thereof by the proper officer appointed to collect the same, or shall convey away his or their goods or estate, whereby the sum or sums of money so afflicted can't be levied; then it shall and may be lawful to and for the said collectors, by warrant from any one of the justices of the peace present at the said general quarter sessions as aforesaid, to levy the sum so afflicted by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such person so refusing or neglecting to pay; and the goods and chattels belonging to such person so found, the distress to taken, to keep by the space of four days at the costs and charges of the owner thereof; and if the said owner do not pay the sum or sums of money so rated or afflicted within the space of the said four days, then the said distress to be appraised by two or more of the inhabitants where the same shall be levied, and the said goods and chattels being sufficient, to be sold by the collector for payment of the said money, and the overplus of such fale, (if any be) over and above the sum so afflicted, and charges of taking and keeping of the distress to be immediately returned to the owner thereof; and the said justices of the peace are hereby authorized and empowered under their hands and seals, or under the hands and seals of the greater number of them, to constitute and appoint one or more sufficient persons or persons to be receiver of the money so afflicted; the said receiver first giving security to be accountable, when thereunto required, for all sums of money received or disbursements of funds expended by him, they shall have received under the hands and seals of the justices of the peace, or the greater number of them; and if the said receiver or receivers, high capable, petty capable or other officers, shall by the space of four days after demand refuse to account for all sums of money received by them in pursuance of this act; then it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace, or the greater number of them, to commit him or them to prison, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until he or they shall have made a true account, satisfied or paid such sum or sums of money as shall appear to remain in his or their hands; and the receipt of such receiver shall be a sufficient discharge to all high capable, petty capable or other officer or officers, paying their proportion of such alleviations, and the discharge under the hands and seals of the justices of the peace, or the greater number of them, at the aforesaid and general gaol-delivery, to such their receivers, shall be deemed and allowed as a good and sufficient release, acquittance or discharge in any court of law or equity, to all intents and purposes whatsoever; and the said justices of the peace are hereby authorized and empowered to covenant, contract and agree with any person or persons for the use of such aforesaid and general gaol-delivery, to such the said gaol or gaols. See 31 Car. 2 c. 19. under title County rate.

Sect. 4. Provided, That this act be not any wise hurtful or prejudicial to any person or persons having any common gaol by inheritance, for term of life or for years; but that they shall have and enjoy the said gaols, and the profits, fees and commodities of the said, as they had or might lawfully have had before the making of this act, and as if this act never had been made.

Sect. 5. Provided also, that this act shall not extend to charge any person inhabiting in any liberty, city, town or borough corporate, which have common gaols for felons taken in the same, and comminations of affize or gaol-delivery of such felons, for any alleviation, to the making the common gaols or gaols of the respective thire or county.

And it is further enacted by the said statute, sect. 6. 4. "That the colonists or gaols of the common county of this realm, or the dominions of Wales, are situate upon any lands or hereditaments of or belonging to the King's Majesty, in right of the crown, that the said lands and hereditaments, with their and every of their appurtenances, shall not at any time be alienated from the crown, nor be suffered to be sold and used for the publick service and benefit of the county.

2. To what place offenders are to be committed.

By the 5 H. 4. cap. 10. it is enacted, 4. "That none shall be imprisoned by any justice of the peace, but only in the common gaol, faring to Lords and others, who shall receive him, and there the said distressed person, and that is only declaratory at the Common law. 2 Iust. 43.

But the court of King's Bench may commit any person to prison in the kingdom which they shall think most proper, and the offender so committed or condemned to imprisonment can't be removed or bailed by any other court or authority.

But by the 31 Car. 2. cap. 2. sect. 12. it is enacted, 4. "That no subject of this realm, being an inhabitant or refiant of this kingdom of England, dominion of Wales or town of Berwick upon Tweed, shall or may be sent prisoner into Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, Tangier, or into any parts, garrisons, islands or places beyond the seas, which then were, or at any time hereafter should be within or without the dominions of his Majesty, his heirs or successors, and that every such imprisonment is by the said statute enacted and adjudged to be illegal; and that every suchdefect to imprisoned shall have an action of false imprisonment, &c. and recovering treble costs, and no other damages to be had or recovered than he shall be put in against the person making such warrant, who shall incur a præmun- nire.

And as prisoners ought to be committed at first to the proper prison, to ought not they to be removed from thence, except in some special cases.

To which purpose, by the said statute, 31 Car. 2. c. 2. sect. 9. it is enacted, 4. "That if any subject of this realm shall be committed to any prison, or in custody of any officer or officers whatsoever, for any criminal or supposed criminal matter, that the said person shall not be removed from the said prison and custody into the custody of any other officer or officers, unless he be by a habeas corpus, or some other legal writ; or where the prisoner is delivered to the constable, or other inferior officer, to carry such prisoner to some common gaol; or where any person is sent by order of any judge of assize or justice of the peace to any common work-house or house of correction; or where the prisoner is removed from one prison to another within the same county, in order to a trial or discharge by due course of law; or in case of sudden fire or infection, or other necessity; upon pain that he who makes out, signs or counter-signs, or obeys or executes such warrant, shall forfeit to the party private one hundred pounds for the first offence, two hundred pounds for the second, &c. See 19 Car. 2. cap. 4. for imposing justices of the peace to remove prisoners in case of infection.

By the statute 11 & 12 Will. 3 c. 10. All murderers and felons shall be imprisoned in the common gaol, and the sheriffs shall have the keeping of the said gaol.

By the statute 3 Jac. 1. cap. 10. sect. 1. it is enacted, 4. "That every person or persons that shall be committed to the common or usual gaol, within any county or liberty within this realm, by any justice or justices of the peace for any offence or misdemeanor, having means or ability thereunto, shall bear their own reasonable charges for so conveying or sending them to the said gaol, and for the expenses of their returns; and every such person or persons shall be bounded and requiring him by a habeas corpus, or some other legal writ, to the constable of the said gaol, and shall so guard them thither; and if any such person or persons, so to be committed, shall refuse at the time of their commitment, and foregoing to the said gaol, to defray the said charges, or shall not then pay or bear the same, the then such justice or justices shall order and require, and the sheriff, or the constable of the gaol, or his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, give warrant to the constable or constables of the hundred, or constable or riving-man of the tithing or township where such person or persons shall be dwelling and inhabit, or from whence he or they shall be committed, or where he or they they shall have any goods within the county or liberty, to sell such and so much of the goods and chattels of the said persons, as, by the discretion of the said justices or judges of the peace, shall satisfy and pay the charges of such his coming or sending to the said gaol; the apprehension of which persons shall be taken or apprehended, the said taxation being allowed under the hand of one or more justices or judges of the peace, if there be such confinables or churchwardens there inhabiting, and in default of them, by four of the principal inhabitants of the said parish, township or tithe, where such offenders shall be taken or apprehended, or by the said justices, or their said taxation then, the justice or justices of the peace by which the said offenders shall be committed to prison, or any justice of peace near adjoining, shall and may give warrant as aforesaid, to the constable, tithing-man or other officer, there to disfrain the goods of any of the said persons, and the same shall fell the same, and that such person or persons as authorized shall have full power to disfrain, and by appraisement of four substantial inhabitants of the said place, to fell a sufficient quantity of the goods and chattels of the said person or persons for refunding, for the levying of the said taxation; and if any surplus of the money come by the sale thereof, the same to be delivered to the owner.

By statute 27 Geo. 2. c. 3. the expense of conveying poor offenders to gaol or the house of correction, shall be paid by the treasurer of the county, except in Middlesex.

By some opinions, a gaoler is compilable to find his prisoner's sufficiency; but as this is denied by others, and as there are several statutes which provide for the maintenance of prisoners, without supposing the gaoler any way obliged to it, it seems this opinion is not maintainable.

Stat. 8. 9 & 10 Eliz. c. 295. a. where Lord Coke says, that in the time of Henry the third, for the provision of poor gaols, and his virtuals, the defendant shall not wage his law, for he cannot refuse the prisoner, and ought not to suffer him to die for default of sufficiency; otherwise it is for tabling a man at large.

By the 14 Eliz. c. 5. sed. 37. it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful by the justices of peace of every thire within this realm, at their general quarter-fees of the peace to hold open within the same thires, or the most part of the said justices, being then present, to rate and tax every parish within the said thires, at such reasonable sums of money, for and towards the relief of prisoners, as they shall think convenient by their discretions, so that the said taxation and rate do not exceed above 6d. or 8d. by the week out of every parish; and that the churchwardens of every parish within this realin, for the time being shall every Sunday levy the same, and once every quarter of a year pay the high constables or head officers of the said towns, parish, hundred, riding, or wapentake within this realm, all such sums of money as their parish shall be rated and taxed, for and towards the relief of the said prisoners within their several parishes; and that the said high constables and head officers, and every of them, shall pay all such sums of money as to them is paid by the said churchwardens, at every general quarter-fees to be holden within the said parish thires, to such sufficient persons dwelling within the said gaol, as shall be appointed by the said justices in their said open quarter-fees, to be there ready to execute the said money, and the said кар: and that the collectors for the said prisoners shall weekly distribute and pay all such sums of money as they and every of them shall receive, for the relief of the said prisoners as aforesaid; upon pain, as well the said churchwardens of every parish, confinable and head officers of every hundred or wapentake, as also the said collectors appointed for the collection and contribution of the said prisoners, for making default as aforesaid, to forfeit the sums of money as aforesaid within the same thires, to the use of the Queen's Majesty, her heirs and successors, and the other mony to the relief of the prisoners.

Sect. 38. Provided, that the justices of peace within any county of this realm or palace, shall not intrust or entrust to the city, borough, place or town corporal, for the execution of any branch, article or sentence of this act, for or concerning any offence, matter or cause growing or arising within the precincts, liberties or jurisdictions of such city, borough, place or town corporate; but that it may and shall be lawful to the justices and judges of the peace, mayor, bailiffs, and other head officers of those cities, boroughs, places and town corporals, where there be justices or judges, to proceed to the execution of this act within the precincts and compass of their liberties, in such manner and form as the justices of peace in any county may or ought to do within the same appurtenant county, if our law or this act, or any law or thing in this act expresed to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

See County rate.

And by the 19 Car. 2. cap. 4. it is enacted, "That the justices of peace of the respective counties, at any of their general seisions, or the major part of them then present, shall and may, if they think it needful so to do, may provide a flock of such materials as they shall think convenient, for the fitting the poor prisoners on work, in such manner and by such ways, as other county charges by the laws and statutes of the realm are and may be levied and raised, and to pay and provide fit persons to oversee and fet such prisoners on work, and make such orders for accounts of and concerning the premises, as shall be by them be thought needful, and for punishment of neglects and other abuses, and for bestowing the profits arising by the labour of the prisoners to fix on work for their relief, which shall be duly observed, and may alter, revoke, or amend from time to time, without the consent of this act; provided, that no parish be rated above the sum of money as by the week towards the premises, having respect to the respective values of the several parishes.

By the 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 20. sedd. 10. it is enacted, "That every under-archdr, gaoler, keeper of prisons or gaols, and executors of every person who shall be the same, and who shall be wholly or in part in trust or in possession of any manor or tenure, and every person or persons concerned therein, for committing by virtue of any writ or process, on any present whatsoever, shall permit and suffer the said prisoner or persons to sit at his and their will and pleasure to fend for and have any beer, ale, victuals and other necessary food, where and such provision there shall be to have and use such bedding, linen, and other things, as the said prisoner or persons shall think fit, without any purloining, detaining, or paying for the fame, or any part thereof.

By the 2 Geo. 2. cap. 22. it is enacted, "That the lords chief justices, lord chief baron, judges of assize, and judges of the peace, in their respective jurisdictions, and all commissioners for charitable uses, do their best endeavours and diligence to examine and discover the several gifts, legacies and bequests bestowed and given for the benefit and advantage of the poor prisoners in the said several gaols and prisons, and to fend for and any deeds, wills, writings, and books of account whencesoever, and every person or persons concerned therein, to examine and them upon oath to make true discovery thereof, (which they have full power and authority to do,) and to order and settle the payment, recovery and receipt of the same, when so discovered and ascertained, in such easy and expeditious manner as the several branch or branches of the future may not be defrauded, but receive the full benefit thereof, according to the true intent of the donors, and that the lift or tables of such gifts, legacies and bequests, for the benefit of the prisoners in every gaol and prison respectively, fairly written, shall be likewise hung up in such gaols and prisons respectively, in some open room or place, to which the prisoners may have resort, on occasion shall require, without fee, and shall be regulated by by the clerks of the peace of the respective counties and places in manner aforesaid.

4. Of the offence of breaking prison.

The offence of breaking a gaol or prison, by the Common law was no less than felony; and this whether the party were committed in a criminal or civil cause, or whether they were actually within the walls of the prison, or only in the custody of any person who had lawfully arrested him, or whether he were in the King's prison, or one belonging to a lord of franchise.

But now by the statute 1 Ed. 2. 2. 2. the severity of the law is relaxed, and the breaking of prison is only felony, as 2 Inf. 390. Stansdf. P. C. 31. Cr. Car. 210.

That the party who breaks from prison were taken on a coupr on an indictment or appeal, it is not material, whether that of which he is accused, was in truth committed or not, for there is an accusation against him on record, which makes the commitment lawful, be he ever so innocent. 2 Inf. 590. Hale's P. C. 109.

Alfo if an innocent person be committed by a lawful mittimus on such fuhipcion of felony, actually done by some other, as will justify his imprisonment, though he be neither indicted nor appealed, he is within the statute if he break the prison, for that he was legally in custody, and ought to have submitted to it till he had been discharged by due course of law. Hale's P. C. 3. 109. 2 Inf. 590. Dyer 99. 60. Crompt. 38. 83.

But if no felony at all were done, and the party be neither indicted or appealed, no mittimus for such a suppos’d crime will make him guilty within the statute by breaking the prison, for that his imprisonment was unjustifiable. Hale's P. C. 109. 2 Inf. 590. cont. 2 Leon. 1698.

Alfo if a felony were done, yet if there were no just cause of suppicion either to arrest or commit the party, and the mittimus be not in such form as the law requires, his breaking of the prison cannot be felony, because the lawfulnefs of imprisonment, in such case, depends wholly on the mittimus, which, if he be not according to law, the imprisonment will have nothing to support it. 2 Inf. 591. H. P. 109. but for this see Med. 80. 2 Hawk. P. C. 124. 5.

That there must be an actual breaking, for the words feloníce fregít prifonem, which are necessary in every indictment for this offence, cannot be satistofied without some actual force or violence; and therefore if the prisoner, without the ufe of any violent means, go out of the prison doors, which he finds open by the negligence or content of the gaoler, or if he escape thro’ a breach made by others without his privity, he is guilty of a misdemeanor only, and not of felony. 2 Inf. 590. Hale's P. C. 108. Stansdf. P. C. 31.

Nor will the breaking of prison, which is necessitated by any accident, happening without any default of the prisoner, as where the prison is fixed by lightning, or otherwise, without his privity, save him out to live his life, come within the statute. Plow. 139. 2 Inf. 590. Hale's P. C. 108.

Nor is it felony to break a prison, unless the prisoner escape. Keltw. 87. a.

That if the imprisonment be for any offence made capital by a subsequent statute, the breach of prison is as much within the act of Ed. 2. as if the offence had always been felony; but if the offence, for which a man is committed, were but a trespass at the time when he breaks the prison, and afterwards become felony by a matter subsequent; as where one committed for having dangerously wounded a man, who afterwards dies, breaks the prison before he dies, the fiction of law, which to many purpoſes makes the offence a felony ah inititis, shall not be carried so far as to make the prison-breach also a felony, which at the time it was committed was but a misdemeanor. Hale's P. C. 108. 2 Inf. 591.

Alfo it seems the better opinion, that if the offence, for which the party was committed, be in truth but a trespass, the calling it felony in the mittimus, will not make the breaking of the prison amount to felony; and that on the other side, if the offence were in truth a capital one, the calling it a trespass in the mittimus will not bring it within the statute; for the cause of the imprisonment is what the statute regards, and that is the offence, which can neither be likened nor increased by a mistake in the mittimus. But for this see 2 Hawk. P. C. 126.

That the breach of prison by a person attainted is within the statute, tho’ his crime doth not now require any judgment, because it hath been given already, whereby he is out of the strict letter of the statute, but clearly fall within the meaning of the words. 2 Hawk. P. C. 127.

That the offence of breaking prison is but felony, whatsoever the crime were for which the party was committed, unless his intent were to favour the escape of others who were committed for treason, for that will make him a principal in the treason. 2 Hawk. P. C. 127.

That he that breaks prison may be proceeded against for such crime before he be convicted of the crime for which he is committed, because the breach of prison is a distinct independent offence; but the sheriff’s return of a breach of prison is not a sufficient ground to arraign a man without an indictment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 127—8. But it is not sufficient to indict a man generally for having feloniously broken prison; but the case must be set forth specially, that it may appear that he was lawfully in prison, and for a capital offence. Hale's P. C. 109. 2 Inf. 591. See Piffon, Marbélles.

Gadler, Is the master or keeper of a gaol or prison. Cowell.

1. The duty and power of gaolers and keepers of prisons.

2. For what offences they shall forfeit their offices.

1. The duty and power of gaolers and keepers of prisons.

A gaoler is considered as an officer relating to the administration of justice, and is far under the protection of the law, that if a person threatens him for keeping a prisoner in safe custody, he may be indicted and fined, and imprisoned for it. 2 Rat. Abr. 76.

If a criminal endeavouring to break the gaol, affults the gaoler, he may be lawfully killed by him in the aftray. Jerk. 29. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71.

Besides the duties imposed gaolers by act of parliament, and the abuses for which by statute they are puished, they are also subject to the rigorous penalties of imprisonment, as also to the forfeiture of their offices, for gross and palpable abuses in the execution of their offices, such as suffering prisoners to escape, barbarously muffing them, Or. 9 Co. 50. Raym. 216. 2 Inf. 581. 8 Co. 44.

In the prosecution of this statute it is said to be no way material, whether the approbation be true or false, or whether the appellee be acquitted or condemned; but at law this offense was esteemed a misprision only, unless the appellees were hanged by reason of the appeal. 3 Stanea. By the 4 Ed. 3, cap. 10, reciting, That whereas in times past, theiffs and gaolers of gaols would not receive theiffs, perave accused, indited or found with the manner, taken and attached by the constables and townships, without taking great fines and ransoms of them for their receipt; whereby the said constables and townships have been unwilling to take theiffs and felons because of such extreme charges, and the theiffs and felons more encouraged to offend; it is enacted, 4 That the theiffs and gaolers of the common felons of felons for felony, without any thing being done against them at the day of commitment, by such writs. 2 Henec. P. C. 151.

And by the 8 & 9 Will. 3, cap. 27, it is enacted, 5 That if any martial or warden, or their respective deputy or deputies, or any keeper of any other prison within this kingdom, shall take any sum of money, reward or gratuity whatsoever, or for any service to procure, act, or be compell'd to, or permit any ease, and shall be discovered, or shall wrongfully or without cause do any thing whatsoever, or if the keeper of any other prison as afoaid, shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 500 l. and his said office, and be for ever after incapable of executing any such office.

It hath been resolved, that a forfeiture by a gaoler who hath but a particular interest, as of him who hath custody of a gaol for life or years, does not affect him if he remain derer or reviver who hath the inheritance, but that upon such forfeiture his title shall accrue, and not go to the king. 2 Pub. 119. 2 Loe. 71. Raym. 216. 3 Loe. 284.

And by the 8 & 9 Will. 3, cap. 27, it is enacted, 6 That the offices of marshal of the king's Bench priso, and warden of the Fleet, shall be executed by the several persons to whom the inheritance of the prions, of prison-houses, lands, tenements and other hereditaments then belonging or appertaining respectively, in his or their respective care, or the keeper of any other prison as afoaid, shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 500 l. and his said office, and be for ever after incapable of executing any such office.

3. For what offences they shall forfeit their offices.

It seems clearly agreed, that a gaoler by suffering voluntary eftapes, by abusing his prisoners, by extorting unreasonnable fees from them, or by detaining them in gaol after they have been legally discharged, and paid their full fees, forfeits his office; for that in the grant of every office it is implied, that the grante execute it faithfully and diligently. Co. Lit. 233. 9 Co. 5. 3 Mise. 131.

As where the king granted to the abbey of St. Alban to have a gaol, and to have a gaol-delivery, and divers perave were committed to that gaol for felony; and because the abbaye would not be at cost to make a deliverance, he had for a long time without making lawful deliverance; and it was resolved, that the abbe had for that cause forfeited his chancery, and that the same might be seized into the king's hand. 2 Loe. 43.

In the lady Broughton, keeper of the Gatehouse prison in Westminster, was informed against; and upon no guilty pleaded, she was found guilty; and her crime was extortion of fees, and hard usage of the prisoners in a most barbarous manner; and after she had by her counsel moved in arrest of judgment, and could not prevail, the had judgment given against her, nisi the fine was fixed one hundred marks, removed from her office, and the custody of the prison was at present delivered to the sheriff of Middlesex, till the dean and chapter should further order the fame. Raym. 216. 2 Loe. 71. Lady Broughton's case.

And by the 8 & 9 Will. 3, cap. 27, it is enacted, 7 That if any martial or warden, or their respective deputy or deputies, or any keeper of any other prison within this kingdom, shall take any sum of money, reward or gratuity whatsoever, or for any service to procure, act, or be compell'd to, or permit any ease, and shall be discovered, or shall wrongfully or without cause do any thing whatsoever, or if the keeper of any other prison as afoaid, shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 500 l. and his said office, and be for ever after incapable of executing any such office.

Raym. 216. 3 Loe. 284.

And by the 8 & 9 Will. 3, cap. 27, it is enacted, 8 That the offices of marshal of the king's Bench priso, and warden of the Fleet, shall be executed by the several persons to whom the inheritance of the prions, of prison-houses, lands, tenements and other hereditaments then belonging or appertaining respectively, in his or their respective care, or the keeper of any other prison as afoaid, shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 500 l. and his said office, and be for ever after incapable of executing any such office.

Gastrophit, signification of the party in whole hands money is attacked, within the liberties of the city of London, so used in the herald of London's court, because he has had garnishment or warning not to pay the money, but to appear and answer to the plaintiff-creditor's suit. Cowell, edit. 1727. See Atramentum.

Gastrophitut, (from the Fr. garnir, to furnish, to provide with.) In a legal sense signifies a warning given to one for his appearance, for the better furnishing of the caufe and court; for example, One is sued for the due of certain evidences and charters, and faith, that the evidences were delivered to him not only by the plaintiff, but another also, and therefore prayeth, that that other may be warned to plead with the plaintiff, whether the conditions be performed or not; and in this petition

he is bid to pray garnishment. New Book of Entries, fol. 212. ed. 3. and Termis de la Ley, Cramp, Taur. fol. 311, which may be interpreted either warning of that other, or else furnishing of the court with parties sufficient throughly to determine the cause, because until he appear and join, the defendant is, as it were, out of the court, P. N. R. It is an embargo to court parties, not considered of all parties to the action. With this agrees Britain, cap. 258, where he faith, That contracts, fome be naked, and fome furnihed, and to use the literal figuratio of the word appurteiled, but a naked contract, iudicium pactum, giveth no action; and therefore it is nothing but to hold the court in suspense, which ought to be with these five forts of garnishments, &c. Howbeit it is generally used for a warning in many places, particularly in Kitchin, fol. 6. Garnijfer hcur court, is to warn the court; and reasonable garnishment in the court place intends reasonable warning, and again, fol. 283, and many other authors. And in the first fol. cap. 2. Upon a garnishment, or two nickels returned, &c. But this may well be thought a metaphor of the effect, because by the warning of parties, the court is furnished and adorned. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Garth, (Gartieran, in French jurist, i. pristifis for plurilatiris) Signifies in divers situations and elsewhere, a special garter, being the ensign of a great and noble order of knights, called Knights of the Garter, being of all others the most excellent. This high order, as appeared by Mr. Camden, 211, and many others, was first instituted by King Edwdr.d of the Third, in the 23rd year of his reign, upon good success in a skirmish, wherein the King's garter (as it is said) was used for a token. 'Tis true, Polydore Virg. gives it a more flight original, but his grounds, by his own confession, arise from the vulgar opinion; King Edwdr.d the Third (says he) after he had obtained many great victories; (the Kings of France and Scotland being both prisoners in the Letter of London at one time; King Henry of Castile the baffard, expelled, and Don Pedro restored by the Prince of Wales,) did, upon no weighty occasion, first ered this order in 1350. viz. He dancing with the Queen, and other ladies of the court, took up a garter that happened to fall from one of them, when, after a long time of finding it, and that ever it were long, he would make that garter to be of high reputation, and shortly after instituted this order of the Blue Garter, which every companion of the order is bound daily to wear, being richly decorated with gold or silver, and having there words fixt on it, Heu fuit qui casu, which is commonly thus interpretaded, Evil to him that evil thinketh; or rather thus, To him be it that evil thinketh. Furse in his Glory of Generosity, fol. 192, agrees with Camden, and more particularily sets down the victories by which this order was occasioned. See a very ingenious and elaborate Treatise on this Subject by Elias Athlone, Esq. This order consists of twenty-six martiall and heroicall nobles, whereof the King of England is the Sovereign, and the rest are either nobles of the realm, or princes of other countries, friends and allies of this kingdom, the honour being so great, that the Knights of other nations are defir'd, and thankfully accepted it. For the ceremonies of the chapter proceeding to the election, of the inverfite, and robes, infallations and vow, with all other matters concerning it, see Mr. Segar's Homer Military and Civil, flib. 2, cap. 9, f. 65, and the said Treatise by Mr. Athlone. defence of the laws of their country; and being imagination himself to be encompassed in a wood, granted that they and their posterity should enjoy their rights, liberties and laws; some of which, as particularly this of Gavel-kind, continues to this very day. Gavel, ed. 1717.

Of the many opinions concerning the original of this custom the most probable seems to be, that it was first introduced by the Roman clergy, and therefore propagated more extensively in Kent, because there the Christian religion was first propagated. This tenet is reckoned by the best antiquaries to be the same with the Saxon bœclan laws, to which it is especially superior in the feudal services.

How this property came to escape, and to remain intact down to the people of Kent from their Saxon ancestors, is not agreed among the several antiquaries; some of them tell us, that the Kentishmen came with boughs, and demanded their custom to be confirmed by the Conqueror, or else resolved to oppose his march; others reject that story as a monkish fable, and think the Kentishmen submitted, and that the Conqueror came with Odo, bishop of Bayeux, from Normandy; which hath less probability, considering the many exceptions of the Kentish lands from feudal privileges; probably, not withstanding this story as to the opposition of the Conqueror with arms, it might thus far be true, that they came with their boughs to submit themselves to him on his first entry, and might petition for the establishment of their rights and customs; and the Conqueror, who was a very politic prince, might, to gain reputation with his new people, have thought it proper to anoint the custom, which seems the more probable, because the monks, the historians of those times, drop the story, and we all know they have not been at all favourable to his character; and the Romanist part of the story might be invented by Spot, to aggravate his own monarchy.

1. Several properties of this custom.

2. Particular cases which have been adjudged relating to this custom.

The first quality of the land was, that it was alienable, without any licence, according to the true nature of the Roman patrimonial property, and very different from the feudal enfealing. A tenant in this property was entitled to the patrimonial, in nature of the contras, in the Roman law, and without any feudal words or securvam of tenure. 2 Bat. Abr. 638. Summer 88.

The next property, is, that these lands are not forfeitable for felony, but for treason they are; for the feudal forfeitures only held in lands where there were tenures, and not in the alodial property; and the alodial property was only forfeitable, according to the Roman Civil law, for the crimen lese majestatis; and therefore the clerics, that were judges with the earl, never allowed the lands to be forfeited but for the crime of high treason; but subsequent statutes comprehend Gavel-kind, because such laws extend to the whole lands of the kingdom, unless Gavel-kind were excepted; but if a man be outlawed, or abjure the realm for felony, he shall forfeit his land in Gavel-kind, and his wife her dower in them; and those the striketh in which the custom is to be taken, because derogatory from the Common law, is usually given for a reason, viz. that when men, by their own free will, have renounced that outlawry and abjure the realm are penalties introduced since the conquest, and consequently since the establishment of Gavel-kind in Kent, and therefore like other new laws shall extend to that custom. Lamb. 610, 611. Br. tit. Custom 54.

With any tenant died, his heir within age, the lord might and did commit the guardianship to the next relation within the court of judicature in whose jurisdiction the land was; but the lord was bound on all occasions to call him to an account, and if he did not see that the accounts were fair, the lord himself was bound to answer it; this province the Chancellor hath taken from inferior courts since the conquest, only in Kent, where these customs are continued; but the custom is not used even in Kent to this day, because the successive guardians do it at their own peril in the account, and therefore every interpreter of it is ingenious to intermeddle. Lamb. 611, 612, 624, 625.

The infant at fifteen was reckoned at full age to fall for money; this they undoubtedly took from the Civil law, which reckons fourteen the atas pueribatis; for they reckoned, that though the infant had ended his years of infancy, yet he could not have completed his account with his guardian till the age of fifteen, and that was esteemed to be the age when he was completely out of guardianship. Lamb. 624.

The guardian appointed by the lord is to have the same allowance, and no other, with the guardian in foage at Common law, and is subject to the account of the heir for his receipts, and to the directions of the lord for the same cause. Lamb. 625.

The liberty of selling was allowed at the age of fifteen for the convenience and necessity of commerce, for which these small divided shares were absolutely necessary; yet it is certain, that from a very remote times, that the infant could not be wronged or imposed upon; therefore an infant that sells must have a valuable consideration, because otherwise 'tis a plain sign that the infant was defrauded; if a woman sold at the age of fifteen canad maritimil praebuit, this was a good conveyance; for marriage was reckoned to be a good and sufficient consideration.

It must pass by feoffment, and the livery upon the feoffment must be made by the infant in person, because an infant can't appoint an attorney by the Common law; and since the express words of the custom do not derogate from the Common law in that point, an equitable consideration must be admitted to make it derogate, for all customs are to be confined strictly. Lamb. 628.

This custom, like all others that are derogatory from the Common law, is to be confined strictly; because as far as the particular custom hath not derogated from the law, the general custom of the whole kingdom ought to prevail; and we are not to presume that the particular custom goes farther than by notorious facts may appear: therefore in this case, if an infant in gavelkind be defecated, and released to his disposer, or releaseth to a discontinuance, it is not within the custom, and therefore void; so if he make a feoffment with warranty, the warranty is not comprehended within the custom, and to void for the custom to be confined strictly is a conveyance by a naked feoffment. 1 Rol. Abr. 568.

It must be lands in possession, and not in reversion or remainder, because the true value of a reversion or remainder can't be known or computed, and therefore the greater need of more than ordinary discretion in such cases, which is not found in infants; besides, a reversion or remainder could not be immemorial; and therefore the custom could not be thereunto appurtenant, because the immemorial customs only were confirmed by the Conqueror; so that since the Norman conquest such a fale can't be adjudged legal. Benl. 33. pl. 52. Lamb. 627.

It must be land coming by descent, and not by purchase, because the infant's purchase could not be a subjecl matter for the custom; for the Conqueror muft, as is said, be presumed to confirm nothing but a privilege that is immemorial; therefore it must be governed by the general laws of the kingdom. Benl. 33. pl. 52. Lamb. 627.

Therefore it must be that he have the privileges of the infant at Common law, because tho' he hath the privilege of alienation at fifteen, yet that doth not take him any privilege he had before at the Common law. 1 Rol. Abr. 144.

As to the geld, or alodial rent, that was referred upon the lands, the lord might disintrin, by the petty ditches, the villege for his rent as when the tenant held it in medium beneficio; for tho' the lord parted with the lands, yet the rent still remained to be the lord's as it was before, and therefore he had it for the same remedy as all other persons had.
A. feited of lands in gavelkind had issue three sons, and devised part to one, and part to another, and another part to a third; and appointed by his will, that if any of them die without issue, that the other should be his heir; and it was adjudged, that each of them had an effate-tail by implication, by that part of the will, that if any of them died without issue, the others, and likewise the wife that the word heir makes a fee-simile in that part that descends to the survivor, upon the death of the reft without issue.

Mar 864, Spark v. Farnall.

A man feited of land in gavelkind makes a feoffment for the use of himself and his wife in tail, the remainder to his right heirs; the word heirs in the remainder and their issue, and not of purchase; and therefore the remainder shall descend according to the custom of gavelkind.

Bra. tit. Custum. (1)

Lands in Kent were disfegalled (by 31 H. 8, cap. 3, and a private act made 2 & 3 Ed. 6.) to all intents, constructions and purpofes whatsoever, and that they should defend as lands at Common law, any curfoms to the contrary notwithstanding; and the quefion was, whether these lands loft by these ftutes all other qualities or curfoms belonging to gavelkind, as well as their partibility; and resolved that they lone only their partibility.

628. 6 Ed. 2, c. 28. 175. 155. 124. 125.

Lev. 79. 2 Koh. 288. Hard. 335.

For five, thefe acts were made at the petition of tho' gentlemen whose lands were disfealled, to prevent the extinction of their families by the frequent divisions of thefe lands; therefore 'twas to be presumed, that the legiflature intended to define partibility, as that part of the curfom which tended to the conftraint of families, and not tho' other beneficient curfoms annexed to such lands in Kent, fuch as deiving, forfeiture for treason only, &c.

2. To expound this private act of the 2 & 3 Ed. 6, literally in the clause. (that they should be as lands at Common law, to all intents and purpofes,) I would take away all manner of power of deiving tho' lands, for lands at Common law were not deivable; and this act being fubfegent to 32 H. 8, and 34 H. 8, of wills, muft repeal them, and consequently prevent all future deives; but this reftaint can't be intended to be within the view of the petifioners, nor of the legisfature that framed the act upon the petition.

3. Tho' in the beginning of the clause the words to all intents and purpofes, &c., are large, yet they are refrefifed by the laft words of the clause, viz. that they should defend as lands at Common law, and consequently the curfom of partibility is to be vifted in thefe lands; and if thefe lands were free of this particular curfom, it seems to be very much questioned, whether the power of deiving, as well as the other qualities annexed to the partible land in Kent, be effential to gavelkind; for the curfom of gavelkind prevails in other countries besides Kent; and yet it may be very much questioned, whether the gavelkind of Kent, and that in other countries, agree in any thing but the manner of defendent; and if this doubt may be admitted, then tho' extraordinary curfoms in Kent can't be extingufified in a ftatute, without particular words for that purpofe, 1 Sid. 137.

To illuftrate this point farther, it will be neceffary to take notice, that it is fufpending for any one, who will intitle himfelf by the curfom of gavelkind, that the land is in Kent, and of the nature of gavelkind, without pleading the curfom efically; but if any one will plead the curfom of deiving, or of having a moiety as tenant by the curfory, or in dower, he muft plead the curfom fpefically, and not in that general manner he may plead gavelkind, or in that particular manner he has a moiety in the land. For it seems to be this, that gavelkind in Kent is the general law of the place, and no particular curfom; and therefore when it is generally alledged, the court shall take notice of it as of a law that prevails in a confiderable part of the kingdom; but as for the other curfoms, they are not an extraflary part of the curfom of gavelkind.

Gavelsetre. (Sax.) Sexturia velgilti; (seruaria fidelicet septem trias manueri vel praedi dominus ab usfurparum seruariae esquenta, serui vel valgilti namina, perpendunt.) Is a certain measure of land. Among other articles to be charged upon the stewards and bailiffs of the church of Canterbury's manors, this of old was one.—De gavelsetre cujuslibet bracium braciatui infra libertatem manuerium, viz. Unam lagenam et dimidium curvam. We may find it elsewhere under the name of Telygar. thus, De Telygar curvam, hoc of, de quibusbracium per annum annanum lagenam de curvam, and is without dispute the same. In lieu of which the abbot of Abingdon, of custom, received that penny mentioned by Selden in his Disquisition annexed to Fleet, cap. 8. num. 3. and there (I believe) misprinted Cotebottley-penny for Telygar-penny. Nor differs it (I think) from what is given in Gifford, at the end of H. I. laws, is called ask-guild. Sax. Diri. and see Gavelsetre. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Gentleman, Genesys is an irregular compound of two languages, the one from the French gentil, that is, Hainuit, vel hainuita esse notus; the other from the Saxon son, as if you say, a man well born. The Italian follows the very word.——

The Spaniard keeps the meaning, calling him hidalgo or hijo d'alte, that is, the son of some man, or of a man of reckoning: The French also call him gentilhomme. So that gentlemen are a few whom their blood and race doth make noble and known: In Latin nobilis, Smith de Reg. Ang. lib. 1. cap. 10. Under this name are comprised all above yeomen, so that noblemen are truly called gentlemen; but by the course and custom of England, nobility is either major or minor; the greater contains all the degrees from knights upwards; the lesser, all from barons downwards.——

Thrust into the first book of his Saye. Sect. 1, see Cheltham Talihill. Hist. of the Kings of Rome, gentilhomme. These words, gentilis bens, for a gentleman, was adjudged a good addition. Hill, 27 Ed. 3. The addition of knight is known, but of quiche or gentleman rare before the fifth of H. 5. c. 5. If one lives extravagant and high, who has no visible way of getting it, it may be reasonable to enquire how he lives, and may be liable to find sureties of the good behaviour; but if a man lives in a reasonable manner, and is held in it, he is not piracy for the Crown. 12. Per Hils Ch. J. Trin. 6 Ann. B. R. Farr. 59. in the case of the Queen v. Rogers. 1. In what cases, in what manner, and how long, a person may be compelled to find surety for his good behaviour.

A justice of peace cannot bind one to the good behaviour upon a general information, or commit him to prison for refusing to find sureties for his good behaviour upon such information. St. 12. Ps. 25. Car. 1. Sir Wil- liam Brereton's cafe.

If a witness is infamous we may commit him for the immediate contempt, or bind him to his good behaviour, but we cannot indite him for it, and that is according to the Common law of England; per Hils Ch. J. Trin. 6 Ann. B. R. Farr. 59. in the case of the Queen v. Rogers.

Surety for the good behaviour may be required of ftan- dalous, turbulent, frolicsome persons, as of forcible ent- ries, or obfene writers or ruffians, but not in refpect of bare words; unlefs they tend to a breach of the peace, or scandal of the government. Where one is arrested to the peace, the justice is not bound to demand surety, but the party ought to offer surety, otherwise the justice may award him to gaol. Br. Peace, pl. 7. cites 24 H. 7. 8.

Note: Where sufficient of peace is directed to the justice of peace, the justice, to whom the writ is first delivered, shall alone make provision to take the party to find surety, and it shall be returnable before him only, and he only shall take sureties, and shall make the return alone without the others. Br. Peace, pl. 9. cites 21 H. 7. 20. per Finanx Chief Justice.

The court was moved to grant the good behaviour against the Lord Ffalis, because he was indicted for a foul battery at the felions in London, and the bill was found against him; but per Rull Ch. Mich. 1651. B. R. Dey v. Lord Ffalis.

He that does, or has something sworn in court, declare that the party, against whom the articles are sworn, may be bound thereupon to the good behaviour, must express some full specifie thing in those articles, for which he ought to be bound to the good behaviour; for if the articles be only general, the good behaviour is not to be granted upon them; for a general accestation is no accestation on account of the uncertainty of it, and the party cannot tell what answer to make to such a general accestation. The word grant is regularly applied to things incorp

GRA

If a person obtain a grant to build houses on church or college land, and this is confirmed (where confirmation is necessary); this grant makes no alienation, but is only as a licence or covenant; for the full remains in the grantor, and so by consequence the houses are also in him. [Heil 57]

As the legislative powers derive of advowsons in right of their churches are restrained from alienating the same, or granting the next or other avoidance thereof, to the prejudice of their successors; for these are parcels of the possessions and hereditaments of the church, and not things whereby an annual rent or profit can be referred. [Co. 2 B. Bedfor's case]

But tho' these grants are void against their successors and the King, yet the grant of a bishop, in such case, is good against himself; so that he cannot avoid it during the time that he continues bishop, the statute being made only for the benefit of the successors and the King, that the preceding possessor they must not be deprived in their respective rights; but not to refrain those in possession from doing any thing to bind themselves during their own time. [Cra. Eliz. 267, 440, 690. 1 And. 241.]

The like law in case of grants made by deans and chapter, for they are void when the dean (being principal member of the corporation) dies, and binds both dean and chapter during his life only. [3 Co. 66. Cra. 2. 173.]

As the grant of the next avoidance of an advowson is only void against the successor himself, but shall bind the bishop, and the next avoidance of any grant by a bishop out of the possession of the bishoprick, this is not void against the bishop that makes the grant thereof. [10 Co. 60. 1 Ec. 182. Hard. 366.]

So if an archdeacon, dean, prebend, &c. make leaves, or other grants of any of their sole possessions, not warranted by statute, the same shall be bound by their own grants for the time. [Graif. 138. Heil 34.]

Where the matter and fellows of a college by deed inrolled made a lease not warranted by the statute, and levied a fine, and five years passed without claim; in this case, tho' it was held, that the lease was void against the succeeding matter, yet that it was good during the life of the matter that was party to the lease, and made no claim, because he is the head and principal part of the corporation. [11 Co. 67. 1 Roll. Rep. 151. 1 Len. 366.]

Infants in regard to their want of understanding are so far protected by the law, that regularly all their grants are void in the same manner as their contracts. [2 Bar. 203.]

But herein the law differes in such between grants as are void, or only voidable; The first of which are all such gifts, grants or deeds, made by an infant, which do not take effect by delivery of his hand; as if an infant give a horse and no delivery of the horse with his hand, and the donee take the horse by force of the gift, the infant shall have an action of trespass, for the grant was merely void. [Perk. 17. 19.]

But if an infant enters into an obligation, makes a feoffment, leaves a fine, or suffer a recovery, these are not merely void, but only voidable by him. [Perk. 19. 12.]

If an infant being feized of a care of land, grant a rent-charge to be issuing out of the same care by deed, and the grantee distrain, he shall punish him as a trespasser, notwithstanding that the infant delivered the deed with his own hand. [Perk. 19. 13.]

If an infant grant a rent by fine, this grant is voidable by himself during his nonage, by a writ of error; but if he do not avoid it during his nonage, it is good for ever; also if he die during his nonage, his heir shall not avoid it. [Perk. 19. 19.]

the life of a tenant in tail, which is lawful. [Lit. 27. 617. Co. Lit. 387. a. 3 Co. 85. 1 Len. 111. and 2 And. 110.]

Alfo of things which may be transferred without the notoriety of livery or feisin, fuch as rents, advowsons, &c. which lie in grant, a man can't by any disposition or act in pain forfeit them; and therefore, if a tenant, or any other tenant, without common life for life, grants them by deed to another in fetter in fact, this is no forfeiture; for this can be no way prejudicial to him in reversion, because though the grantee claim an effe in fee, he can make no title without the original grant made to his grantor, by which it must appear what interest he had, and consequently what effe he could convey; and if the grantee, notwithstanding the grant in fee, can claim no larger effe than his grantor had power to make, and so he in reversion can receive no prejudice. [Co. Lit. 233. b. 8 Co. 45. a.]

So there can be no occupant of things which lie in grant, and which can't pass without deed, as rents, &c. because these things having no natural existence, but confiding purely in the agreement, and depending on the institution of the society for their being, no man can enter to pollefs them; besides, as these things are framed, and have their exiftence by the municipal laws of the nation; fo tho' laws have established the solemnity of a deed to transfer any thing from one to another, it follows that since no man can make himself a title to those things without deed, whoever claims them, must have he is a party to the deed before he can derive himself a title to the things contained in the deed. [Co. Lit. 41. b. 2 Roll. 150. Cra. Eliz. 721. 901. Vaughan 199.]

Corporations aggregate, altho' they be invincible, and exift only in fupputation and intention of law, yet are they capable of making grants and parting with their property, as in all other cases. See Corporations.

But a dean without the chapter, a mayor without his commonalty, the matter of a college or hospital without his fellows, cannot grant or make any contract that will bind the corporation. [21 Ed. 4. 12. Mof. 51. Perk. felt. 31. 32.]

The grants of all dead persons in law, as monks, friars, canons profefled, and fuch like religious perfon were always held void. [Perk. felt. 3.]

But it seems that by the Common law, deans and chapters, masters and fellows of colleges, masters and brethren of hospitals, and fuch like corporations aggregate, might of themselves alone, without the consent or confirmation of any, have made long leases for lives or years, or gifts in tail, or effates in fce to others of their possessions, at their wills and pleasures. [Comp. Incumb. 145.]

So bishops, deans, &c. feized in the right of their bishoprick, deaneries, &c. So archdeacons, prebends, parfons, vicars, &c. with the consent and confirmation of others, might grant their possessions in the fame manner as other aggregate corporations. [Comp. Incumb. 415.]

But now by the statute of 1 Eliz. cap. 19, and the 13 Eliz. cap. 10. All gifts, grants, feoffments, or other conveyances by bishops, masters, and fellows of colleges, deans and chapters, &c. are void, except leaves, for the term of twenty-one years, or lives, being made conformable to the rules preferred by these statutes. See these statutes and the explanation of them, under title Leafe.
A grant by a feme covert is void, for no act of her's can transfer that interest which the intermarriage has vested in the husband; and therefore if a man be feized of land in right of his wife, and his wife grant a rent eftinguishing of the fame lands, without the knowledge of the husband; this grant is void; and so it is the fubfequent grant of rent eftinguishing of the lands, that if it be made and delivered without his affent, or with his affent, if it be made in the name of the wife, and not in the name of the husband; and notwithstanding the husband were abroad out of the country, at the time of such grant made and delivered, it is known whether he alive or dead; or if such grant is void if the husband be living; inasmuch as if the grantee, by force of such grant, entered into the land and disfraine, the husband, at his return, shall have for his entry and dilfrefs an action of trespafs. 2 Bac. Ab. 643. Perk. feft. 6. See Eaton v. fibre.

There may be a difference betwixt the husband and wife, by reason whereof certain lands of the husband are affigned unto the wife by the friends of the husband, and by his affent, and the wife ratifies a grant of rent to be eftinguishing of the same lands unto a stranger, the grant is void. Perk. feft. 8.

If a fingle woman being feized of a carfe of land, by deed grant a rent-charge thereunto, and the delivers the deed to a stranger as an efcrow, upon condition, that if the grantee go to Rome, and return back again before the feall of Egfer then next following, that then he shall deliver the rent-charge to her, and the woman marries, and before the feall of Egfer, and during the coverte, the grantee goes to Rome, and returns again, and the stranger delivers the efcrow unto him as the deed of the woman; this grant is good, notwithstanding that the husband was feized of the land in the right of his wife, before that the grant was taken effect; for it fhall have relation to the firft delivery, at which time she was a feme folo. Perk. feft. 9.

But in this cafe the grantee fhall not have any rent by force of the faid grant before the laft delivery, when the fame took effect as a complete deed. Perk. feft. 10.

Also in fuch cafe, if the woman had been married at the time of the delivery of the deed as an efcrow, and her husband died, and the grantee, after his death, had performed the condition, the grant had been void; for the delivery of the deed as an efcrow, being at a time when the was a feme covert, no ftubfequent act can make it good. Perk. feft. 11.

If a wife by a fine grant a rent out of her lands, this grant fhall not bind the husband during the coverte; but if the husband die before his wife fhall revere the fine by writ of error, the wife fhall be bound for ever. Perk. feft. 20.

Land being by the ftrift notions of the Common law, the grants of idiots and persons of non-fane memory are good, and that they themselves cannot avoid them by pretence of diſtraffe; because if the excuse were real, yet it would be repugnant in itself, because he did not know or remember the thing done. Perk. feft. 21. 1 Co. 173. See tit. Actions and Liables.

But if a man of infane memory, being feized of a carfe of land, grant a rent eftinguishing out of the fame land in fee, and die, and his heir enter, and the grantee disfrains for the rent behind, the heir fhall have an action of trespafs; but if the grantee had disfrained in the life of the grantor for the rent behind, the grantor fhould not have an action of trespafs for he cannot avoid his deed by difiebling of himself. Perk. feft. 21.

And here we muft further observe, that the law distinguiftles between the grants or acts done by idiots, &c. in pari, and those acknowledged on record; that as to the former they are void for the difeablity of the party taking them from the infcurity that may arise in contracts from counterfeit madness and folly; but their heirs or executors may avoid fuch acts by pleading the difiebling. 4 Co. 124. a. Beverley's cafe. Co. Lit. 247. 3 Eliz. 308. 623.

But need not itself, nor his representative, can vacate any act of his in a court of record, and therefore if a perfon non compate grant a rent by fince, it fhall bind him and his heirs; for tho' the judges ought not to admit of a fine from a man under that difiebling, yet when it is once received, it fhall never be revoked, because the record and judgment of the court being the highest evidence in the law, the confufor must be prefumed at that time capable of contrading; and therefore the diefability of the party taking the fine is lost by the recogntion recorded by any averment against the trutl of it. 4 Co. 124. 2 Ifl. 483. Co. Lit. 247. Perk. feft. 24.

A perfon born deaf, dumb and blind, cannot grant, for they cannot understand the figns of contrading, and therefore the grantor the granter is prefumed to receive fome advantage; but if a perfon be only dumb or deaf, he may contrady by figns, and confefquently may bind himself by his contracts. Perk. feft. 25.

The grants of perfon under dures are void, that if, they were made under an apprehension of some bodily hurt, or if the grantor were imprifoned without caufe, and the granter refused to release or difcharge him, he would fome fhould be made fuch grant. 2 Ifl. 483. See tit. Dutres.

But menacing to burn houfes, or spoil or carry away the party's goods, are not fufficient to avoid the grant; for if he fhould fuffer what he is threatened, he may fucce and recover damages in proportion to the injury done him. 4 Ifl. 485. Perk. feft. 18.

2. What perfon may take by grant.

There are but few or no perfon's excluded from being grantees, and therefore a man attainted of felony, murder, or treafon, or a defcendant of the granter, or of the King's villain, an alien, one outlawed in a personal action, or a bufard, may be grantees. Perk. feft. 48.

A feme covert may be a granter, and therefore if a rent-charge be granted to a feme covert, and the deed is delivered to her without the privity or knowledge of her husband, and the husband dies before any diſagreement made by him, and before any day of payment, the grant is good, and fhall not be avoided, by faying, that the husband did not agree, &c. but the diſagreement of the husband ought to be fiewed. Perk. feft. 43.

If an English man goes into France and there becomes a monk, yet he is capable of taking by a grant made to him in England, because fuch profefion is not triable; and all fuch profeffions are taken away and declared unlawful, as being contrary to our eftablihed religion. 2 Rail. Abtr. 43. said to be refolved by all the judges at Serjeants Inn, Ecb. Ecb. 300.

Alfo Aggregate corporations are invalid, and eftif only in Supposition of law, yet are capable of being taken by grant, for the benefit of the members of the corpora

As where the mayor and commonalty of N. brought an action of profecution against the mayor, bailiffs and commonalty of Derby, and declared, that the defendants' predeceffors had by their deed granted to the plaintiffs predeceffors, that all the commonalty of N. fhould be diſcharged of morgage, pontage, culturn and toll, for all their merchandize, &c. within the vill of Derby, and that the officers of Derby had taken toll and culturn of the burgesses of N. againft their covenant; and it was held, that the action lay, and that the grant to the corporation for the benefit of the particular members was good. 48 Ed. 3. 17. 1 Saund. 344. cited.

If a feoffment or grant be made by deed to a mayor and commonalty, and the corporation aggregate of many perfon's capable to purchase, they have a fee-fimple without the word successors, because in judgment of law they never die. Co. Lit. 90.

So if a leafe be made to them during their lives; this is equal to a grant made to them while they continue a body politic, and not to the individuals, and is therefore not granted upon to be for ever. 21 Ed. 4. 76. 1 Rail. Abtr. 543.

If A. grants to the mayor and burgoftfs of D. the moiety of a yardland in the waft of D., without describing in what part it should be, or how it is bounded, the corporation cannot make their election by attorney, but must go directly on having the land, and then they may make a fequal grant of attorney, retentiting the grant to them, and in which part of the waste the grant should take effect, and according to such direction the attorney is to enter. 1 Lev. 30.

3. What things or interest may be granted.

It is laid down as a general rule, that a man cannot grant or charge that which he hath not; and therefore if a man grant a rent-charge out of the manor of Dale, and in truth he hath not any thing in the manor of Dale, yet he may make his grant valid, Park. part. 65.

A corrobod uncertain cannot be granted over, because of the prejudice that may accrue thereby to the original grantor; but a corrobod certain may. 2 Ed. 4. 43. 2 Rel. Atr. 45.

So a common free number in fee may be granted over, but the grantee can have no assurance of life for life or years; free number cannot be granted over, because of the prejudice it may be to the tenant of the land. 21 Ed. 4. 84. 2 Rel. Atr. 46.

If the King grant a warren to f. S. and his heirs in his manor, the grantee may grant the manor with the warren over to another in fee, because this liberty is inherent feft of folam sequitur. 2 Rel. Atr. 46.

So if the King grant to another and his heirs a fair or market in certain manors or towns, the grantee may grant over the manors or towns, with the fair or market. 2 Rel. Atr. 46.

If a rent be granted in tail, the grantee cannot grant it in tail; if it continue in a rent, because, as such, it may be in tail within the statute De donis; but if the grantee brings his writ of annuity, it is no longer within the statute, because then it is become a charge merely personal, without any relation to the land out of which it was at first granted, and therefore is become a fee-simple conditional, as such a gift of lands had been before the statute, and therefore the annuity not being within the statute may be aliened or granted over. Poph. 87; Ca. Lit. 19. 6. 7 Ca. 61. Nevill's cafe.

The grantee of a rent-charge in fee may grant over any part of it, though it hath been objected to these kind of grants or divisions of rent-charges, that thereby the tenant is exposed to several suits and difficulties for a thing, which in its original creation was inteire and recoverable upon one avowy; but the answer to this is, that it is the tenant's own choice, whether he will submit himself to that inconvenience or not, before the grants, before the 4 & 5 Ann. could not take any benefit of the grant by detinue, without the consent of the owner of the tenant, nor by affize, without he obtains feisin of it from the tenant; besides, since the law allowed of such fort of grants, and therefore established such fort of property, it would have been unreasonable and severe to hinder the proprietor to make a proper distribution of it for the promotion of his children, or to provide for the contingencies of his family, which were in his view. 9 H. 6. 13. 2 Rel. Atr. 45; Ce. Lit. 148. 8. but Csa. Elit. 747. seems contrary.

The Common law hath so utter an abhorrence to any act that may promote maintenance, that regularly it will not suffer a possibility, right of thing, or interest, in anything to be created for a term of time, or for a condition broken to be granted or assigned over. 21 Ed. 4. 244. Ce. Lit. 214. 1 Rel. Atr. 376. 2 Rel. Atr. 45. and Skinner 66, 26. that arragaces of rent are not assignable.

So though a bond be a choses in a&ion, cannot be assigned over, so as to enable the assignee to sue in his own name, yet he has by assignment such a title to the paper, which he may keep or cancel it. Ce. Lit. 233. 2 Rel. Atr. 46.

So if an obligor makes two executors, and one of them delivers the obligation to a stranger in satisfaction of a debt which he himself owes, and dies; although the debt does not pass to him, yet the parchment or paper remains, and the grantee in an assign of demince brought by the obligor's executor, may still sue thereon. 2 Rel. Atr. 46. Csa. Elit. 478. 8. 496. pl. 15. 4

So a husband poissible of an obligation in right of his wife may assign it to a stranger, and the assignee may justify the detaining thereof against the wife after the death of the husband. 2 Rel. Atr. 46.

Alfo in equity a bond is assignable for a valuable consideration paid, and the assignee alone becomes intitled to the money; so that if the obligor, after notice of the assignee, delivers the money to the assignee, he will be compelled to pay it over again. 2 Ven. 59. 1 Chron. Rep. 90.

The interest gained upon an execution of a statute or recognizance cannot, without an actual entry of the co- nuence to perfect his security, be granted or assigned over to any other person; and the assignment is a co- nuence in a statue after his death sued forth an extent, and upon that a liberate, which was returned, and before any actual entry or recovery of the poffeifion in ejectment, or without executing of the deed upon the land, did by indenure allign over all his interstit to lefjor of the plantation, and to the grantor and the assignee; and it was adjudged, that the assignment was void; for by the return of the liberate he had accepted of the poffeifion, and was eftopped to fay the contrary then, when the owner still continues in poffeifion; this turns the poffeifion which the adminiftrator had accepted by the liberate to a right, which right cannot be assigned; nos this like an interstit termius, which 'tis true, the assignee may assign over before actual entry, because in that cafe the lefior is the principal agent, and hath done all on his part to transfer over an interest to the lefior, which he may execute at pleasure; and as the person who fues the liberate is in this cafe entitled to fay, that he hath the poffeifion; fo is the lefior in the other cafe eftopped to fay, that he hath the poffeifion against his own leaee. 3 Lev. 312. Stephen and Hanum. 4 Med. 48. 1 Snow. 290. 2 Sad. 536. 5 C.

If there be a devile of a term to A. for life, remainder to B. R. cannot, in the life-time of A. assign or grant over his interest, because he has but a bare possibility, for A. may oulive the number of years. Dyf 116. 4 Ca. 66. 10 Ca. 47. b. Raym. 145. 1 Sid. 188. & vide 1 Chron. Cases 8, 11.

If a leafe be made to baron and feme for their lives, the assignee of the executors of the survivors of them; the husband cannot grant over the term, being but a possibility; for it is uncertain which of them shall be the survivor. Ce. Lit. 46. 2 Rel. Atr. 48.

If a church is void, the void turn is not grantable by any common perfon, for it is a mere spiritual thing, and annexed to the perfon of him who is patron; and during the life-time of the patron in the actual possession of it, unless there be annulment of his authority, a thing in a&ion, and in effect the fruit and execution of the advowson, and not the advowson itself; but whilst a church is void, the next avoidance or avoidances that shall happen, or the inheritance of the advowson may be granted away. Dyf 125. b. 282. 1 Leg. 366. 176. 21 Can. 45. 1 Rel. Atr. 48. 2

If a man acknowledges a statute in 2004. to A. and afterwards leaves the land for 21 years to commence immediately, and the land is extended upon the statute, at 53. per annum, the lessee for ninety years may, during the extent, grant over the term, allo' the extent be till the cotr is levied, which may not happen till after the expiration of the ninety years; for the extent is but in nature of a leafe, and by a reasonable con- fusion will end before the term of ninety years. 2 Rel. Atr. 48. Cadbe and Oliver.

If a man grant a rent-charge with a clause of diffrents, and that if the diffrents be reprieved, that the grantee may enter and hold till satisfaction, the grantee may grant over the rent with this penalty, allo' the penalty is but a possibility; for being annexed to the rent, it may well pafs together with the rent. 2 Rel. If a man make a lease to B. for forty years, and the lessee, upon his view of the premises, and finding him in sufficient repair at the expiration of the forty years, that the lessee shall hold them for forty years longer; and the leflee, during the forty years, grants to f. If a man grant 200 fagots of wood to be taken out of all his lands, or 20 s. in lieu thereof, out of his lands, with all the profits thereof, and with all the profits arising therefrom, at the election of the grantee to have the one or the other; in this case the grantee may, without any election, grant over the fagots, because he had a present interest in them; but the 20 s. being given in lieu thereof cannot be granted over before election. 2 Rol. It is a mistake of divers woods bargains and sells 300 cords of wood to B. and his assigns, to be taken by the appointment of the bargainor; by this bargain and sale a present interest is invested in B. which he may grant over before any appointment by the bargainor. 2 Rolls 111. pl. 955. A man may grant that which he hath potentially, though not actually, as if a leitorcovenants that it shall be lawful for the lessee at the expiration of the lease to carry away the corn growing on the premises, although by possibility there may be no corn growing at the expiration of the lease; yet the grant is good, for the grantor hath such a power in him, that the property shall pass as soon as the corn is extant. Hob. 132. Grantham and Halsey adjourned, 2 Rol. Abr. 48. 8. S. C. cited.

So if A. lease land to B. for years, and grants that he to be held of, and to have, and to hold the same, as grantor, and as grantee thereof, may at any time after the lease is to end, change the name of the grantor, and the name of the grantee, and may give the freehold to another, and so convey the same as an inheritance; but to an heir repre- sented his ancestor as to an inheritance; so an executor represents his testator as to a chattel. Cit. Lit. 54. 2 Rol. Abr. 47.

4. What shall be a sufficient name or description of the grantor or grantees, to make a grant good and certain.

The names of persons at this day are only found for distinction-take, though it's probable they originally imported something more, as some natural qualities, features or relations; but now there is no other use of them, but to mark out the families or individuals we speak of, and to difference them from all others; and therefore in grants which are to receive the molt benign interpretation, one of the parties against the other, it is not sufficient then to ascertain the grantor and grantees, and to distinguish them from all others, the grant will be good. Perk. Jett. 36. Gaud. 122. Hob. 32.

And this we may observe in those cases where there are such sufficient marks of distinction, that the grant would be good without any name at all, confemonedly a mistake in the name of baptism or surname, is to be looked upon but as a mistake, and will not vitiate; as a grant by or to George Bishop of Norfolk, where his name is John, or to Henry Earl of Pembroke, where his name is Robert, may be more perfections of those names. Cit. Lit. 3. 2 Rol. Abr. 48.

So a grant of an annuity by an Abbots, by the name of the foundation, without his name of baptism, is good, if there be not any more Abbots in England of the same name of foundation. Perk. Jett. 36. 2 Rol. Abr. 44.

If a grantor takes a name, that is not in the register, for his wife, without naming her by the name of baptism, yet the grant take. 45. Ed. 3. 22. b. 2 Rol. Abr. 45. cited.

So if a grant be made to T. and Elen his wife, where in truth her name is Enys; yet the grant is good, for being called the wife of T., reduces it to a sufficient certainty. 2 H. 4. 25. 2 Rol. Abr. 44. Cit. Lit. 3.

If A. be created a herald, and in the patent he is called Cheyher, a grant or obligation made to him by the name of Cheiffer is good, for this sufficiently distinguishes him from all other men. 2 Rol. Abr. 44.

If there be father and son of the same name, and the father grants an annuity to his son, without any addition, it shall be intended the grant of the father; and if the son being of the same name with his father grant any annuity without any addition; yet the grant is good, for he cannot deny his own deed. Perk. Jett. 37.

A baifard, who is known to be of such a one, may grant or grant to his baifard the right of such reputed name; for all surnames were originally acquired by reputation. Cit. Lit. 3. 2 Rol. Abr. 43. 4.

As where George Shelley conveyed lands to the use of himself, the remainder to George Shelley his son, whereas in truth George was born of one B. in matrimony of one C., yet was reputed the son of George, and educated by him; though the boy was but six years old, it was ruled he should take the remainder, for having gotten by reputation the name of George Shelley, these words are a certain description of the person to take the remainder. Cit. Lit. 3.

If a remainder be limited to the eldest issue of f. s. whether legitimate or illegitimate; and f. s. has issue a baifard, he shall not take this remainder, for it is not vested in f. s. as it was in the other case, but is in contingency, and the certain time is not defined when this contingency shall happen; for the baifard at his birth does not acquire the reputation of being the eldest of f. s., and since the baifard, when first in being, can not take by virtue of this limitation, he can never take it; for he cannot be understood to be the person designed and marked out by these words, if after his birth it depends on the uncertainty of popular reputation, whether he should take the remainder, or not. And if the mention of the person as contains no certainty in itself, or no relation to any other certain matter that may reduce it to certainty, it is a void limitation. 2 Rol. Abr. 42. 43. GRA

It has been already observed, that the naming the right names of the grantor and grantee is for no other purpose but to ascertain the parties, and disingenuous from others; and that if there be a sufficient verification to this purpose, the grant will receive the most favourable interpretation; and it seems the fame indulgence will be allowed of in the midst of additions, which are by law made part of the name. By additions we mean names of dignity, which are marks of differentiation, imposed by public authority, and always make up the very name of the person to whom they are given; and these are of two forts: 1st. Such as exclude the surname, so that the per- sons may not seem to be of any common family; and 2dly. Such marks of differentiation as are also imposed by the King, and parcel of the name itself, but do not exclude the surname, such as Knight and Baronet. 2 Inf. 666. Dyer 88. * & Shew. 392.

As to those names of dignity, which exclude the surname, we have already observed, that in grants a mistake in the Christian name will not vitiate the grant, because there cannot regularly be more than one person of that name. Ca. Lit. 3.

So a grant to a Duke's eldest son, by the name of a Marquess, or to the eldest son of a Duke, by the name of an Earl, &c. is good, because of the common country of England, and their places in heraldry. Curb. 440.

So where a conveyance was made of a reversion to Ralph Everi, knight, Lord Everi, and he, brought an action of covenant, to which the defendant pleaded, that at the time of the grant he was not cognizant of quiesitatis per nomen milid; and it was held to be no good plea, for the person is sufficiently expressed by Lord Everi, and the addition of Knight, tho' false, doth not take away the description of the true person. 1 Balf. 21. Lord Everi v. BritMIand. Cra. Cor. 250. 8. C.

In C. B. and affirmed by three judges in B. R. where the party set forth his title to an advowson by virtue of letters patent granted to A. tunc armiger & potesta militia; and upon oyer of the letters patent it appeared, that the grant was made to A. knight, that it could not be intended the fame person, becaufe Knight is a name of dignity, but Armorger or Esquire, a name of worth; and if he is afterwards made a knight, the name of Esquire is thereby extinguished, and consequently that a grant made by the King to A. knight, when there was no such man a knight, was a void grant. Curb. 450.

As to grants by and to corporations, here shall only observe, that tho' the names of corporations have a certain and significant meaning, and are not as arbitrary as those of common persons; yet if there be enough said to shew that there is such an artificial being, and to distin- guish it from all others, the body politic is well named; tho' the words and syllables are varied from. 10 Ca. 125.

Gaulif. 122.

Comp. Incumb. 474.

As if a corporation be founded by the name of the Dean and chapter of the cathedral church in Oxford, and they make a leaf by the name of the Dean and chapter of the cathedral church in Oxford, it is well enough, for the place of the situation is well and sufficiently shewn. Pep. 57. 2 Roll. Abr. 42. 8. C.

So if the prior of St. Michael in Coventry make a leaf by the name of the Dean of Coventry, this is good; so if they had granted an annuity or corroy, and the name of the fain had been omitted. 10 Ca. 125.

So if a corporation be infulituated of St. George the Martyr, and in a leaf they omit the word Martyr, it is well enough; for the name of dedication is but an empty sound, and no otherwise requisite than to 'dilige the corporate from all others. Pep. 57.

If there be an immaterial addition, this doth not hurt; as if the President and scholars of Corpus Christi college in Oxford make a leaf by the name of President and scholars of Corpus Christi college in cam. Oxon, this is good; for with per insinuo non vititur. Cra. Eliz. 816.

If the corporation be expressed by words synonymous, it is sufficient; as if a college be infulituated by the name of Gardianus & scholarum donus fuses collegii philobarium de Morton, and they make a leaf by the name of Corpus & scholarum, it is good. Ca. 125.

It seems by the better opinion of the books, that a change of the Christian name will vitiate the grant; as where the grant is without any Christian name at all, or where a wrong name is made of, as Edmund for Edward, for a person cannot have two Christian names; neither can the party be declared against by his right name, with an averment, that he made the deed by a wrong name, for that would be to set up an averment contrary to the deed, and to aniction allowed by law to every solemn contract; and therefore if he be impedled by the name in the deed, he may plead that he is another person, and that it is not his deed. See 36 H. B. 26. Dyer 279. Owen 107. Ca. Lit. 3. Cra. Fact. 538. 640. *Perr. jett. 38.

A person's name does not vitiate the grant, because there is no repugnancy that a person should have two different surnames, so that he may be impelied by the name in the deed, and his real name brought in by an alter, and then he cannot deny the name in the deed, because he is ellped to say any thing contrary to his own deed. 3 H. B. 25. 2 Roll. Abr. 146.

Afo, tho' a person cannot have two Christian names at one and the same time, yet he may, according to the infulituation of the church, receive one name at his bap- tifm, and another at his confirmation, and a grant made to or by him, by the name of confirmation, will be good; for tho' our religion allows no re-baptifm to make double names; yet it doth not force men to abide by the names given by their godfathers, when they give themselves to make profeflion of their religion. 43 Ed. 3. 23. 2. Ca. Lit. 3. 2 Roll. Abr. 43. 1 Brownl. 147. Lit. Rep. 182.

So if a man make a leaf by a Christian name to that by which he is impel'd, yet the leaf is good; for this doth not take effect altogether by the indenture, but partly by the demise; as if John by the name of Jane leave lands, admitting that these are difieunt names, yet the leaf is good. 2 Roll. Abr. 42. Hide and Chatterer.

If a rent be granted to J. S. or J. D. the grant is void, because he is not impel'd for the deed is in the disjunctive; and tho' the deed be declared to J. S. yet this cannot make the grant good; for the deed was void at first, and cannot be made good by the delivery. Perr. jett. 56.

If a rent or any thing else that lies in grant, be granted to the right heirs of J. S. and J. A. alive, this grant is void; for there is no person capable of taking, as an- swering this description. Perr. jett. 52.

Merchant's grant to the Clayton's of the woods generally used in the education of the children, whether born at the time of the decease of the father, or at that time in utero, or whether such father be within the age of twenty-one years, or not, may be lawfully held by his executor; and such disposal shall be good against all per sons claiming such child, as gardian in suo, or otherwise. But if the father order no guardian to his child, the ordinary may appoint one to manage his goods and chattels, till the age of fourteen years, at which time he may chuse another guardian, accordingly as the Civil law he may have his curator; for we all hold curatos as the Civilians in this case, and that is levius curator nos datur. And for his lands the next a kin on that side, by which the land cometh not, shall be guardian, and was here tofore called guardian in foage. See more of the old law in the Ed. 1. Add. 1. and 15. A guardian is one appointed by the wisdom and policy of the law to take care of a per son and his affairs, who by reason of his imbecility and want of understanding is incapable of acting for his own interest; and it seems that by our law his office originally was to instruct the ward in the arts of war, as also to teach him husbandry and tillage, so that when he came of age he might be the better able to perform those services to his lord, whereby he held his own land. 2 Bac. Abr. 672. See 2 Jiff. 12, 13, 564, 565.

1. Of the several kinds of guardians, namely, by the Common law, by curialia, and by statute.

Guardians by the Common law. There are four kinds of guardians by the Common law, viz. guardian in chivalry, focage, nature and nurture. Cz. Litt. 88. k.
As to guardian in chivalry it is to be observed, that by the Common law, if tenant by knight-service had died, his heir male being under the age of twenty one years, the lord should have the land holden of him till such heir had arrived to that age, because that the king had not interest in the tenant's service; and such lord had likewise the custody of the body of the infant to bind him up, and inure him to martial discipline, and was therefore called guardian in chivalry. Lit. feu. 103.

Ca. Lit. 74. 75. 2 Co. 12. 13.

An heir who had been in ward by reason of a tenure in capite, when he came of age must have held livery, i. e. to have the lands delivered to him by the King, the expense of which was half a year's profit of his lands holden; but if the heir had been of age at his ancestor's death, he should have paid for land in possession a year's profit, his father was then to be a most confidential friend, and for exceptions expectant on freeholds half a year's profit, and the King should have had all the mean profits till tender of livery were made; so if tender were made, and not duly purified.

Ca. Lit. 78. a.

By the statute of Aketon, cap. 6. if the lord dispa-age his male ward under fourteen, he should have loft the ward, and the whole profit thereof should have been converted to the ward's benefit; the lord was to dis- parage the heir by marrying him to the daughter of a villain, burgess, one attainted of felony, to a baidard or alien, one wanting land or foot, deformed, paralytic, or commonly blind.

Ca. Lit. 80. b.

On the death of guardian by knight-service, the executors should have had the wardship of the heir, for they had it to their own use, and might have granted or af- liged it over; and therefore were not at all accountable to the infant when he came of age. Ca. Lit. 90.

This sort of guardian ship being a sort of dominion of nature, and wanted to prevent the use which were made of the Gothic nations to brend them to arms; it was dec- ended a great burden, and therefore is now fallen by the 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. by which all tenures by knight-service, and foceage in capite, are turned into common foceage, and disfranchised of hommage, livery, premier formag, ward- ship, and all acts of wardship were at law incident to such tenures, and aids per fili marrier & per faire fin chivellerie.

2. Bac. Ald. 674.

1. By the Common law, if tenant in foceage die, his heir being under fourteen, whether he be his issue or cousin, male or female, the next of blood to the heir to whom the inheritance should at first be, shall be guardian of his body and land till his age of fourteen; and although the nature of foceage be in some measure changed from what it originally was, it yet is still called foceage tenure, and the guardian in foceage is still only where lands of that kind (as mould of the lands in England now are,) defend to the heir within age; and though the heir after fourteen may chuse his own guardian, who shall continue till he is twenty-one, yet as well the guar- dian before fourteen, as he, whom the infant shall think fit to chuse after fourteen, are both of the same nature, and so the same office and employment appertain to them by the law, without any intervention or direction of the infant himself; for they were therefore appointed, because the infant, in regard of his minority, was sup- posed incapable of managing himself and his estate, and consequently derive their authority not from the infant, but from the law; and that is the reason they transact all affairs in their own name, and not in the name of the infant, as they would be obliged to do, if their au- thority were derived from him. Ca. Lit. 87.

Hence the law has invested them not with a bare au- thority only, but also with an interest till the guardian- ship, and is consequently the authority and interest, the law has made them accountable to the infant, either when he comes to the age of fourteen years, or at any time after, as he thinks fit; and there- fore are not to have any thing to their own use, as the guardian in chivalry had. Ca. Lit. 90. a.

Guardian by nature, who is the father or mother; and here we must observe, that by the Common law every father hath right of guardianship of the body of his son and heir until he attain to the age of twenty-one years. Ca. Lit. 84. 9 Ed. 4. 52. 27 Att. pl. 73.

33 H. 6. 55. K. B. 163.

In free tenures in knight-service were in being, the guardian in chivalry could not have the custody of the body of the heir as long as his father was living; but all, which such guardian could have, was the cus- tody of the lands which were defended to the infant from his mother or other collateral ancestor; and there- fore the father had an action of trespas, for taking away his son and heir, quare femineum & heredem replevit, though he was not in propriety of speech counted the guardian.

But neither the mother, nor any collateral ancestor could have the custody of the heir apparent before the lord, for though they may have an action of trespas quare consequeniam & heredem replevit, yet they can have it only against a stranger guardian in chivalry. Lit. feu. 114. Ca. Lit. 84.

4. Guardian by nurture, who hath only the care of the perfon and education of the infant, and hath nothing to do with his lands merely in virtue of his office; for such guardian may be, though the infant hath no lands at all, which a guardian in foceage cannot. Ca. Lit. 88.

Guardians by custem. By the custom of the city of Langden, the custody and guardianship of orphans under age unmarried belongs to the city in Boc. Att. 675.

By the custom of Kent, where any tenant died, his heir within age, the lord of the manor might and did commit the guardianship to the next relation within the court of justify, in whose jurisdiction the land was; but the lord was bound on all occasions to call him to an account; and if he did not find that the accounts were fair, the infant should be brought and examined. This pro- vince the Chancellor hath taken from inferior courts on- ly in Kent, where these customs are continued, but the custom is not used even in Kent at this day, because the lords in giving tutors do it at their own peril in the ac- count; and therefore every man thinks it dangerous to introduce it. Lamb. 611.

This guardian appointed by the lord is to have the same allowance and no other, with the guardian in foceage at Common law, and is subject, as has been said, to the account of the heir for his receipts, and to the difficulties of the lord for the same cause. Lamb. 624.

If any hold lands descendent to an infant within the age of fourteen years, the next of kin, to whom the lands cannot defend, shall be guardian both of the infant's land and estate, if the custom of a manor it does not belong to another. 2 Rol. Ass. 40. 2 Lutw. 1185.

S. P. said to be refused, but the copyhold defend to a lunatick, or an infant within the age of fourteen, the lord, with- out a special custum for that purpose, hath no power of appointing a guardian. Hob. 215. Hutt. 16. 17. 2 Lutw. 1185.

Guardians by custom. By the Common law no perfon can be appointed a guardian, because the law had appointed one, whether the father was tenant by knight-service or in foceage. 3 Co. 37. 3 Inst. 62.

The first statute, (1 Ed. 362.) that gave the father a power of appointing, was the 4 & 5 H. 5. & M. 8. which provides under severe penalties, such as fine and imprisonment for years, "That nobody shall take away any any maid or woman child unmarried, being within the age of sixteen years, out of or from the possession, custody, or management of, and against the right of, such maid or woman child, or of such person or persons to whom the father of such maid or woman child by his last will and testament, or by any other act in his lifetime, hath or shall appoint, assign, bequeath, give or grant the order, keeping, education and governance of such maid or woman child, or of any other child or children, within the age of twenty-one years, or of full age, by his deed executed in his lifetime, or by his last will and testament, or in the presence of two di- dible witnesses, to dispose of the custody and tuition of such child or children, and, for and during such time as he or they shall respectively remain under the age of twenty-one years, or any lesser time, to any person or persons in possession or remainder, other than Polych recusants; and this power of the custody of such child or children made since the 24th day of February 1645, or hereafter to be made, shall be good and effectual against all and every person or persons claiming the custody or tuition of such child or children as guardian in focage, or otherwise; and such person or persons to whom the custody of such child or children, or shall be disposed of as aforesaid, shall and may maintain an action of ravishment of ward and trespass against any person or persons which shall wrongfully take away or detain such child or children, for the recovery of such child or children, and shall and may recover damages for the same in the said action, for the use and benefit of such child or children.

And such person or persons to whom the custody of such child or children hath been, or shall be disposed of or devised, shall and may take into his or their custody, to the use of such child or children, the profits of all lands, tenements, and hereditaments of such child or children, and also the custody, tuition and management of the goods and chattels and personal effait of such child or children till their respective age of one and twenty years, or any lesser time, according to such disposition aforesaid, and may bring such action or actions in relation thereto, as by law a guardian in common focage might do.

In the construction of this statute the following opinions have been held.

1. That a testamentary guardian, or one formed according to this statute, comes in lieu parentis, and is the same in every respect with a natural parent, and differs only as to the modus habendi, or in a few particular circumstances; as first, That it may be held for a longer time, viz. till the heir attains the age of twenty-one, where before it was but to fourteen: secondly, It may be by other persons held; and before, it was the next of kindest not inheritable could have it; now who the father names shall have it.

2. That though neither before nor since this statute a person under age may devise his lands, yet a person under age may, within this act, dispose of the custody of his child, and such disposition draws after it the lands, &c. and incident rights of the custody.

3. That an infant hath the same remedy against a testamentary guardian, as he had against a guardian in focage, to the statute speaks only of remedies for the guardian.

4. If the father being of age devise his lands to J. S., during the minority of his son and heir, in trust for his heir, and for his maintenance and education until he be of age, this is devising the custody within this statute, for he might have done this before the statute.

5. If a man devise the custody of his heir apparent to J. S. and mentions no time, either during his minority, or for any other time, this is a good devise of the custody within the act, if the heir be under fourteen at the death of the father, because by the devise the modus habendi custodiam is changed only as to the person, and left the same as it was to the time, but if above fourteen at the father's death, then the devise of the custody is merely void for the time, and for the act J. S. did not intend every heir should be in custody until one and twenty years, and tandem, sed ne disturbis; therefore he shall be in this custody but so long as the father appoints, and if he appoint no time there is no custody.

6. That this testamentary guardian hath the custody not only of the land defended or by the father, but of all lands and goods any way acquired or purchased by the infant, which the guardian in focage had not.

7. That this guardian can't assign or transfer the guardian ship over to another, neither shall it upon his death go to his executors, administrators, or assigns; for tho' it be an interest, yet it is an interest joined with a trust, and the tefator might think those persons incapable of executing, too he placed that trust and confidence in the guardian himself; but it seems, that if two or more are made guardians, and one of them die, the survivor or survivors shall continue guardians, for from the nature of the thing, the authority must both cease and follow; if also, were it otherwise, the more guardians were appointed for the security of the infant, the less secure he would be, because upon the death of any one of them the guardianship would be at an end.

8. That if a person, appointed guardian pursuant to this statute, die or refuse to take upon himself the guardianship, the Lord Chancellor may appoint a proper guardian.

9. Also if a person appointed guardian pursuant to this statute, becomes a lunatick, or is otherwise incapacitated to execute the trust required in him, or he abuses the trust, by doing any thing prejudicial either to the person of the infant, or his estate, it seems, that the court of Chancery, may either totally remove him, and appoint another guardian, or else impose some terms on him, by obliging him to give security, &c. as will effectually hinder him from doing any thing prejudicial to the infant; but in what particular instances of this kind a court of equity will interpose, does not seem to be clearly agreed.

And note, that both by the 45 & 55 Ph. 3. M. and by this statute, there are express saviings with respect to the city of London and other towns, as to the custody of orphans. 1 Sid. 363.

2. Who may and are entitled to be guardians; by what authority they are appointed, and of restraining and punishing abuses by them.

Here in the first place we must take notice, that there can be no guardian in focage but where lands of that nature descant to the heir. Co. Lit. 88. 2 M. 170.

Therefore if a man die feu feft et alia, or a tenant common, or fuch-like inheritances, which lie not in tenure, (and dispose not of the custody of his child,) the heir may chuse his guardian; if he be so young that he can make no no choice, it is most fit that his next cousin, to whom the inheritance can’t defect, should have the custody of him, and whoever takes the rent, &c, is chargeable in account; but if he have any other land, the fecage guardian shall take the rent-charge, &c, in his custody.

Co. Lit. 87.

So the wife’s heir shall not be in ward during the life of the tenant by the curtesy, because by his continuance of his wife’s estate, the defect to the heir is interrupted.

F. N. B. 143.

For by law, the next of blood, to whom the inheritance can’t defect, is intituled to the guardianship; as if the land descended from the father, the mother, or other next cousin of the mother’s side, shall be guardian in fecage, &c in curtesy, where lands descend from the mother; but the next in law appointed to be the guardian, that is the heir next, which our law fays is committitur even ipsa. Co. Lit. 87.

If the younger brother die seised in tail, leaving issue under fourteen, the elder, or the middle brother, shall be his guardian in fecage, for in equal degree the law prefers him. Co. Lit. 88.

But if tenant in tail have no brother or sister, and die, leaving issue under fourteen, the next cousin of the father’s or mother’s side that first seizes the heir shall have the custody of him; for the relation on both sides is equal, and no cause appears wherefore either should be preferred; and he that first takes care of the heir shows himself to be most concerned for his interest. Co. Lit. 88.

But if donees in frank-marriage die, their issue being under fourteen, the next cousin of the part of the donee that was the cause of the gift (being not inheritable to the donor’s reversion) shall have the custody. Co. Lit. 88.

A. seised of some lands as heir to his father, and of others as heir to his mother, dies, leaving issue under fourteen, the next cousin of either side, that first seizes the heir shall have the custody of him; and the next cousin of the father’s part shall enter into the lands of the mother’s part, &c in curtesy. Co. Lit. 88.4.

If a woman hath issue a son by a former husband, and she marries a second husband, seised of fecage lands, by whom she has issue another son, and the husband and wife die, leaving the said son under fourteen, his brother of the half blood shall be guardian in fecage, as next of kin; and from the inheritance can’t defect. Cro. Eliz. 825. 2 Ad. 171. Mor 635. 2 Jen. 17.

If A. be guardian in fecage of B. under fourteen, he shall be guardian in fecage of another infant whom B. ought to be guardian of, as being his next cousin par cufto de gard, and an account lies against him. Co. Lit. 88.4.

An infant, idiot, lunatick, non comper, one blind and dumb, deaf and dumb, or leper removed, can’t be guardian in fecage. Co. Lit. 88.4.

It is clearly agreed, That the King as pater patriae is universal guardian of all infants, idiots and lunatics, who can’t take care of themselves; and as this cafe can’t be exercised otherwise than by appointing them proper curators or committees; it seems also agreed, that the King may, as he has done, delegate the authority to his Chancellor; and that therefore at this day, the court of Chantery is the only proper court, which hath jurisdiction in appointing and removing guardians, and in preventing them and others from abusing their persons or estates.

2 Inr. 14. 4 Co. 126. Bovary’s cafe, and in Stann. Pr. 37.

And as the court of Chantery is now invested with this authority, hence in every day’s practice we find that cause referred to the right of guardianship, who is the next of kin, and who the most proper guardian; as also orders are made by that court on petition or motion, for the provision of infants during any dispute herein; as likewise guardians removed or compelled to give security; their estates punished for abuse of him to be appointed on in effectual care taken to prevent and abate intended them in their persons or estates; all such wrongs and injuries being reckoned a contempt of that court, that hath by an established jurisdiction the protection of all persons under natural disabilities. 2 Abr. 177.

But it is clear, that the ecclesiastical court hath not and can not refer a cause to a guardian with regard, or ofolitative guardians; and therefore where Sir Henry Wood having devised the guardianship of his daughter, by his will in writing, according to the 12 Car. 2, to the Lady Chiffer his sister; the Dutchess of Cleveland, to whom for this daughter, being about eight years old, was contrived, pretending that Sir Henry Wood by word revoked this disposition of the guardianship, sued in the Prerogative court to have this nuncupative codicil proved; and the court granted a prohibition; for they are not to prove a will concerning the guardianship of a child, which is a thing of a temporal nature, and of which the courts and courts of law have no jurisdiction.

3. Of the time and manner of appointing a guardian; and of the guardian’s interest in the body and lands of the ward, and his remedy for the fame.

The authority of a guardian in chivalry did not determine till the heir, if a male, came to the age of twenty-one years, because it was prefixed, that till that age he was not capable of doing kight-service, and attending his lord in the wars; the guardianship of an heir female deterred the woman to be married at Common law; by W. &c 1. the lord had the wardship till the attained the age of sixteen, to render her conveyable marriage; the authority of a guardian in fecage ceases at the age of fourteen, at which age the infant may call his guardian to an account, and may chuse a new guardian. Lit. fol. 103. Co. Lit. 75. 2 Inr. 125.

If a guardian in fecage die, the guardianship shall go to the next of kin of the infant, to whom the inheritance can’t defect, and shall not go to the executors of the guardian, because they can take nothing but what the testator had to his own use; besides, the law gives the guardianship to fictitious persons as are presumed to have most affection for the infant; and therefore will not intrust executors with it, who may happen to be strangers. Plow. 293. 2 Inr. 260. Co. Lit. 89. S. P.

If a feme infant who is in ward marries, at Common law the guardianship is determined, because the husband is immediately on the marriage become her guardian; and it would be inconsistent that the fhould at the same time be under the power of another guardian. 2 Inr. 260.

If a feme infant in ward marries, the husband becomes guardian in right of his wife; but if she dies the infant goes to her husband, and shall go to the next of kin to the infant. Plow. 294. a. Co. Lit. 89. a. S. P.

A guardian in fecage shall not forfeit his interest by outlawry or attaint of felony or treason, because he hath nothing to his own use, but to the use of the heir. Co. Lit. 88. b. God. 316.

It is said, that in Chantery a guardian can’t be otherwise appointed than by bringing the infant into court, or his praying a commissio to have a guardian affigned.

Aer. Eq. 260. Lloyd and Carew.

Regularly an infant is to sue both at Common law and in Chantery, by his prochein amn or guardians, but he must always be defended by a guardian, who is to be admitted by the court.

Fide. Head of Infants.

The respective courts in which the suitor is commenced, must affign a proper guardian to the infant; and therefore if an infant is sued, the plaintiff must move to have a proper guardian affigned him. Stil. 269. Bridg. 74. 1 Inr. 258. 365.

And as an infant can bring his bill but by prochein amn, so he must take care of it; for if the bill is dismissed, the prochein amn must pay the costs thereof.

Aer. Eq. 75. Andrews and Cradock.

Where 2 bills is brought against an infant (if in town) he obtaining ceases as to him, unless the plaintiff on having a guardian affigned him, by whom he may defend the suit; if in the country, he files out a commissio to affign a guardian, and put in his answer; whether he pleads, antwors or demurs.
demurs, fill it must be done by his guardian; for if it is the plea, answer or demurrer of the defendant, without doing it, the guardian will be irregular.

But where the infant neglects to appear, or to have a guardian assigned, it is a notion of course (he being in contempt to an attachment) to pray for a messenger to bring him into court, and when he is there the court always orders his guardian to appear, in which case this can be done against a peer of the realm who is an infant, and whose person is sacret. 2 Dall. Ali. 661. See Privilege.

As the law hath inviolated guardians not with a bare authority only, but also with an interest till the guardianship ceases; for it provides several remedies for guardians against those who violate that interest: and therefore at Common law there were remedies both extra-territorial and possessory, to recover the guardianship. 2 Inst. 90. 9 Co. 72.

As at Common law there was the writ Dr custodia terræ et heredit.] called the writ of right ward, wherein the guardian recovered the custody of body and lands; but if the ward were married, then the guardian was driven to his action of trespas, quaer intreit mariaginis non fatisfattit; but this was remedied by the statute of Marston, cap. 6, which provides, that in the writ of right ward, there shall be a writ of raviishment of ward, in which the plaintiff recovered the body of the heir, and not damages only. 2 Inst. 90, 430. 9 Co. 72. Hussey's cafe. Hob. 94.

If upon a bonæ ægis an infant be brought into court, and it appears, that the question is touching the right of guardianship, the court cannot deliver the infant to the guardian, for he may have a writ of raviishment of ward. 3 Kel. 446.

What things a guardian may lawfully do, and which shall bind the infant.

From the authority and interest, which the policy of the law has invested guardians with, it appears, that a guardian may do several acts which will bind the infant, such as making leaves for years, which he may do in his own name, and such leaves may maintain ejectment thereupon. 1 Co. Lit. 89, 89. Est. Suits. 123, 124. 1 Inst. 110. 2 Inst. 82, 83. 3 Inst. 129. 3 Stat. 1.

Therefore if a guardian in foage makes leaves for years to continue beyond the time of his guardianship, such leaves seem not to be absolutely void by the infant's coming of age, but only voidable by him, if he thinks fit; for they were not derived but out of the interest of the guardian, or to be measured thereby, but take effect also by virtue of his authority, which for the time was general and absolute; and therefore all lawful acts done during the continuance of that authority are good, and may subsist after the authority itself, by which they were done, is determined; and consequently the infant when he comes of age, may by act of infan., be void, or other act, if he thinks fit, make such leaves good and unavoidable; but a guardian par naturæ cannot make any leaves for years, either in his own name, or in the name of the infant; for he hath only the care of the person and education of the infant, and hath nothing to do with his lands. Bray, Tit. Gard. 70. Tit. Gardin, 19. 2 Rel. Abr. 41. Briflen and Hussey. Gra. Fac. 55, 98. Shipland and Rider.

A. lets lands to B. for four years, and died, and the land being held in foage, and the heir under fourteen, the guardian may recover the sale of the leaf by injunction. 1 Inst. 110. before the first leaf was expired, let the same lands in his own name to B. for eight years; and if by this acceptance of a new leaf from the guardian in foage the first leaf was farrendered, was the question; and 'tis said to be held by the court, as it was farrendered; or if it could not be properly called to be halden, for want of a reverision in Vol. II. No. 82.

the guardian in foage, yet they held, that at first the first leaf was thereby determined by admittance of the lefsee's own, and that the guardian, it is said, which if the first should fland in the way he could not do it in the act. 158, 322. 4 Lem. 7. Owen 45, 56. Willis and Whitehead.

If a woman who is guardian in foage to her for marries again, and then gives up the infant's lands, by a contract upon the infant's lands, and charge upon the infant's lands, and becomes void; for the interest she had in the lands was in right of the infant, and therefore shall not bind her, as those acts shall in which she joins her husband in parting with her own personal property. Plow. 293. O'Herne's case.

A guardian in foage may grant copyhold estates in his own name, and such grants shall bind the heir, for he is dominus pro tempore, and shall take the profits to his own use, though he shall account for them; and he shall keep courts in his own name. Gra. Fac. 55, 99. Poph. 127, 2 Rel. Abr. 49.

Alfo it hath been held, that a guardian in foage may grant copyhold in reversion according to the custom of the manor, and that such grant shall be good; though they come into possession during the non-age of the infant. Mich. 8 W. 3. in C. B. Lade and Barker.

A guardian in his own name any may make partitions in behalf of an infant, if equal; for the principal reason is, that by the law to take care of the inheritance of the infant; and this partition and division of his part from what belongs to another is so far from being a prejudice to the infant, that it is really for his benefit and advantage. 2 Rel. Abr. 52.

As the authority and interest of a guardian extends only to such things as may be for the benefit and advantage of the infant, and whereof he may give an account; on this foundation it is held, that a guardian cannot prefrat to any benefit in right of the heir, because he can make no advantage thereof (for that would be fancy); and consequently has nothing therein whereof he shall account, and therefore the infant himself shall prefrat thereon.

Ca. Lit. 17. b. 89 a. 29 Ed. 3. 5.

But yet a prefratment made by the guardian in the name of the heir, is a good title to the heir in quære impedit. 42 Ed. 3. 130.

In qœcitum the cafe was, that one A. devis'd land to B. his fon in tail, with divers remainder over, and makes one C. overfer of his will, and willed that he should have the education of his fon till he came to twenty-one, and to receive, fez and let for the faid B. the faid land, for giving him, and thereupon to account to the faid B. being allowed his charges, &c. C. makes a leave for seven years in his own name, with refevention of rent to himself, and this leave by computation was to continue half a year after B.'s attaining his full age, and if this leave was good for any part of the term was the qœcitum, C. being dead, and B. not yet of age; and it was argued to be good for the whole term, or at leat during the minority of the fon, and only void for so much as exceeded the full age of the fon, and that C. had an interest in the land, and not a bare authority only; for then al leaves must have been made in the name of the infant, and make such prefrat as he would them whenever he thought fit, which the qœcitator never intended to improper him to do; but Poplam, Clinch and Fenner held, that as this devise is, C. was but a guardian for nurature, and could not make leaves at his own will and pleasure, for then he might make them for a hundred years; but here he can only make leaves at will, for there is no other time certain appointed, and he is but in the nature of a bailiff, and accountable; and therefore it was adjudged that the leave was void; from which cafe it appears, that if the authority had been given without the infant being in full age, or incapable to have made leaves for years, such leaves might be made during the continuance of that authority would not have determined therewith, but should have subsisted during the whole term for which they were made; and the infant in such cafe could not when he came of age have avoided them, as he may leaves made by his guardian in foage, if he thinks fit, be - X x

If a guardian borrows money of A. to pay off an incumbrance on the infant's estate, and promises to give A. security for his money, but dies before it is done, the court will decree him fafhion out of the infant's estate; but if the sum disbursed exceeds the profits of the estate, for so much A. shall have an account as for money due to the guardian, and it shall be raised out of the infant's estate. 6 Co. 480. Harper and Eyler.

A guardian to an infant, having a considerable sum of money in his hands that was raised out of the infant's estate, lays out, with the consent of the grandmother, 300l. in a purchase of lands which lay contiguous to the infant's estate, and takes the purchase in the name of J. S. for his benefit, if he when he came of age he should agree thereto, and allow that money on account; the infant dying in his minority, it was held by my Lord Chancellor, C. B. Atkins and J. Latysche, against the opinion of the Mafter of the Rolls, that th'o' neither the heir nor administrator of the infant were intitled to the lands, yet the guardian muft account for the 300l. for the benefit of the infant; and that it was not in the power of the guardian, without the direction of this court, to turn the personal into real estate, by which it would defend to the heir: and that the objection, that an infant may make a will at seventeen of his personal estate, but not of his real, was not founded. 1 Term. 492. Lord of Herchelfield v. Nerliff.

A mother, as guardian to her infant son, had out of his personal estate paid off a mortgage; the infant afterwards died, and the estate defended to a remote heir, and then the mother would have had back the money; but the court denied her any relief. 2 Term. 93. Zaub and Ld. Co. 492. Lord.

If a guardian puts in an answer to a bill in Chancery for an infant, on oath, such answer shall not conclude the infant, nor be read in evidence against him; for the effect of an infant's answer to a bill in Chancery is to no other purpose than to make proper parties, fo as to have an opportunity to take depositions, and to examine witnesses to prove the matter in question. 2 Term. 325. 1 Show. 89. S. C. Eyden and Petty.

An estate having defended to an infant subject to incumbrances; and the question being, whether a guardian might, without the direction of a court of equity, apply the funds of the infant to discharge the incumbrances, or the interest of them, or whether they should not be accounted personal estate, and fo the administrator of the infant be intitled to them, if the infant died in his minority; it was held by the court, that a guardian, without any direction, may pay the interest of any real incumbrance, and the principal of a mortgage, because that is a direct and immediate charge on the land, but not any other real incumbrance. Ab. Eq. 357. Palmer and Dealey.

And therefore where a widow, who was guardian to her son, received the rents and profits of his estate, and paid off debts by specialty, but took affigments of the bond for the son dying in his minority, he brought his bill against the defendant the heir, for a discovery of affig by defect to satisfy the money due by bond, the claiming the profits as administratrix to his son; and it was held by the court, that the guardian was not compellable to apply the profits of the estate of the infant to pay off the bond debts. 2 Term. 606. Water and Ebrill.

5. Of the infant's remedy against his guardian for abuses: and of obliging a guardian to account, and what allowances be shall have.

At Common law, both a prohibition of waffe, and an action of waffe, lay against a guardian in chivalry and a guardian in foage, for a voluntary, but not for pernicious waffe, or waffe done by a stranger. 1 Ab. 355.

If a guardian suffers another stranger to cut down timber trees, or to protract any of the houses, and doth not, according to his duty and office as guardian, endeavour to keep and preserve the inheritance of the ward in his custody and keeping, and doth not prohibit and withfand the wrong-doer; this shall be taken in law for his consent, according to the rule, Qui non prohibet quod prohibere debet, non habet legitimum suum. And if such waffe and destruction be done without the knowledge of the guardian, or with such force that he could not withfand, then ought the guardian to caufe an affize to be brought against such wrong-doers, by the heir, wherein he shall recover the freehold and damages for such wrong and damage.

And if the heir brings his action of waffe within age, the judgment, according to the statute of Gloucester, cap. 55, shall not only be to recover bawn vofation, but the guardian shall lose the whole wardship, and yield to the heir the fingle damages, if the wardship be not fufficient to fatisfy the damages.

If the guardian doth waffe, and after affigneth over his interest, an action of waffe lieith against the grantor in the tent. 4 Ab. 305.

Also if the wafe be committed to near the time of the infant's coming of age, that he could not conveniently bring an action of waffe during his minority; yet after the determination of the guardian's interest, he may bring an action of waffe, and in such case, as he cannot recover the wardship which is ended, he shall by the statute of Gloucester recover treble damages. 2 Ab. 306.

By 3 Willm. 2. cap. 5. If lyke for years, or guardian also, the remedie of recovering the freehold shall be by affize of novel diffafio, and both the fec-flor and fec-flor shall be esteemed diffesiers, and the survivor of them shall be liable to this remedy. So, if either happens to die, he that survives may be conftrued a diffesier, and as such liable to this action. 2 Ab. 415.

Not only guardians in chivalry, but in foage and life, nor come within this law of Willm. 2. So also their alienations not only in fee, but in tail, or for life, are within the act.

If a guardian accepts of a feoffment from his ward, the ward may bring an affize against him as a diffesier; for the guardian acts contrary to his duty, when he allows any alienation made by his infant; for it is his duty to protect the inheritance of his ward, and to deliver it up to him at full age, and not to bring it into his own family. Bre. Diffafio 95.

If a guardian, after the full age of the heir, continues his estate in the hands of a guardian, and an affize is brought against him, the heir lies against him by the heir; but he cannot be deemed a diffesier, because he does not actually outhe the heir of his freehold, which is required in a diffesier, but holds him out by an intermediate entry between him and his ancestor, which makes the diffesier between an abatement and a feoffment. 3 Willm. 2. 57, 58, 2. Ab. 142.

If an infant appears by guardian, and suffers a recovery, this shall bind him; and one of the reafons hereof is, that if the recovery be to the prejudice of the infant, he has his action against his guardian, and may reimburse himself out of his pocket, to which the law had commiited the care of him. 1 Roll. Abr. 737. But for this see tit. Fine and Recovery.

By the Common law, guardians in foage are accountable to the infant, either when he comes to the age of fourteen years, or at any time after, as he thinks fit. Co. Lit. 87.

But the guardian, on his account, shall have allowance of all reasonable expenses; and if he is robbed of the rents and profits of the land without his default or negligence, he shall be discharged thereof upon his account; for he is in the nature of a bailiff or servant to the infant, and undertakes no otherwife than for his diligence and service. Co. Lit. 87, a.

If a man enters as guardian into the lands of an infant, who has no title to be guardian, 'tis at the election of the infant to make him a diffesier on account of his wrongful entry upon, and actual outher of such infant, or else diffemblle the wrong, and call him to an account as guardian. 1 Roll. Abr. 661. Crew. Cor. 212.

If a guardian takes a bond for the arrears of rent, he thereby makes it his own debt, and shall be charged with it. 2 Chon. Rep. 97. Wall and Buckly.

If a guardian to an infant, whose lands are incumbered to the value of 600L, buys it off with 100L of the infant's money, he shall not charge the infant with the 600L. 2 Chon. 743.

If a person's infancy receives the profits of an infant's estate, and continues to do so for several years after the infant comes of age, before any entry is made on him; yet he shall account for the profits throughout, and not during the infancy only. Apr. Eq. 1741 and Halworthy.

A receiver to the guardian of an infant, who has had his account allowed him by the guardian, shall not be obliged to account over again to the infant when he comes of age. Precod. Chon. 535.

Guilders, Are those who lead flux to the net. 1 Jas. 1. c. 23.

Guilf, A fraternity or company, and comes from the Saxon word gifdan, which is to pay; because every one was gildar, to bear the taxes and contributions of the church, for the charge and support of the company. And from thence come Guild-balls, that is, the halls of the society or fraternity, where they meet and make orders and laws among themselves. The original was thus, uic. It was a law among the Saxons, that every freeman of fourteen years old should find sureties to keep the peace, or be committed to a guard, whereupon several neighbours entered into an association, and became bound for each other, to produce him who committed an offence, or to make satisfaction to the injured party; that they might the better do, they raised a sum of money among themselves, which they put into a common stock; and when one of their pledges had committed an offence, and was fled, then they made satisfaction out of this stock, by the payment of mortuory, according to the quality of the offence. And because this association confiUed of ten families, it was called a Decenary. And from hence came our fraternities. But as to the direct time, when these guilds had their origin in England, there is nothing of certainty to be found, since they were in use long before any formal licences were granted to them for such meetings. Edward the Third, in the 14th year of his reign, granted licence to the men of Canterbury to erect a gild in the charge and support of brethren and sisters, with a master and wardens, and that they might make charties, b-flow alms, do other works of piety, and constitute ordinances touching the same, &c. So Henry the Fourth, in the fourth year of his reign, granted licence to found a gild of the Holy Cross at Greenwich. See Matte c. 21. 37. 2. S. Anon. See Antiquities of Warrick-fairs, fol. 119 & 522. Guild, guild or gold (according to Camden) signifies also a tribute or tax, and the statutes of 27 Ed. 3. flat. 2. cap. 13. and 11 Hen. 7. c. 9. ufed gildable in the same sense with taxable. Guild (according to Gough in his Jurisdiction, fol. 191) signifies an amercement, as fast-gild; and fol. 197. he interprets it to be a prelation within the forein in these words, To be quit of all manner of guilds is to be discharged of all manner of pretensions, to be made for gathering fees of corn, lambs, and wool, to the use of lurgers. The word is also mentioned in the statute 15 Hen. 6. cap. 6. and 15 Car. 2. cap. 6.

Gule of August, (Gula Augusti. WItt. 2. cap. 30. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 10. R. F. B. fol. 62. alias goats de August.) And Ptolemae, (fol. 916. cafe of mines.) Is the day of St. Peter ad Vincula, which was wont to be, and is still celebrated upon the first of August, and probably called the gule of Augustus, from guls, a thief. The reason we have in Dauradis Rationale Dictionar. bk. 7. cap. De factis Sanet Petri ad Vincula, where he faith, that one Quirinus, a Tribune, having a daughter that had a disease in her throat, went to Alexander, then pope of Rome, the sixth from St. Peter, and defined of him to borrow or fee the chains that was chained together with Ners; which request obtained, his fad daughter quickly was cured of her disease, and Quirinus with his family baptized. Tune dicitus Alexander papa, faith Dauradus, bel fipsum in calendis Augusti celebrandum infringit, & in honorem beati Petri ecclesiam in urbe fabricavit, ubi infra vincula repulsit, & Ad vincula nominavit, & calendis Augusti ditelavit. In quo ficturante popularia, igne fuis fuccentibus cheles cineraverunt. So that this day which before was only called the calendis of August, was upon this occasion termed indifferently either from the instrument that wrought the miracle, St. Peter's day ad vincula; or from that part of the maid whereon the miracle was wrought, the Gule of August. g ad pacem in com. praditis confundatur. But that the word (affirma) was omitted. For it ought to have been confundatur, affertationes. And so it does not appear, whether the faid liberties were attaigned to keep the peace or no. The reporter adds a note, that the conviction was before two juflices of peace, but the statute gives au-tority to one juflice alone, being the next juflice of the county where the offence is committed, to commit the offender for the forfeiture, but that here it does not appear whether either of the faid two juflices was the next juflice, which was another exception intended to be moved; but the conviction being qualified for the ex-tection aforefaid, this exception was not moved, and that he was of counsel with the defendant. Vent. 33. Annot. But S. & C. reports, that as to the words (upon due examination and proof before a juflice of peace), it was refolved, that that was not intended by a jury, but by another; and that no write of error lies upon such a conviction: And that an exception was taken, because it was coram f. juflice of the peace, without adding nee ad diversas feloniae, transgressiones, &c. vifinda, affertationes, and that the court agreed it ought fo to be return'd upon exception, to remove indiftments taken at felonies, is otherwise of convictions of this nature; for it is known to the court, that the statute gives them au-tority in this cafe. Vent. 33. Trin. 21 Car. 2. Annot.

Stat. 15 Geo. 2. cap. 32. sect. 1. No person not being a dealer in gunpowder shall keep more than fifty pounds weight, or being a dealer, not more than two hundred pounds weight, longer than twenty-four hours at any time, in the tower, or in the suburbs, or in public places, or in houses or places, of any kind, under the same roof, or by dividing the same, or discharging thereof under different roofs, or in any yard or yards within London and Westminster, or the suburbs thereof, or within three miles of the Tower, or of St. James's, or on the Thanes, except in veils passing or detaining the same, or in bad weather, except carts and other carriages loading or unloading, or passing on the highway; on pain of forfeiting the same, and the value thereof, with full costs to him who shall sue in any court of record at Westminster in thirty days.

Stat. 2. Any justice of the peace within the said limits, on demand by any inhabitant possessing a reasonable cause, may issue his warrant for search in the day-time for dangerous quantities of gunpowder, and break open any place, if there be occasion, and thesearchers may be, and may remove the same in twelve hours out of the said limits, and detain the same till it be determined in the court, in the like manner as before not.

Stat. 3. And persons permitting others to keep gunpowder in any places not belonging to the owners of such gunpowder, shall forfeit one shilling a pound.

Stat. 22 Geo. 2. cap. 38. sect. 1. No person shall keep gunpowder for more than twenty-four hours at any one time in any house or other place, in any city or the suburbs thereof, or in any market town, or within one hundred yards thereof, or within two miles of any of the King's palaces, or one mile of any of the King's magazines; nor shall keep for more than twenty-four hours at any time, a greater quantity than three thousand pounds weight, in any house or other place.

Sel. 2. And any two justices, on demand made, and a reasonable cause assigned by any parli. officer, or two householders inhabiting where it is kept, shall issue thereon, in the day-time any house, shop, or other place, and breaking open the doors thereof; and if upon search, more than four hundred pounds weight or three thousand pounds weight respectively, as above, shall be found, all exceeding the said quantities shall be seized and detained, and forfeited to the said justices, and any person shall for his breakage, or the theft of the same, be liable to the day-time or the day for 50/. by the said justices; which court shall give judgment for recovery of the same, or the value thereof with full costs.

Sel. 3. No perfon shall convey at any one time, in any wagon or other carriage, a greater quantity than two thousand five hundred pounds weight, or five hundred pounds weight, in any one car, in any street or on any river, within one mile of any city or market town: and all such gunpowder shall be carried in covered carts and carriages; and the barrels shall be clofe joined and kept, and fecured that no part thereof be scattered in the pafsage, on pain of being feized and forfeited to the informer, on proof of the offence before two justices.

Sel. 4. Every perfon employed in any flourhouse where gunpowder is kept, or in carrying of gunpowder from one place to another, being convicted before one justice of wilfully committing any act, whereby such gunpowder may be in danger of taking fire, shall forfeit five pounds to the informer, for every hundred pounds weight of gunpowder contained in such flourhouse, or which he shall be employed in conveying, and on non-payment thereof shall be committed to the public gaol, without bail, not exceeding six months.

Sel. 5. But this act shall not extend to any magazine belonging to the Crown, or to hinder the trying of gunpowder by his Majesty's officers; or to the carrying of gunpowder to and from the King's magazines; or with forces in their march; or to any mills already built and used for the making of gunpowder, or to any flourhouses, warehouses, or other offices near or adjoining to such mills.

Sel. 6. The justices in seafons shall, on application to them made, appoint convenient plats of ground, two miles distant from any city or market town, not exceeding two acres, with the use of convenient roads leading thereto, for erecting warehouses for keeping gunpowder in any quantity, first agreeing with the proprietor; and if they cannot agree, the said justices shall issue their warrant to the sheriff to impanel and return a jury, who shall on oath (to be administered by the said justices) inquire into the value of the ground, with the use of convenient roads leading thereto; and all such verdicts and inquisitions shall be kept with the records of the seafons, and be conclusive to all parties; and the said justices may send for persons interested, and examine the parties and witnesses on oath; and the sum to be assessed as aforesaid, not exceeding thirty years purchase, shall be paid to the proprietor; and on such payment, or in case of refusal to accept it, or leaving it with the said justices for the proprietor, the inheritance of the ground, and use of the roads leading thereto, shall be vested in the purchasers and their assigns for the perpurses aforesaid, and not otherwise; and the warehouses to be built thereon, shall be built in such manner as will most effectually render them safe and secure.

HABC COPHAS, Is a writ which lies for the bringing-in of a jury, or so many of them as refuse to come upon the venue faciis, for the trial of a cause brought to illude. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 157. See great diversity of this writ in the table of the Register Judicial, verbo CONFESSION. And the New Book of Entries, verbo ABBOT. Cowell.

HABEC COPUS, Is a writ which a man, indiﬁed of a trefpas before justices of peace, or in a court of franche; and being apprehended for the same, may have out of the King's Bench to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. F. N. B. fol. 230. And the order in this case is, first to procure an escoriis out of the Chanery directed to the said justices, for the removing.
removing the indictment into the King's Bench, and upon that to procure this writ to the sheriff, for the causing his body to be brought at a day, Reg. jud. fel. 81. and divers cafes, wherein this writ is to be used. Cowell.

Wherever a person is restrained of his liberty by being confined in a common gaol, or by a private person, whether it be for a criminal or civil cause, he may regularly by habeas corpus have his body and cause removed to some further jurisdiction, which hath authority to examine the legality of such commitment, and on the return thereof either bail, discharge, or remand the prisoner. Vaug. 136. Bufet's cafe.

The habeas corpus ad faciendum is that which issues in criminal cases, and is derived from a prerogative writ, which the King may issue to any place, as he has a right to be informed of the place and condition of the prisoner, and for what reasons he is confined. It is also in regard to the subject desired his writ of right, that is, such a one as he is entitled to in disfrive jusfritice, and is in nature of a writ of error to examine the legality of the commitment; and therefore commands the day, the cause, and cause of detention to be returned. 2 Inst. 55. 4 Inst. 182. Cors. Jas. 543. 2 Roll. Abr. 69.

The habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum issues only in civil cafes, and lies where a person is confined, and is the law, in inferior jurisdiction; and he may have the cause determined in some superior court, which hath jurisdiction over the matter; in this case the body is to be removed by habeas corpus, but the proceedings must be removed by certiorari. 3 Bat. Abr. 2. If upon this writ a civil action, and also a matter of crime be returned; as if a person be arrested for debt, and also charged with a warrant of a justice of peace for felony. 1. If it appears to the judge or court, that the arrest for debt, or other civil action, is fraudulent, they may remand him. 2. If it be found real, they may commit him to the King's Bench with his caufes, tho' they are cases of the inferior courts, for that court is an officer of the crime as of the civil action; but then in the term the court may take his appearance or bail to the civil action, and remand him, if they see cause, as to the crime to be proceeded on below; but upon the writ ad faciendum & recipiendum, there ought not sillily a matter of crime to be returned, for that belongs to the habeas corpus ad faciendum. 2 Hal. Hisf. P. C. 145. and see Med. 133.

There is likewise a writ of habeas corpus ad respondendum, where a person is confined in gaol for a cause of action accruing within some inferior court; and a third person hath arrested a cause of action against him; in which case he may have his writ in order to charge him in such superior court; for inferior courts being tied down to causes arising within their own jurisdiction, the party would be without remedy, unless allowed to sue him in another court; but it seems, that regularly a person confined in B. B. cannot be removed to the C. B. by this writ, nor vice versa; for in those cases there can be no defect of justice, as these courts have converse as well of local as transitory actions. Dyer 197. a. 249. pl. 84, 296, 307. 1 Med. 235. Syl. Prat. Regijl. 350.

There are also, besides these, other writs of habeas corpus, as habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum & recipiendum, which lies to remove a person to the proper place or county, where he committed some criminal offence. 3 Bat. Abr. 21.

There is also a writ of habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum after a judgment; and on this writ the attorney for the plaintiff must indorse the number roll of the judgment on the back of the writ. Syl. Regil. 331.—Habeas corpus upon a cepi, where the party is taken in execution in the court below. —So upon an attachment out of Chancery, and a cepi returned by the sheriff, the next step is a habeas corpus; for the sheriff having executed the command, he must return the writ of attachment to the body, he cannot carry him out of the county without the King's writ. —There is also a writ of habeas corpus ad satisfaciend?, which is to remove a person in confinement, in order to give his testimony in some court of justice; for which vide Syf. 119, 126, 250. 3 Keh. 51. Comb. 17. 48. A person committing a crime in Barbadoes, and apprehended here, may be sent thither by habeas corpus, and tried. 3 Keh. 560, 566, 568. Warner's cafe. —Also since the habeas corpus ad, a person committing a criminal offence in Ireland being here, may be sent to Ireland, and tried there. 2 Vent. 314. Colonel Landy's Cafe. Also Justices of Goal-delivery may send prisoners by habeas corpus to the Sheriff of their other County, and a precept to the Sheriff of that other County to receive them, namely, for a felony committed in that county, though that county be out of the circuit of the justice that founds them. 2 Heli. Hisf. P. C. 37. — That if any habeas corpus come to receive a prisoner from another gaol, the gaoler is to take notice of the writ, by which he is beth committed at the other gaol, and to inform the court, that if he shall happen to be acquitted, or have his clergy, he may yet be remanded to the former gaol if there be cause. Kelkynge 4. And that if any habeas corpus come to the gaolers to receive a prisoner, that with the prisoner they also certify the cause for which he is held there committed. Kelkynge 4.

1. What courts have jurisdiction of granting the habeas corpus ad faciendum; how far they have a discretionary power in granting or denying it; and of the habeas corpus ad.

2. In what cases, and to what places, it may be granted.

3. Of the manner of suing it out; to whom it is directed; manner of compelling a return, and remedy for a false return.

4. What matters must be returned, together with the body of the party; and where the return shall be deemed certain and sufficient to warrant the commitment.

5. Of suggesting any thing contrary to the return; of amending any defect in the return; and of bailing, discharging or remanding the prisoner.

6. Of the habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum.

1. What courts have jurisdiction of granting the habeas corpus ad faciendum; how far they have a discretionary power in granting or denying it; and of the habeas corpus ad.

It is clear, that both by the Common law, as also by the statute, the courts of Chancery and King's Bench have jurisdiction of awarding this writ of habeas corpus, and that without any privilege in the person for whom it is awarded; but it seems, that by the Common law the court of King's Bench could only have awarded it in term-time, but that the Chancery might have done it as well out of as in term, because that court is always open. 2 Inst. 55. 4 Inst. 200. 2 Adit. 297. 2 Jan. 13, 14, 17.

If the habeas corpus issues out of Chancery, and on the return thereof the Lord Chancellor finds that the party was illegally restrained of his liberty, he may discharge him, or if he finds it doubtful he may bail him; but then it must be to appear in the court of King's Bench, for the Chancellor hath no power in criminal causes; or the Chancellor may commit the party to the Fleet, and in term-time may præpis manibus deliver the record into the King's Bench, together with the body; and thereupon the party to the King's Bench may order to bail, discharge, or commit the prisoner. 2 Hal. Hisf. P. C. 147. 2 Heli. P. C. 114-5.

If the habeas corpus, and also a certiorari be granted, returnable in Chancery, and the cause and body be returned there, they may be sent into the King's Bench; if the body only be returned with his caufes, by habeas corpus into the Chancery, and delivered over into the King's Bench, they may proceed to the determination of the return, and either by procedendo remand him, or grant a certiorari to certify the record afo, and thereupon commit or bafl the prisoner, as there shall be cause. 2 Hal. Hyl. P. C. 147-8.

But the finding an habeas corpus ad satisficendum & rectip- ed if the Chanceller for persons arrested in civil eases, especially being in execution, is neither warrant- eel law nor ancient usage, and particularly for- in the case ofjenry the 2 Hen. 5. cap. 2. as to persons in execution. 2 Hal. Hyl. P.C. 148.

There are several story of persons, or such as have no habeas corpus ad satisficendum could be in Common law if he out of the court of Exchequer or Common Pleas, unless it was in the case of privilege, because these courts are confined to civil causes merely; and therefore unless the party were an attorney, or intitked to the privilege of the court as an officer, &c. upon which there had been fair commensation, by their delaying to bring in these courts, they could not grant a habeas corpus ad satisficendum, to have any other writ of habeas corpus.Dyer 175. b. pl. 26. 2 Leaf. 55. 3 Leon. 18. 4 Leaf. 70. 182. 290. 1 Mod. 235. 2 Vaughan. 155. Carter 231. 2 Vent. 22.

But notwithstanding these opinions, it was holden in Bodle's case, that the court of Common Pleas may issue a habeas corpus ad satisficendum, and that if it appeared on the return thereof that the party was imprisoned and de- signed against law, the court might, th'o' there was no privilege in the case, discharge him; for that to render him would be an act of injustice in the court, and con- tradictory to justice. 4 Vent. 14.

Also by the statute of 16 Car. 1. cap. 10. they have an original jurisdiction to bail, discharge, or commit, upon a habeas corpus for one committed by the Council- Table, as well as the King's Bench, and that altho' there be no privilege for the person committed. 2 Hal. Hyl. P.C. 144.

Also by the habeas corpus act, 31 Car. 2. Any of the said courts in term-time, and any judge of either bench, or baron of the Exchequer, being of the degree of the coat, in the vacation, may award a habeas corpus for any prisoner whatsoever, and on their return direct him to be discharged. And upon the: holograph in the court, it is ordered that the commitment was against law, as being made by one who had no jurisdiction of the cause; or for a matter for which no man ought by law to be troubled; or bail him, if it shall be doubtful whether the commitment were legal or not; or remand him, according to the nature and circumstances of the case. 2 Vent. 14. 17.

Notwithstanding the writ of habeas corpus be a writ of right, and what the subject is intituled to, yet the prov- ision of the law herein being in a great measure enfrusted by the judges being only enabled to award it in term- time, as also by an imagined notion in the judges, that they are the superior power of great things, and acting but especially by the act and conscience of officers, to whom it was directed, who used great delays in making any return to it. 4 Leaf. 290. 3 Balf. 27.

By the 31 Car. 2. cap. 2. commonly called the habeas corpus act, reciting, "That great delays had been used by sheriffs, gaolers and other officers, to whose custo- dy the King's subjects had been committed for criminal or supposed criminal matters, in making return of writs of habeas corpus, by standing out an alias & praries, and sometimes more, and by other shifles, to avoid their yielding obedience to such writs, contrary to their duty, and the known laws of the land, whereby many subjects had been detained in prison in such cases where by law they were bailable." Therefore it be enacted, "That whenever any person shall bring any habeas corpus, di- rected to any person whatsoever, for any person in his custody, and the said writ shall be directed on the said of- ficer, sheriff, gaoler, or any other person upon commission of officers, under keepers, or deputy of the said officers or keepers, that the said officer or officers, his or their un- der officers, under keepers or deputies, shall within three days after such service thereof, (unless the commitment were for treason or felony, plainly and specially expres- sed) be required to render an account of the charges of the offices, or render the charges of bringing the said prisoner, to be aterstated by the judge or court that awarded the same, and indorsed on the said writ, not exceeding 12. per- mile, and, on forfeiture given by his own bond to pay the charges of the office, and fees as aforesaid, and that he will not, in any way, make return of such writ, and bring or cause to be brought the body of the party so committed or re- tained, unto or before the Lord Chancellor or the Lord- keeper, or the Judges or Barons of the court from which the commitment is made, by reason of any thing whatever, other than by the legal order and process of their proper and lawful superiors, or such as shall appear, or other court having jurisdiction of the cause, on pain of 500l. And
And it is hereby further enacted, sect. 7. "That if any person, who shall be committed for treason or felony, plainly and specially expressed in the warrant of commitment, upon his prayer or petition in open court the first week of the term, or the first day of the sessions of the court, or general gaol-delivery, to be brought to his trial, shall not be indicted some time in the next term, feions of oyer and terminer, or general gaol-delivery, after such commitment, the justices of the said court shall, upon motion in open court, the last day of the term or feions, for liberty the prisoner upon bail, unless it appear upon oath, that the witnesses for the King could not be produced the same term; and if such prisoner upon his prayer, &c., shall not be indicted and tried the second term or feions, he shall be discharged from his imprison-ment.

Provided, sect. 8. "That nothing in this act shall extend to discharge out of prison any person charged in debt, or other action, or with proceeds in any civil cause, but that after he shall be discharged of his imprisonment for such his criminal offence, he shall be kept in custody according to law for such other term.

And it is further enacted, sect. 10. That it shall be lawful for any person as aforesaid, to move and obtain his habeas corpus, as well out of the Chancery or Exchequer, as the King's Bench or Common Pleas; and if the said Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, or any judge or judges, baron or barons, for the time being, of the de-etermination of any of the said habeas corpus to the vacation-time, upon view of the copy of a warrant of commitment or detainery, or on oath made that such copy was denied, shall deny any writ of habeas corpus by this act required to be granted, being moved for as aforesaid, they shall severally forfeit to the party grieved the sum of 50l.

It is provided, sect. 18. "That after the affizes pro-claimed for that county where the prisoner is detained, no perfon shall be removed from the common gaol upon any habeas corpus granted in pursuance of this act, but upon such habeas corpus shall be brought before the judge of affizes in open court, whereon thereupon shall do what to justice shall appertain.

But it is provided, sect. 19. "That after the affizes are ended, any person detained may have his habeas corpus, according to the direction of this act."

Sect. 3. "Assisted and subjoined to two wittifers! One wittiness, with an affidavit that the other is fufficient.

Sect. 7. The first week of the term] A person need not enter his prayer the first week, if there be an act of para-liament which forbids the habeas corpus act; and takes away the power of bailing for a time. 1 Salk. 103. — The grand feisions of Wales is in nature of a term; so that the party entering his prayer there on the want of profession for a term, B. R. may bail him. Com. 6.

Sect. 10. In the vacation time] And therefore this statute makes the judges liable to an action at the suit of the party grieved in one case only, which is the refusing to award a habeas corpus in vacation-time, but leaves it to their discretion, in all other cases, to pursue its directions in the same manner as they ought to execute all other laws, without making them subject to the action of the party, or to any other express penalty or forfeiture. 2 How. P. C. 92.

In the construction of this statute it was held by two judges, in the absence of one, contrary to the opinion of the other, that persons committed by rule of court are not intitled to the benefit of this act; and that none are intitled to make their prayer but such as are com-mitted by a warrant of a justice of peace, or secretary of State, and not those committed by rule of court, for that is not within the meaning of the act, which speaks of a commitment by warrant. 2. In what cases, and to what places, it may be granted.

A habeas corpus is a writ of right, which the subject may demand, and is the most usual remedy by which a man is restored again to his liberty, if he hath been against law deprived of it. Vaugh. 136.

By the 31 Car. 2, cap. 2. sect. 9, it is enacted, "That if any officer of this realm shall be committed to any prison, or in case of any other commitment before for any criminal or supposed criminal matter, that the said person shall not be removed from the said prison and custody into the custody of any other officer or officers, unless he be by habeas corpus, or some other legal writ; or where the prisoner is delivered to the contrary, or other inferior officer, to carry him to some other common gaol, or where any person is sent by order of any judge of assizes, or justice of the peace, to any common workhouse or house of correction; or where the pris-oner is removed from one prison or place to another within the same county, in order to a trial or discharge by due course of law; or in case of judicious fire or infection, or other necessity; upon pain, that he who makes out, signs or countersigns, or obeys or executes such warrants, shall forfeit to the party grieved one hundred pounds for the first offence, two hundred pounds for the second offence, and imprisonment for life for a third offence."

If a party be imprisoned against law, tho' he is intitled to a habeas corpus, yet may he have an action of false imprison-ment, in which he shall recover damages in propor-tion to the injury done him. But it was held in Balford's case, (which together with the other juror appointed to try an indictment for a riot between the King and Peas and Masts, were fined at the Old Bailey, because they found a verdict contra pronom evidendam et dirigendum eam in materia legit; and for nonpayment of the fine, of three dollars) that the constable, who brought their habeas corpus in C. B. and the imprisonment held illegal, (in several conferences with all the judges,) that yet no action lay against the commis-sioners, because they acting as judges and commissioeners of oyer and terminer, can no more be punished for an erroneous commitment, than a jury before a jury under infe-cese judgment; and the highest remedy the party in that case can have is a writ of habeas corpus. 1 Mod. 119. 3 Kee. 322, 358. If a husband confine his wife, she may have a habeas corpus; but the judges on the return of it, cannot re-move the wife from her husband. 2 Lev. 126.

Ab. 11. Hill. 25 & 26 Cor. 2. in B. R. Salmon ver. Slade.

Where a commitment is in court to a proper officer there present, there is no warrant of commitment; and therefore to a habeas corpus he cannot return a warrant in his own name, but must return the truth of the whole matter, under peril of an oath, & if he be committed to one that is not an officer, there must be a warrant in writing, and where there is one, it must be returned; for otherwise it would be in the power of the gaoler to alter the case of the prisoner, and make it either better or worse, at his pleasure, without the warrant.

When the writ of habeas corpus, the writ of security, and the writ of prohibition are brought in with the body of the officer, & the same committed to one who is not a proper officer, there must be a warrant in writing, & the proper officer to alter the case of the prisoner.

3. As a gaoler, &c. is obliged to bring up the prisoner as the day prefixed by the writ, it is no excuse for not obeying a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, that the prisoner did not render the fees due to the gaoler; nor yet is the warrant of such tender an excuse for not obeying a writ of habeas corpus ad res bodem & ad captandum, but if the gaoler brings up the prisoner by virtue of such habeas corpus, the court will not turn him over till the gaoler be paid all his fees. 2 Cal. 178. March 89. 1 Keb. 272. 280. 2 Smur. 172.

For a false return there is regularly no remedy against the officer, but an action on the case at the suit of the party returned, for an information or indictment at the suit of the King. 6 Med. 40. 1 Salt. 349. But no action lies until the return is filed. 1 Salt. 352.

Upon this return, Archer declared his opinion to be, That he should not be remanded, but give his own recognition to appear in court the next term, to answer any thing that should be alleged against him; but Vaughan and Tysell were for his absolute discharge; for seeing by the return it did not appear there was any case for his commitment, they thought they had no reason to require a recognition of him. Thereupon Wall moved, that he could not be discharged, the case being two for it. But Archer replied, that it had been several times ruled, that where there were three opinions, that was taken to be a point of law, or a question of the judges for it; and accordingly Rudyard was discharged. Vaughan and Tysell made another objection to the return, viz. that they should have expressed the sum in which they required him to give security, (which they had not done;) for they said that those perform, that might be willing to be bound for him in 40 l. might not be willing to be bound for him in 100 l. &c. But as to this it was said, that yard had refused absolutely to give any security, and therefore it was no purpose to tell him of the sum; if he had confented to give security, then the judges ought to have told him the sum. If true, and any defect in the return; and of ballots, discharge, or remanding the prisoner. It seems to be agreed, that no one can in any case controvert the truth of the return to a habeas corpus, or plead or suggest any matter repugnant to it; yet it hath been holden, that a man may confenate and avoid such a return by admitting the truth of the matters contained in it, and suggesting others not repugnant, which take off the effect of the return. 5 Cr. 63. 5 Cor. 71. 6. 2 How. P. C. 113.

Upon a habeas corpus it was returned, that Swellow, a citizen of London, was fined for alderman, and was committed for his fine by the judgment of the court in London. Swellow alleged, that he was an officer of the mint, and by an ancient charter of privilege granted to the minter of moneyers, he ought to be exempted. It was at first doubted whether he might not plead this to the return, it being a matter conformable with it. Upon the statute 17. 2, it is held the parties may come in and plead, and do upon 5 Eliz. But here there is a difference; for he might have pleaded this in the court below, but not that is paff, and here is a judgment and execution. Another day Swellow brought into court a writ of privilege upon that charter, and the recorder prayed that it might not be allowed against the ancient customs of the city; for if such a way might exempt men, they should have little otherwise of that, which privilege they may be supposed to be sufficient for, and it appears he has an office of necessary attendance elsewhere, which makes the privilege reasonable; the King may by his charter exempt from duities, if there be enough besides, much more here; and if there be not sufficient besides, upon the plea of privilege they may be supposed to be sufficient; and Swellow may be discharged by this court now as well as he could at first, or as if he had taken upon him the aldermanship. This court is supreme and mandatory in such cases. And he was accordingly discharged. P. D. 9. 3. Sir R. Swellow's case, 1 Sis. 257. 2 Eliz. 54, 55.

Afo the court will sometimes examine by affidavit the circumstances of a fact, on which a prisoner brought before them by an habeas corpus hath been indicted, in order to inform themselves, on an examination of the whole of the matter to which the prisoner is to be returned not: And accordingly here, where one Jackson, who had been indicted for piracy before the seises of Admiralty on a malicious prosecution, brought his habeas corpus in the said court, in order to be discharged or bailed, the court examined the whole circumstances of the fact by affidavits; upon which it was thought, that the prosecution himself, if any one, was guilty, and carried on the prosecution to feign himself: And thereupon the court, in consideration of the unreasonable and the uncertainty of the time when another seises of Admiralty might be holden, admitted the saidJackson to bail, and committed the prisoner till he should find ball to answer the facts contained in the affidavits.

It seems, that before the return filed, any defect in form, or the want of an averment of a matter of fact may be amended; but this must be at the peril of the officers, in the same manner as if the return were originally about what it is after the amendment. 1 Med. 102, 103.

But after the return is filed it becomes a record of the court, and cannot be amended. 1 Med. 102, 103.

So after a rule to have the return filed; as where a habeas corpus, alias & pluris was directed to Sir Richard, mayor of London, to have the body of Bridget, daughter and heir of Sir Thomas Hyde, deceased; and upon the pluris he returned good temporary receptions, bonus brevis nec usque usque poena sei juxta infra efi/uidum, and the counsel of the lord mayor expounded that return to the judge, that they, after the return had been amended, were not contained in custody present per breve juxta eos. If per ear this is an insufficient return, for he ought to say not only the temporary receptions, bonus brevis, sed alius/uis, upon return of a pluris. Then a question was, if the return could be amended; for though a rule was made that the return should be filed, yet this was not actually done; but per ear, this is filed by the rule of the court, and after cannot be amended; and this return the court held to be equivocal; for it is well enough known that she is not detained in ferris; but though the liberty of the house, if she cannot go out of the house, or of the keeper, she is within his custody; and the court shall adjudge what sort of custody is intended by the writ. Hilt. 26 & 27 Car. 2. in B. R. Emerson v. Sir Robert Viners. 2 Lev. 128. 3 Keb. 434. 447. S. C. 3 Med. 164. S. C. cited.

Upon the return of the habeas corpus the prisoner is regularly to be discharged, bailed or remanded; but if it be doubtful which the court ought to do, it is said that the prisoner may be bailed to appear de die in diem till the matter is determined. 5 Med. 22. Sty. 16.

By the petition of right, or 17 Car. 1. cap. 10. the court mufi within three days after the return of the habeas corpus either discharge, bail or remand the prisoner. But it seems that if a commitment by the court of King's Bench to the Marshalsea is a remanding, being an imprisonment within the statute. 5 Med. 22. 3 Bost. Abr. 14.

Also it hath been ruled, that the court of King's Bench may, after the return of the habeas corpus is filed, remand the prisoner, whether it be reasonable to bail him or not; and order him to be brought up from time to time, till they shall have determined whether it is proper to bail, discharge, or remand him absolutely. 1 Vent. 330.

And tho' in doubtful cases the court is to bail or discharge the party on the return of the habeas corpus; yet if a person be convicted, and the conviction on the return of the habeas corpus appears only defective in point of form, form, it is at the election of the court either to discharge the party, or oblige him to bring his writ of error.

If on the return of the habeas corpus it appears that the contenf relates to the right of guardianship, tho' the court will not determine that point, yet will it set the infant at liberty, fo as to let him choose where he will go till he can come of age. If, however, the abufe, will order him into such hands as will take effectual care of him. 3 Scb. 526. 2 Lev. 128. Sra. 982.

6. Of the habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum.

The habeas corpus ad faciendum is used only in civil causes, and lies for removing suits out of an inferior to some superior court, at the application of the defendant, who may imagine himself injured by the proceedings of such inferior court. 1 Med. 235. 2 Med. 178.

This writ fugends the power of the court below; so that if they proceed after, the proceedings are void, and coram non judice. 1 Sal. 352.

By this writ, the proceedings in the inferior court are at an end, for the perfon of the defendant being removed to the superior court, they have lost their jurisdiction to the contrary effect. The proceedings in the inferior court are de nouo, and bail de novo must be put in the superior court. Skin. 244.

And ahito' this writ be a writ of right, yet where it is to abate a rightfull suit, the court may refuse it; as where an action of debt was brought against a feme folo, and the court found for her, but at a date. The courts held the writ of habeas corpus to B. R. where she pleaded her coverture in abatement; and the court held, that if this matter had been moved on the return of the habeas corpus, they would have granted a praesumenda; but that now the plea in abatement was made too late, and that there were any danger of de novo, and the court takes not notice of the proceedings below, or of what preceded the habeas corpus. 1 Sal. 8. Hatherington v. Reynold.

After an interlocutory, and before final judgment in an inferior court, a habeas corpus cum causis was brought; before the return of the writ the defendant died, and a procedendo was awarded; because by the 8 & 9 W. 3, cap. 11. the plaintiff may have a fere facias against the executors, and proceed to judgment, which he cannot have in another court; and by this means he would be deprived of the effect of his judgment, which would be undue.

3. Sal. 357.

If an action be brought in London for calling a woman a whore, this cannot be removed by habeas corpus, because the words are not actionable elsewhere; and if allowed to be removed, the suit would be destroyed. 2 Rol. Abr. 69, and see Carth. 75. See 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Habeas Corpus.

Baldenium. Is a word of form in a deed or conveyance.

Every conveyance must have two principal parts, viz. the premifes and the habendum. The office of the premifes is, to exprefs the names of grantor, grantee, and the thing granted. The office of the habendum is, to limit the estate, so that the general implication of the estate, which, by the use of the word, is included in the premises, is by the habendum controlled and qualified. As in a lease to two perfon's, habendum to the one for life, the remainder to the other for life, this alters the general implication of the joint-tenancy in the freehold, which should pass by the premises, if the habendum were not. 1 Sal. 357.

The office of the habendum is to limit the certainty and extent of the estate to the freeholder or grantee, for the habendum need not repeat the thing granted; 'tis sufficient if it be named in the premises, because it is the premises that makes the gift, and the word habendum does of its own nature determine the thing conveyed. 2 Rol. Abr. 65. 2 Ca. 55 a. 9. Co. 47.

Of the habendum there are these things observablc: 1. That the habendum can't pass any thing that is not expressly mentioned or contained by implication in the premises of the deed; because the premises being part of the deed by which the thing is granted, and consequently that makes the gift, it follows that the habendum, which only limits the certainty and extent of the estate in the thing given, can't increase or multiply the gift, because it were absurd to say, that the grantee should hold a thing which was never given him. 2 Rol. Abr. 65.

2. If a man grant by habendum to another man, the habendum then is to fix on the grantee as if it were a freehold. This by the common law, as also by the statute of 25 Geo. II, the word habendum to another man, only the manor granted in the premisls will pass. 2 Rol. Abr. 65.

But if a private person grants a manor, habendum unam cun advocationes, which belongs to the manor, this is a good conveyance in the adfeor, because it was impliedly given by the gift of the manor itself. 2 Rol. Abr. 65.

The habendum may alter or abridge the gift in the premisls; and here it is regularly true, that the habendum, that is repugnant and contrary to the premisls, and shall be rejected; because the rule in the interpretation of all deeds is, that all grants shall be taken most strongly against the grantor; and therefore he shall not be allowed, by any subjunctive part of the deed, to contradif or retract that gift which he made in the premisls; as if a man gives lands to J. S. and his heirs, and grants the habendum for life, this is a void habendum, because repugnant to the premisls. 2 Gs. 23 Balden's cafe.

But for the better explication of this rule, it will be necessary further to consider it under these exceptions:

1. That if no express eftate be given in the premisls, as if a rent or any other vestry be given in the premisls to J. S. this creates an eftate for life in J. S. by the habendum, that is repugnant and contrary to the premisls; and shall be rejected; because the rule in the interpretation of all deeds is, that all grants shall be taken most strongly against the grantor; and therefore he shall not be allowed, by any subjunctive part of the deed, to contradict or retract that gift which he made in the premisls; as if a man gives lands to J. S. and his heirs, and grants the habendum for life, this is a void habendum, because repugnant to the premisls. 2 Gs. 23 Balden's cafe.

But upon the face of the deed it evidently appears, that the rent was given but for a determinate number of years, or only at the will of the grantor, there the law will never create an estate against the express provision of the parties, or permit J. S. to enjoy the rents beyond the period of time expressly limited in the deed. Hoh. 170. Co. Lit. 183. 2 Co. 24. a. 55. 2 Rol. Abr. 65, 66. Cres. Elia. 254. 8 Co. 154.

So the habendum may frustrate and controul the estate by implication in the premisls, that the estate implied by the habendum be void itself, thus if a deed of feufofent be made, and the lands given generally in the premisls, habendum to the feufofent and his heirs, after the death of the feufofent, the implied estate for life shall not pass by the premisls, because it is evidently the intention of the deed, that no estate shall pass till after the death of the feufofent, and the limitation in the habendum is void; because the livery can't pass the feufofent in future, for that would create an uncertainty of the feufofent, and others would be at a lofs against whom to bring their preciss, as is before observed. Cres. Elia. 254. Hogg and Crish. Hoh. 171. 2 Roll. Abr. 69. 2 Co. 55. Buckler's cafe. Mor. pl. 591. Cres. Elia. 451. 585. See Mor. 881. cent.

2. If to the perfecution a limited estate in the premisls there be a ceremony necessary, which is not required to pass the estate in the habitum; then if the ceremony be not performed, so carry the estate in the premisls, the habendum shall fail, tho' it be repugnant to the premisls; as if a man covenant, grants, demifus, and to farm lets land to A. and B. and the heirs of B. habendum to A. and B. for three hundred years, this is but a term of years in A. and B. tho' there be words of inheritance; for it was plainly the intention of the lefser to create an estate for these years, and to give the land to the heirs of his demifs; besides, it is evident that the lesseis by the premisls could have but an estate at will, as the words of inheritance in the premisls were not sufficient to
Harry the freehold without livery, which was not made in this case, and consequently the habendum does not really contraddle but enhance the premises. Thus my Lord Coke found in this case, that if livery had been made, only a term for years should have paifed; because that the words of demising and covenants in the deed plainly discover the intention of the parties to create a term; but querue of this, because there are words of inheritance in the premises; and therefore the premises are to be taken most strongly against the grantor. 2 Co. 23, 24. Baldinon's case. 1 And. 223.

But though the habendum can't retract the gift in the premises, yet it may confine and explain in what fenfe the words in the premises shall be taken; and it is upon a principle, that if the intent of the parties must be collected; therefore if lands be given to a man and his heirs, habendum to him and the heirs of his body, this is but an effate-tail; because the habendum only expounds the general word heir in the premises; and each explication is confident, and does not define the operation of the words mentioned in the premises, but only explains in what fenfe they are to be taken, and what heirs are comprehended. 8 Co. 154, 5. Co. Lit. 21, 4. Lit. Rep. 345.

A prebend demifed land, of which he was feised in right of his church to J. S. and his heirs, habendum to him and his heirs for three lives, and to be a good lead and his further interest; because the habendum explains in what fenfe, and to what purpose the word heirs was used in the premises, viz. to create a special occupancy in the leffe; for if the demife had only to J. S. habendum for three lives without injuring the word heirs, any finder upon the death of J. S. might have entered and held the land as a general occupant, during the lives of the Cyffhj que vitis; therefore the heirs of the leffe fhall enjoy the land, because they are mentioned in the premises; but the habendum explains in what manner they fhal] enjoy it, and that is as special occupants during the three lives. 2 Jon. 4. Polifworth and Dezz. 2 Ed. 865. S. C.

But it has been held, where a husband was feised in lead of right in his wife for her life, and they both by deed of feoffment conveyed the land to J. S. and his heirs, habendum to him and his heirs, to the ufe of him and his heirs for the life of the wife, that the whole fee simple paifed to J. S. and fo was a forerocle of the effate-tail; because there ought to be a femple conveyed to J. S. by the liberty, and the premises and habendum of the deed, the words of refeifion for the life of the wife refer only, to the limitation of the ufe, and consequently the fee simple remains in the feoffee; whereas in the former case, the conveyance relates only to the ufe of land; and therefore the revocation in the habendum must relate to that or be void, which is never admitted where they are only explanatory, and not repugnant. Cro. Ern. 141.

Piers and Hoc. So of a rent; as if the grant had been to J. S. and his heirs, executors and assignees, habendum to him and his heirs, executors and assignees, for or during the life of J. F. N. this is a good habendum, and the leffe has only an effate for life; for the habendum does not defeat, but explain the operation and ufe of the word heirs in the premises; for as this case flands upon the death of J. S. his heirs fhall enjoy the rent during the life of J. F. N. as special occupants; whereas if the rent had been granted only to J. S. for the life of J. N. it would have determined upon the death of J. S. because there can be no general occupant of a rent; and the heirs of J. S. could not take, because not named in the grant. Mor 856. 2 Rol. Ab. 66, Willkins and Parroti. 1 Ernou. 19, 113. 2 Blufb. 135.

But if the grant had been to him and his heirs, habendum to him for his life, and the lives of three others, this is likewise a good habendum, because it does not render the word heirs in the premises ufefuls, but expounds them only to create a special occupancy, and thereby to prevent the determination of the effate by the death of the grantor. 1 Blufb. 135, 136. Bowes and Parr. Co. Jf, 282.

But if the grant in the premises be of a rent to a man and his heirs, habendum for the life of the granteor, this is a void habendum, because it totally defeats the operation of the word heirs in the premises, and consequently is repugnant, and not explainatory, and therefore void. 2 Co. 23, 24.

If a man makes a feoffment in fee in 20 acres to A. and assigns the same to B. and the other moiety to A., and the other moiety to B. this is good; and the habendum makes them tenants in common for though the premises be joint, and therefore of themselves would operate to give a joint efate and possession, yet the habendum explaining the manner of possifling is not inconftient or repugnant, because it makes no division of that undivided poiflion which was given in the premises. Co, Lit. 190, b. 183, 6. Hob. 172.

But if the habendum had limited 10 acres to A. and the other 10 acres to B. this had been void, because the habendum, in this case, contradiles, and is repugnant to the premises; for if the premises, the entire and undivided poiflion of the whole twenty acres is equally given to both; and therefore the habendum that excludes A. out of his share of ten acres, and B. out of his share of ten acres, is contradictory to the premises, and therefore void. Hob. 172.

And if the lease be for two, habendum to one for life, remainder to the other for life, this is a good habendum, because it explains the design of the gift in the premises, and thefe that they Shall take the whole in fuccifion one after the other. Co. Lit. 183, 190. 2 Co. 55. Rol. Atr. 65.

So a lease for the mother and fon, habendum ris pro term Hungers erius & alterius erius dianus vivunt, jufcifove tur erius jufcifove diebus vivent, this is a void habendum, and neither B. nor C. can take any thing; not as leifes in poiflion, because not parties to the deed; and therefore the mother was adjudged to be agent for his wife, the remainder to the son. Dyer 361. 1 Bult. 145.

But a demise to A. habendum to him, B. and C. pro termo uiue & alterius uiue jufcifove diebus vivent, this is a void habendum, and neither B. nor C. can take any thing; but as leises in poiflion, because not parties to the deed, or named in the premises; nor by way of remainder, because they can't take jointly in remainder, the limitation being to them jufcifove; nor can they take in fuccifion one after the other, because non conflit of the deed who Shall take ftrike, because they are to take one after another, as they are named in the deed; and therefore the mother was adjudged to be agent for his wife, the remainder to the son. Dyer 361. 1 Bult. 145.

And a demise to A. habendum to him, B. and C. for their lives, provisionally it is covenanted and granted, that C. Shall not enjoy the land during the life of B. and that D. shall not enjoy the land during the life of C. this is but a collateral covenant, which shall not alter the nature of the estate given by the premises which create the gift. Gra. Erna. 89, 107. Mor 267. 1 Leon. 217.

A made a lease for three lives, and after grants the yevention to J. S. habendum to him for life, which laid estate for life to begin after the death of the three first heirs; this is a good grant of the yevention to J. S. during his life to commence immediately; for though the habendum, as it is already observed, may totally control any implicit or express words, and this grant given by implication of law, yet in this case there was an express estate given for the life of the grantee, and no subsequent words shall defeat that estate which was complete and express by the former part of the deed; and therefore the subsequent words which would limit the estate to commence in future, are void because the latter grant cannot be granted for instance, that grant was already observed. 2 Rol. Ab. 66. Hob. 171, Mor 881. Underhur and Underhay. Co. Erna. 209, ill reported.

A termor for years, reeding by indenture his term and estate, grants all his term, estate and interest to another, with the use and occupation of affigns, for a term of the grantor; this was held a void habendum, because by the grant in the premises, the whole interest...

was absolutely conveyed; and therefore the habendum which retains the grant is void; for it may happen that the grantor may deliberate the term, and then the habedandum defects, and is repugnant to the grant. 2 Dyer 272.
Littly and Hynas, 2, ed. aty. 65. 1717. Cr. Eliz. 255.

A makes a lease for three lives of lands, and, after demento to f. 8, for ten years the reversion of the land, habendum the said lands from Michaelmas next enveloping, after the death of the issue for lives; this is a good demise to f. 8, because the word reverent, including not only the intent or estate which A had dependingly transferred to the heirs, but the estate which A is left, returning after the determination of the particular ef-tate, the habendum which explains in what sense the word habendum is to be taken, full hand; and therefore in this case f. 8, f. 80 was adjudged to have a term for years in the land, to commence upon the determination of the freehold. 1 Peth. 1637, 18, 165. Barcop. Ass. 1717.

Every pedlar, &c. to travelling, upon receiving his licence shall pay unto such persons as the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury shall appoint to be commissioners for licencing hawkers, pedlars and petty chapman, not exceeding three, or any person deputed by them, one moiety of the duty, and give security by bond, with one surety to be taken in his Majesty's name, for the payment of the other moiety at the end of six calendar months, unless the party shall choose to pay down the other moiety; in which case he shall be allowed 2 l. in order of prompt payment.

Sel. 3. If any such hawkers, &c. be found trading without licence, such person shall forfeit 2 l. one moiety to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish; and if any person so trading, upon demand made by any justice of peace, mayor, constable or other officer of the peace, any town corporate or borough where he shall so trade, shall refuse to produce his licence, he shall forfeit 5 l. to the churchwardens of the parish, to the use of the poor, and for nonpayment shall suffer as a vagrant, and be committed to the house of correction.

Sel. 4. The commissioners, or any two of them, are required upon their oaths aforesaid to grant a licence to every hawk, &c. for which licence the person shall only pay 1 l. unless such hawk, &c. shall travel with horse or other beast, and in that case there shall be paid 2 l. over and above the duties; and the commissioners shall keep a distinct account of the duties, and pay the money into his Majesty's Exchequer upon Wednesday in every week (unless a holy day) and then on the day after, and upon neglect of the same shall incur the penalties as other the officers of the Exchequer.

Sel. 5. If any person shall forge any licence, or travel with such forged licence, such person shall forfeit 50 l. one moiety to the King, and the other moiety to him that shall sue for the same, to be recovered in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, and shall be subj ect to such other penalties as for forgery.

Sel. 6. Any person sued for putting in execution this act, may plead the general issue Not guilty; and if the plaintiff be nonsuit, &c. such defendant shall have treble costs.

Sel. 7. If any confable or other officer shall neglect to be assiduous in the execution of this act, being required, and being thereof convicted by the oath of one witnesses before any justice of peace, he shall forfeit 40 l. to be levied by different fines of goods by warrant of such justice; the one moiety to the poor of the parish, and the other moiety to the informer.

Sect. 8. It shall be lawful for any person to seize any such hawkers, &c., till he produce a licence, or if he be trading without a licence, for such time as he may give notice to the confable or some parish officer to carry such person before a justice of peace; which justice is required, either upon confession of the party or proof by witness, that the person had so traded, and that the licence shall be produced before the justice, by warrant to cause the said 2d. to be levied by diffrents and sale of goods.

Sect. 9. This act shall not prohibit any person from selling acts of parliament, forms of prayer, proclamations, gazettes, licensed almanacks, or other printed pa-ers licensed, or from selling act or making, by order or under the order, of masters of goods within the kingdom, or their children, apprentices, agents or servants, from carrying or selling the goods of their own making; nor any tinkers, cooper, coopers, glaziers, plumbers, hawkers menders or other persons usually trading in mending kettles, tubs, household goods or hawkers, from going about and carrying mat-ials for mending the same.

Sect. 10. There shall be kept in his Majesty's Exchequer in the office of the auditor of receipts one book, in which all monies paid by virtue of this act shall be entered.

Sect. 11. If any officer in the Exchequer shall misapply any of the monies, such officer shall forfeit his office, and be incapable of any place of trust, and shall pay the treble value of any sums so misapplied to the persons grievances, their executors, administrators or assigns, who will sue for the same in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, where no effon, &c., privilege of parliament, or other privilege shall be allowed.

Sect. 12. Nothing herein shall hinder any person from selling goods in any public mart, market or fair.

Sect. 13. It shall be lawful for the commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, out of the money paid by this act, to pay to the commissioners, to the clerks or other persons, such sums of money as they may desire for their service.

Sect. 15. This act shall not extend to give power for the licensing of any hawkers, &c., to sell any wares in any city, borough, town or corporate market, otherwise than might have been done before.

Stat. 3 Ann. cap. 4. fett. 4. Every person who being actually trading as a hawker, &c., shall not upon demand have his licence ready, shall forfeit as if he had traded without a licence; and in case any person shall lend his licence, the peron lending, and the person trading under our colour of the same, shall either of them forfeit 40 l. one moteiy to the Queen, and the other moteiy to him that shall sue for the same in any of her Majesty's courts of record.

Sect. 14. Persons trading in the woollen or linen maufactures of this kingdom, and selling the fame by wholesale, shall not be deemed hawkers, pedlars or petty chapmen, within any aét; but such persons, and those immediately employed under them, may carry abroad and sell the manufactures. See 23 Geo. 2. sect. 6.

Sect. 4. Geo. 1. c. 6. No maker or wholesale trader in English bone-lace, shall be deemed hawkers, pedlar, or petty chapmen.

Hefir, (Harres,) Though the word be borrowed of the Latin, yet it hath not altogether the same signification with us that it hath with the Civilians; for they call Herefed, qui ex stelamante succedi in universam jux steltatoris; the Common law calls him heir, that succeeds by right of blood in any man's lands or tenements in fee; & by the Common law nothing palfale jure hereditatis, but only fee; moveables, or chattels immovable, are given by stelament to whom the steltator lifeth, or else are at the disposition of the ordinary, to be distributed as he in confidence thinketh meet. Causanes in Conflatud. Burg. pag. 929, hath a definition of harres, which, in Some, accordeth well with our law; for he faith, there is harres fanguinis & hereditatis. And a man may be harres fanguinis with us, that is, heir apparent to his father or ancestor; and yet may, upon defeiture, be delected of his inheritance, or at least the greatest part of it. Every heir having lands by descent, is bound by the binding act of his ancestor, if he be nameit. For qui fenti commodum, fentive debt & ouw. Co. on Litt. fol. 7. 8. Cowell, edit. 1727.

An heir, faith Lord Coke, in the legal understanding of the Common law, is he to whom lands, tenements or hereditaments, by the act of God and right of blood do descend, of some estate of inheritance. Co. Litt. 7. 8. 3 Co. 12. b.

The word heir in the notion of it implies, that the party has all theo legal qualifications which our law requires in all persons that represent or stand in the place of another, and is of such importance, that regularly without in the word heir no fee-simple can be created. Co. Litt. 9.

HEI

1. Of the feudal kinds of heirs, namely, the heir eiparent, the heir general, the special heir, the customary heir, and the barons fallus.

2. Of what conditions and covenants of the ancestor shall the heir take advantage; and by what conditions, covenants and contracts of the ancestor shall the heir be bound.

3. What allions may an heir commence and prosecute in right of his estate, and whether he shall be bound to answer his ancestor's debts and contracts.

4. What shall be assises in the hands of the heir.

HEI

1. Of the feudal kinds of heirs, namely, the heir apparent, the heir general, the special heir, the customary heir, and the barons fallus.

Heir apparent. Here we must observe, that no person can be heir apparent, until the death of his ancestor, according to the rule, Nemo of barons silentius; yet in common parlance he, who stands nearest in degree of kindred to the ancestor, is called, even in his life-time, heir apparent. Co. Litt. 8. a.

Also the law takes notice of an heir apparent so far as to allow the ancestor to bring an action of trespass for taking away his fon and heir, and makepliant with it, for the father being guardian by nature to his fon where his lands descended to him. Co. Litt. 37. Ratcliff's cafe. Co. Litt. 75. 84. Dyer 189. Vaugh. 180.

Also a person may take by purchase, or dejetitia persona by the name of heir, even in the life-time of his ancestor; as where a man devolves lands to A. and his heirs during the life of B. in trust for B. and after the decease of B. to the heirs males of the body of B. now living, it was held, that by the devile the remainder was immediately vested in the fon, and that the words heirs male now living, in a will, were a full description of the fon, who then was the heir apparent of B. and known by the devile to be so. 1 Pyn. 311. 334. Raym. 330. 2 Lev. 232. Barchet v. Durdant.

But the fon and heir hath no power over the inheritance during the life of the ancestor: Therefore if a fon and heir bargains and sells the inheritance of his father, this is void, because he hath no right to transfer; so if he releases, the law is the same. Kelw. 84. Co. Litt. 265.

But if the fon makes a covenant of the inheritance of his father, this paffes an eacute during the son's life; for it is a disfullin to the father, and the son, after the father's death cannot avoid it. For no man can allege an injury in another by a voluntary act of his own. Co. Litt. 265. a.

Neither is there any privity between the heir apparent and his ancestor, as to make a fine levied by the ancestor a bar within the 4. f. 7. and if the heir apparent be fied of lands, and the father levies a fine and dies, it shall not bar the heir; because he does not claim or derive any title to the land from his father, and therefore in that respect shall have five years to preserve himself from the fine: For the privies understood and intended by the act, are those who are privy not only in blood, but likewise in estate and title to the land of which the fine was levied, that is, those who must necessarily mention the covenator, and convey themselves thro' him, before they can make out their title to the eacute. 2 Inj. 535. 3 Co. 89. a. Hob. 333.

Heir general. The heir general or heir at Common law is he who after his father or ancestor's death hath a right to, and is introduced into all his lands, tenements and hereditaments. But he must be of the whole blood, not a bastard, alien, &c. See Deftruct and Coparatars.

None but the heir general, according to the course of the Common law, can be heir to a warranty, or sue an appeal of the death of his ancestor. Co. Litt. 14. a. orbit. 13. a.

If a condition be annexed to Borough English or Gavel-kind lands, and the condition is broken, the heir at Common law shall enter; for the condition is a thing of new creation, and collateral to the land: But when the eldest
The heir at law is bound by his ancestor’s alienations and dispositions, as also by his conduct and covenants, as far as he hath affets; but if a man covenants, that after his death his heir at law shall feid to the use of his yeouget son, this is void.

If the ancestor agrees to convey or fell lands, and receives part of the purchase-money, but dies before a conveyance is executed, and a bill is brought against the heir, he will be decreed to convey, and the money shall go to the executor, especially if there are more debts due than the testator’s personal estate is sufficient to pay. 1 Vern. 51. Ab. Reg. 165.

So if a father conveys to a younger son by a defective conveyance, and dies, the heir at law in two cafes shall be compelled to make it good. 1. Where there is a covenant for further assurance, binding the heir; because the heir is bound by the covenant. 2. Where there is a provision made by the father in his life-time for the heir, or he hath such provision by defect from the father. See 1 Vern. 16.

Also the heir at law is bound by a decree obtained against the ancestor; which may be carried into execution two ways: 1st, If the decree is enrolled, the party may sue out a foro sine facias against the heir, to recover the greater part of the debt. But this is only after an enrollment, and not before: And the party must, at the return of the foro sine facias, sue for, if he hath any, against the decree.

2dly, The plaintiff may bring his bill of revivor, to carry the decree into execution: And this is the surest and safest way; where the title is uncertain. For the heir against the ancestor, and his heir does not claim under that title, but by virtue of another title, paramount, there the decree can never be carried into execution against him; as where an estate is decreed against a man, and his heir infills his father had no title thereto, or was only tenant for life thereof, the decree in that case can never be carried into execution against him; he is at liberty to controvert the justice and validity of that decree; he may make a new defence from what his ancestor did, and vary his cause as he shall be advised, and the parties go into a new examination of the matter, and hear the causa De non, and the court judge whether the decree be right or not, and may affirm or reverse it at their pleasure.

But where one man obtains a decree against another for a real estate, and the party dies before the plaintiff is put into possession, in that case if the heir at law claims the estate by defeunt under his ancestor, or a devisee under him, he shall never controvert the justice of the decree, though his ancestor should have misconceived his defence; nor shall he be at liberty to make a new defence, or enter into new proof so as to overthrow the former decree, especially where it appears to the court that the decree hath been of an ancient standing.

Such a decree in title claims per foeman doni, and as the statute De demis prefers the estate to him, his ancestor cannot grant or alien, nor make any rightfull estate of freehold to another, but for term of his own life. Lit. fett. 613.

If the issue in tail be attained of felony in the life of his father, and is pendant, upon the death of the donee, the donor cannot enter, for though the disability to take by defeunt remains after the pardon, yet the donor cannot enter against his own gift while there is any issue in being; and though the issue cannot by reason of such disqualification claim as heir to the donee, yet he may enter as a special occupant, for the gift is fill a good defignata persona, who shall take upon the death of the donee; but then the issue must take it, subject to the charges of his father, because he is to take it as the tenant left it, and consequently is to make good all charges which he left upon it. 2 Co. 166. a.

Custody heir. A custom in particular places varying the rules of defeunt at Common law is good; such as the custom of Gavel-kind, by which all the sons shall inherit, and make but one heir to their ancestor; but the general custom of Gavel-kind lands extends to farms only; but the Custom of them, that if one or more of them die without issue, all his brothers may inherit, is good. Vide tit. Defeunt, tit. Borough English and Gavel-kind. Co. Lit. 140. a.

But if a remainder of lands of the nature of Gavel-kind be limited to the right heirs of J. S. the heir at Common law shall take it, and not the heirs in Gavel-kind; for this remaining being newly created, cannot be reckoned within the custom. Co. Lit. 10. Hob. 31.

So the custom of Borough English, that the yeouget son only shall inherit, is good; but the younger brother shall not inherit by force of this custom, unless there shall be a particular custom to that purpose also. Co. Lit. 114. a. 286.

Heres fatus. An heres fatus is only a devise of lands, being made by the will of the testator, and has no other right or intrefet than the will gives him. 3 Co. 47. a.

It has been shewn in Chancery, that such an heir shall have the aid of the personal estate in discharging the debts of the testator. 1 Vern. 36. 7.

But this must be understood of an heres fatus of the whole estate, who shall have the benefit of the personal estate, but a devisee of particular lands shall not. Pres. Cymb. 3.

a. Of what conditions and covenants of the ancestor shall the heir take advantage; and by what condition, covenants and contracts of the ancestor shall the heir be bound.

Conditions and covenants real, or such as are annexed to estates, shall defend to the heir, and be alone shall take effect. 3 Co. 166. a.

And this is not only where there are express words, but also where there are none; for the law by implication referves the condition to the heir of the seoffor, &c. for being prejudiced by the disposition, it is but reasonable that he should take the fame advantage that his ancestor which received rights might. 4 Ed. 1st. 407, 472.

If a man felled of lands in right of his wife, makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and dies, and after the condition is broke, the heir of the husband shall enter; for though no right defended to him, yet the title of entry by force of the condition which was created upon the feoffment, and referred to the seoffor and his heirs, descended. 5 Co. Lit. 194. 23. 30. a. Lit. 204. 23.

The heir shall take advantage of a nominum parce, for being incident to the rent, it shall defend to the heir, being a security or penalty to engage the payment of the rent; whoever therefore has a right to the rent, ought in reason to have the penalty which is to oblige the tenant to pay it. 4 Ed. 1st. 162. a.

If a man leaves for years, and the leevice covenants with the leessor, his executors and administrators, to repair and leave it in good repair at the end of the term, and the leissor dies, &c. his heir may have an action upon this covenant, for this is a covenant which runs with the land itself, but he is not named; and it appears, that it was intended to continue after the death of the leissor, inasmuch as his executors, &c. are named. 3 Lea. 97. That the world figlat is wanting; 2. That pat the ten years incurred in the life of the ancesstor, and that this was a hard action; & per Hez Ch. J. the want of figlat, by the verdict and all the premises were out of repair in the time of the ancesstor, and continued so in the time of the heir, it is a damage to the heir, and the jury give as much in damages as will put the premises in repair; but hereby no damages are given in respect of the length of time they continued to be in such a condition; and the only time of the action brought to put the premises in repair: therefore per decem annos was frivolous; and he said, that this is not a hard action, and good damages are always given in thefe cases, because the damages recovered ought to be applied to the repair of the premises. 1 Sail. 141. Fruin v. Canpion.

If A. infeft B. upon condition, that if the heir of A. pays to B. £50. 20. t. then he and his heirs may re-enter; this is a good condition, of which the heir of A. may take advantage, and yet A. himself never can. Ca. Lit. 214. 4. 3. Having infeft three sons, William his eldest, Nathaniel his second, and Daniel his third; William died in the life-time of his father, leaving infeft only a daughter; afterwards the father devifes the estate in question to Ann his wife for her life, and after her death to his son Daniel and his heirs, provided that if Nathaniel doth within three months after the death of my wife pay to Daniel, his executors or administrators, the sum of 500 l. then the said lands shall come to my son Nathaniel and his heirs; the wife lived several years, and during her life Nathaniel died, leaving the plaintiff his heir; and the wife afterwards dying, the plaintiff brought his bill within three months after his death, praying, that upon payment of the 500 l. he might have a conveyance of the estate; and the principal point of the cause was, whether this 500 l. being to be paid by Nathaniel within a limited time, and he dying before that time came, whether his heir at law could now on payment of the money make a title to the lands; for it was agreed, that he was heir at law to the testator; and it was contended that he could not; that this was a condition precedent and merely personal in Nathaniel, who had neither jus in re, nor ad rem, and could neither have devised or releaved, or extinguished this condition, and being a bare possibility, and he dying before it was performed, his heir could not now on payment of the money make a title to the lands, for the devise to Nathaniel, yet that is not designed to give them any estate originally, but to denote the quantity of estate which Nathaniel was to take; and for this we are cited 10 Ca. Lambert's cafe. Phin. Bret and Rigan. On the other side it was insisted, that this was like the common case in Ca. Lit. 205. 1. 10. 19. that there is a feoffment made on condition that the seffor shall before such a day, &c. there is the seffor die before the day, his heir may perform the condition, for the reasons there mentioned; and that it being fo at law, it should still be confirmed more liberally in equity, where the letter of a condition is not always required to be literally performed; and for this were cited, 1 Chan. Ca. 89. 3 Chan. Ca. Birttie and Fielding. That the possibility of performing this condition was an interret or right, or scintilla juris, which veiled in Nathaniel himself, that he forfeved the testament; and therefore this differed from Bret and Rigan. 3. 19. that was only an equitable causa moratorii, he forfeited, defecnded to his heir, and might be performed by him; as before the statute De devin, the possibility of reverter defended to the heir of the donor; for this we are also cited, 2 Boud. Fiptsy and Rogers. Cro. Car. 358. Cro. Foz. 310. 9. 1s. 2s. 3d. Meth. Manning's cafe. The cause was first heard by the Master of the Rolls, was thought by him a matter of great difficulty, and therefore he appointed the counsel to speak to it when the court was full; afterwards it was decreed by my Lord Chancellor, with the assistance of the Master of the Rolls, for the plaintiff, on Lit. sess. 334. 335. And my Lord Chancellor said, that though a condition in strictness of law did not devolve the estate, the figure of the lease, the devise may take benefit by it by an inference; &c. and that Nathaniel might have released or extinguished the condition. 3 Bee. Att. 21. 22. Mich. 5. Gen. 1. between Marks and Marks, in Chanc. As the heir at law is the proper and only person, who can take advantage of conditions, &c. annexed to the real estate; so shall he be bound by all such conditions, &c. which run with the land, whether such conditions were annexed to the estate by the original seffor, grantor or immediate ancesstor. 1 Rot. Att. 421.

If a gift be made in tail on condition, that the donee should not die, then the donee hath infeft two daughters, and one of them devises them both enter and evict them both, because it was the original condition annexed to the whole estate, that no part of it should be discontinued. Ca. Lit. 165.

But here we must take notice, that no tenant in tail, nor his infeft can be refrained from aliening by fine and recovery, though they may be refrained from aliening by feoffment, or other tortious act, which amounts to a discontinuance. See Efnat.

So where one devised lands to A. and the heirs male of his body, provided, that if he does attempt to alien, that then intestate shall save, &c. and B. shall enter, and A. makes a feoffment in the name of B. &c. it was adjudged against B. and that the condition was void, because non confert what shall be adjudged an attempt, and how it should be tried. 1 Vent. 321. 3. Kim. 787. Priet and Wren.

Also where a condition is annexed to the estate given to the heir, and which goes in abrogation and refrain; thereof, the same shall in some cases be construed a limitation; for if it were a condition, nobody could take advantage of it but the heir himself. Dyer 316. To Ca. 41. 1 Vent. 195.

As if a devise be made in Borough Englishe to the wife of his heir, and after devise to his wife for life, re- mainder to his eldest fon, paying 40 l. to each of his brothers and sisters within two years after the death of his wife, &c. this is a limitation, and not a condition; for if it should be a condition, it would extinguish in the heir, and there would be no remedy for the money. Gra. Eliz. 204. Welld. and Hammond. 3 Ca. 260. 1. 2 Lem. 114. S. G.

So where one devised lands in fee, having infeft two sons and a daughter, devised to his youngest son and daughter 20 l. apiece, to be paid by his eldest son, and devised his lands to his eldest son and his heirs, upon condition, that they should not part, pay the fines, that then the lands should remain to his youngest son and daughter and their heirs, and dies, the eldest son enters, and does not pay the money; and it was adjudged, that the youngest son and daughter should have the land; for this, this devise to the eldest son and heir, being no more than what the law gives without devise, was void; 2ly. If this should be a condition it would be defeated by the tenant upon the eldest son, who was to perform it; therefore 3ly. It was held to be a devise to the eldest son only, or no longer than till he failed to pay the said sums, and then to the youngest son and daughter which gives them the land by way of limitation, upon his failing to pay the said sums. Cro. Eliz. 833. 819. Mar. 644. pl. 891. Noy 51. Hoyward and Prityy adjudged. Vaughan. 271. 2 Med. 26. S. C. cited.

One devises lands to A. his heirs at law, and devises other lands to B. in fee, and if A. shall die B. shall have the fee, or otherwise, he shall lose what is devised to him, and if it shall go to B. and dies; A. enters into the lands devised to B. and claims; and it was held, 1. That this was a sufficient breach to give title to B. 2. That if this should be a condition it would by the devisee thereof be merged and defeated; therefore it was held to be a limitation, which determined the eftate of A. and cast the posses-tion upon B, without entry. 2 Mod. 7. Shuteburt

If, wherever the ancestor makes a conveyance or disposition on condition, which goes in restraint and abridgement of the estate of the heir, he must have notice of it; for notice of such condition at his peril, as others must do. 8 Cm. Franc's ch. 13.

up the estate of the testator immediately after the marriage; but if not, then the trustees to raise a portion out of the said lands for B, and the lands to remain to C, afterwards.

A dies, and B marries one who neither was, nor took upon him the name of Fitzgerald; and the only point upon which judgment was given was the want of notice in B, of the settlement, without which being heir at law, and so having a title by defect, she was not bound ex officio to take notice of the condition. 3 Mod. 28,

3. What actions may an heir commence and prosecute in right of his ancestor; and where an heir shall be bound to answer his ancestor's debts and contracts.

It is clear that the heir may bring any real action de-tralural, in right of his ancestor, but cannot regularly bring any personal action, because he has nothing to do with the affair or personal contracts of his ancestor. 1 Co. Law.
164c.

Also if an erroneous judgment be given against the ancestor, by which he logeth the lands, the heir may bring a writ of error. 1 All. Tr. 747.

And if one hath lands on the part of his mother, and loseth by erroneous judgment, and dies, the heir of the part of the mother shall have the writ of error. 1 Leom.

So the younger fon, when intitled to the land by the custom of Borough English, shall bring the writ of error,

So if there be an erroneous judgment against tenant in tail female, the issue female, and not the fon, shall bring

And if a man settles land to the use of himself and the heirs of his body, the remainder to his own right heirs and dies, leaving issue only a daughter, who levies a fine, and leaves without issue, and J. S. brings a writ of error as cousin and collateral heir to the daughter, yet he shall ne-ever reverse the fine, for there could no right defend to him from the daughter, because the had but an effatetail, which determined by her death without issue; and it does not appear that the remainder in fee was in the daughter as right heir; wherefore J. S. shall not reverse the fine, quia de non appartenentibus & non extinentibus eodem est ratio, especially in a court of judicature, where the decides can take notice of nothing that does not come judicially before them, and see appearing in the pleading.
Dyer 89. 1 Cm. Eliz. 459. 2 Leom. 36.

If J. S. binds himself and his heirs in a bond, and therupon judgment is obtained against J. S. and J. S. makes his will, and his heir at law executor, and dies, dying leaving lands which descended to his heir, yet he shall not be able to have a writ of error as heir, for he is not privy to the judgment; and when an extent is made upon him, it is not a tenant, but after the lands are taken in execution, he may have a writ of error. Syl. 38. 39. White and Thom. per Rol.

Also the heir at law may, in right of his ancestor, maintain an action for debt for rent referred on a lease made by his ancestor, for the rent is part of the lands, and incident to the rent; but for arrears of rent incurred in the life-time of the ancestor, neither the heir nor the executor could by the Common law maintain an action, because they were considered as part of the personal estate, and so to the executor, he could not represent his testator as to any contracts relating to the freehold and inheritance. 11 H. 6. 15. 19 H. 6.

41. Co. Lit. 162. a.

But now by the 32 H. 8. cap. 37. an executor may maintain an action of debt for such accounts which were due.

If a nobleman, knight, esquire, &c. be buried in a church, and have his coat of arms, and pennons with his arms, and such other ensigns of honour as belongs to his degree, set up in the church, or if a grave-stone or altar be laid or made, &c. for a monument of him; in such case the same is a memorial of the church be in the parson, and that the said monument be annexed to the church, or if he be not the parson, or any, take them or deface them, but he is subject to the heir and his heirs, in the honour and memory of whose ancestor they were set up. Co.
Lit. 18. b. For this see 1 Roll. Abr. 695. Noj 104.

Where the ancestor binds himself and his heirs in an obligation, the obligee may sue the heir or executor, or the administrator of the executor, at his election, and may have execution of the land, defended to the heir; for the Common law having allowed the action of debt against the heir, he could have no benefit by the action, unless he had consented to have the heir defend the execution of the lands defended to the heir. Plat. 441. 3 Co. 12. a. Co.
T. 450. 1 And. 7.

But the body of the heir is protected, for it would be most unreasonable to subjice the heir to the payment of his ancestor's debts, any farther than to the value of the lands defended. Dyer 81. pl. 62. 207. pl. 15.
Moir pl. 207. Co. Lit. 105. 207.

Also the heir must be expressly named, otherwise he is not chargeable, and the reason why the heir is not chargeable in this case, as the executor in case of a bond entered into by the testator, without being named, is this; by the Common law only the goods and chattels of the debtor, and the annual profits of the land they earof, and not the land itself, were liable to execution for debt or damages, because the being the security the creditor depended upon, they were liable in the hands of his representative or executor, as well as in the hands of the debtor himself; and hence it was, that the executor was made liable for the debt of the testator, so far as he had chattels or affets, tho' he was not named in the contract; but the land was not liable to execution, because it was preferred from the personal contracts and engagements of the tenant, that he might be the better able to answer the feudal duties to the lord, which were owed to the government; and therefore if the land was not being originally liable to the demand in the hands of the obligor, must be much less liable in the hands of the heir, who was not comprehended in the

But if A. had granted, for him and his heirs, to B. and his heirs, such a rent out of his lands; in this case, the heirs being comprehended in the contract, are bound to make good the grant, so far as they have affets by defense from the grantor; and this was allowed at Common law, because the grantee of the rent had the land originally in view for his security; and by granting it having for its benefit in his power to disfrain the land for the rent, it was beyond the heir, whether the land do answer the rent
by differe, or by an execution upon a writ of annexity. 1 Roll.

If the ancestor bind himself in a fiatute, recogni-sance, &c. the heir is liable not only as tenant, but also as purchaser; wherein he could not have his age; and cannot oblige a purchaser, whether for valuable conderation, or without, to contribute, but one heir may oblige another to contribute; as if a man feised of two acre, the one defendable, according to the course of the Common law, the other in Borough English, acknowledge a fiatute, &c. the heir at law shall oblige the Borough English to contribute; so one coparcellar shall oblige the

of or concerning any manors, messuages, lands, tenements or hereditaments, or of any rent, profit, term, or reversion, or reversion out of the same, whereas any person or persons at the time of the death of her, or afterwards shall be filed in fee-simple, in possession, reversion or remainder, have power to dispose of the same by his, her, or their last wills or entailments, shall be deemed and taken (only as against such creditor or creditors as aforesaid, his, her, or their heirs, executors, executors, administrators and assigns, and every of them,) to be fraudulent, and clearly, absolutely, and utterly void, frustrate, and of none effect; (any pretence, colour, forged or presumed consideration, or any other matter or thing to the contrary notwithstanding.)

And for the means that such creditors may be enabled to recover their said debts, it is further enacted, that in the cases before mentioned every such creditor shall and may have and maintain his, her, and their actions and actions of debt upon his, her, and their said bonds and specialties, against the heir and heirs at law of such obligor or obligors, and such devisee and devisees jointly, by virtue of this act; and such devisee or devisees shall be liable and chargeable for a false plea by him or them pleaded, in the same manner as any heir should have been for a false plea by him pleaded, or for not confounding the lands or tenements to him defended.

Provided, That where there had been or shall be any limitations or appointments, or the defcription of or concerning any manors, messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments for the raising or payment of any real or just debt or debts, or any portion or portions, sums or sums of money for any child or children of any person, other than the heir at law, according to, or in pursuance of any marriage-contrakt or agreement in writing bona fide made before such marriage, the same, and every of them, shall be in full force, and the same manors, messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, shall and may be holden and enjoyed by every such person or persons, his, her, and their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for such estate or interest, as shall be so limited or appointed, devolved or disposed, until such debt or debts, portion or portions shall be paid, paid, and satisfied; and any thing contained in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

And it is further enacted by the said statute, "That all and every devisee and devisees made liable by this act, shall be liable and chargeable in the same manner as the heir at law, by force of this act, notwithstanding the lands, tenements, and hereditaments to them devolved, shall be aliens before the action brought.

In the construction of this statute it hath been holid, that tho' a man is prevented thereby from defeating his creditors by will, that yet any settlement or disposition he shall make in his life-time of his lands, whether voluntary or not, will be good against bond creditors; for that was not provided against by the statute, which only took care to secure such creditors from any imposition, which might be suppos'd in a man's last sickness; but if he gave away his estate in his life-time, this prevented the defendant of so much to the heir, and consequently took away their right of distrain against him, unless the bond creditors had respect of the land descended; and as a bond is no lien whatsoever on lands in the hands of the obligor, much less can it be so when they are given away to a stranger. Acr. Ep. 149. Parfitio v. Wedon.

In debt actions, no plea pleaded is per diem on the day of the bill, the plaintiff replied specially, that the obligor (father of the defendant) died on such a day, and that the defendant (after the death of his father) and before the day of the bill, was on such a day, which was a day after the death of the obligor, had lands by descent from him in fee-simple, unde prædict, (the plaintiff) de debis prædictis satisfacit, ut, &c. H. prædict., & hoc paras' effe verificaret, unde petit judiciu, according to the above statute. To this the defendant made a frivolous rejoinder; and thereupon the plaintiff demurred. The question was, If the replication was good in pursuance of the statute; for it was objected that it was ill, because the plaintiff had put the word of the statute in the replication by the words, &c. de debito pradicto factis pratis, which ought to have been omitted; because the laturae is express, that after it it is matter of inquirit only ex affitis, and not to the point of the issue; and by this laturae the plaintiff is only recover, pro tantum, against the defendant, respect of the value of such aliened affects, and is not to have a general judgment against the heir, as at Common law upon a fallae plea; sed per cur. upon debate, this replication was held good, and as it ought to be, and that if auld, &c. de debito pradicto factis pratis had been omitted, it might have been a good cause of objection; for the laturae do not give occasion to alter any more of the form of the replication common in such cases, but only as to the time concerning affects by defent; and the conclusion, which (before the laturae) was to the country, must now be with an averment only, because the defendant may have an opportunity to answer the new matter alleged in the replication. Carth. 35. Rollflan and Hylter adjudged, 5 Mod. 122. S. C. adjudged, and that the statute was made not to create, but to prevent difficulties in pleading.

It seems that neither before nor since this statute the executor or administrator of the estate, after the person of the heir is not chargeable, but with respect to the land; and if before the laturae, the heir had aliened before action brought, he should not be charged for the profits he received; which is evident from the plea of rians per diem the day of the writ purchased; much less could his executor, or could he yet, unless some statute make him so: For an executor is but in nature of a trustee for the personalty, and not at all privy to the inheritance. Trin. 33 Car. 2. in C. B. between Baron Wifian and Danby adjudged. 3 Boc. Abr. 28.

If there be judgment in debt against two, and one dies, a faire facias lies against the other alone, reciting the death, and he cannot plead that the heir of him that is dead has affects by defent, at demand judgment if he ought to be charged alone: For at Common law, the charge upon a judgment being personal survived, and the laturae of Wifian. 2. that gives the elegit, does not take away the remedy of the plaintiff at Common law, and therefore the party may take out his execution with any way he pleases; for the words of the laturae are fit in electione: But if he should, after the allowance of the writ, and revival of the judgment, take out an elegit to charge the land, the party may have remedy by suggelion, or elfe by audit sua curia. 1 Lev. 30. Raym. 21. Per. Abr. 4 Edwa. and Smay 242.

If there be a fequestration for a personal duty against the ancestor where the heir is not bound, and the defendant dies, there is an end of the sequestration, and it cannot be revived against the heir; because neither the heir nor the lands are bound by such decree: But if the decree were upon a covenant that bound the heir, and the defendant died, such decree might be revived by sub poena scire facias against the heir to shew cause against the decree, if the decree be inrolled of record, or if not, by bill of revivor; and when revived against heir and executor (which is the usual and regular way), the sequestration also will be revived on motion, if, upon coming into court, cause is not shewn why the decree should not be revived: And in this case it hath been resolved, that the decree should have the same authority to bind the personal affects as a judgment at law, and therefore shall go pari passu to be paid off and discharged; but the lien of such executor of administrator on lands came by the laturae, which only gives an elegit for a moiety of the land in satisfaction of the debt, and therefore that could give no authority to lay a sequestration on the real estate for a mere personal duty, where the heir is not bound in the covenant. 1 Vernon. 143. 3 Lev. 325. 2 Vernon. 37. 89. 9.

4. What shall be affects in the hands of the heir.

Where the ancestor binds himself and his heirs, all his lands of freehold, and which defent in fee-simple, are affects by defent, and shall be liable, as far as they extend, to answer the ancestor's obligations. See Bro. tit. Affect. Fit. tit. Affect. 1 Roll. Abr. 269. tit. Affect. See Affix. A reversion after a lease for years made by the ancestor is perfect affects, so that the heir cannot pledge real reversion in delay of execution of the rent and reversion, though the plaintiff cannot have benefit of the reversion till the heir be determined. 1 Salt. 354. S. Far. 42. 2 Mod. 50—51. 1 Hurl. Plead. 320.

A reversion in fee expeendant upon the determination of an estate for life is good affects, and ought to be pleaded specially by the heir, and the plaintiff in such case may take judgment of it sum accommodi. Carth. 129. per Hylr.

If A. hath issue B. and C. and conveys lands to the use of himself for life, the remainder to B. in tail male, the remainder to his own right heirs, and A. des, and the reversion descends to B. his son, and B. dies seized, and the reversion descends to his son, who dies without issue, so that the tail is spent, and C. enters, those lands shall be affects to answer the debt of his father. Carth. 137. 3 Lev. 286. 3 Mod. 253. S. C. Kellow vs. Rouken. The lands, as has been observed, must defent to the heir; and therefore it was formerly held, that if he took by purchase, as if the tenator devised them to him, paying so much, or if he devised lands to one of the two, and his heirs at law jointly, that those lands were not affects, but if he devised one part to A. another to B. and another to his heir at law, this third part was affects. Car. Edia. 431. 2 Mod. 286.

By the statute of frauds and perjuries (29 Car. 2. c. 3.) it is enacted, that all lands came to the heir by reasons of a special occupancy, they shall be chargeable in his hands as affects by defent, as in cases of lands in fee simple, and in case there be no special occupant thereof, it shall go to the executors or administrators of the party that had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant, and shall be affects in their hands.

Also by the said statute, par. 10. & 11. where lands are settled in trust, and defent in fee to the heir of of eyre give truth, the same shall be affects in the same manner as lands in possession, but he shall not, by reason of any plea or other matter, be chargeable to pay the condemnation out of his own affects. Vid. supra. 15 Edwa. 24 Edva. A demission of an inheritance is affects, for the heir having a right in equity, that ought in equity to be liable to satisfy a bond debt. 4 Chan. Ca. 148.

Periptos, (Heredita) Is in the Saxon tongue heregate, what is derived from here exercitus, and grat a beall, and in the time of the Saxons signified a tribute given to the lord for his better preparation towards war. Lambard in his Explanation of Saxon words, verba hercunum. Erat enim heretum militaris fejuscellis praefidii, quam, ebeucu ubsalu, dominus repertorius efferet. After munimentum, fays Spelman. Ann. by the laws of Cantatus, tit. De Heredita, it appears, that at the death of the great men of this nation, so many horses and arms were to be paid as they were in their respective life-times obliged to keep for the king's service. It is now taken for the beall a tenant hath at the hour of his death, due to the lord by cultum, be a tenure, or fee, for two menors, the hef piece of plate, jewel, or the beall piece of goods; the name is still retained, but the use is altered: for whereas by Lambard's opinion, it did signify so much as relief doth now with us: Now it is taken for the beall head of cattle that a tenant hath at the hour of his death, due to the lord by cultum. Kitchen, fol. 133, p. 12, makes a beall heriot, and beall-cumul: for interpretation whereof, you shall finde these words in Broke, tit. Heriots, no. 5. Heriot after the death of the tenant for life is heriot-cumul, Heriot-forseice is after the death of the tenant in fœc-fimple. In the book called The Terms of the Lea, 'tis said, that the heriot-cumul is often exprest by the person, or man, that holds by such fervice to pay heriot at the time of his death, and holdeth in fœc-fimple. Heriot-cumul is, when heriots have been paid time out of mind by cultum, and this may be after the death of tenant for life. And for this the lord may dilfrain or feize. See Plowd. fol. 95, 96. Drastum, lib. 2. cap. 36. Deft. and Stud. cap. 9. But of right neither the lord nor officer should take heriot, before it be prevented at the next court holden after the tenant is dead, that such a beall is due for a heriot. If the lord purchase part of the tenancy, heriot-forseice is extinguished, but it is not so in heriot-cumul. Cl. 8 Rep. Tallot's. Cafe. If the lord ought to have a heriot when the tenant dieth, and the tenant devieth away all the goods; yet the lord shall have his heriot, for the law preferreth the cultum before the devile. Co. on Litt. lib. 3. cap. 3. pag. 185. See Dyer, fol. 193. nam, 58. This in Scottland is called her-reatillus, compounded of bare. In Dan. it is called the Latin herbiz, and in Saxon, haeriot, and in Saxon, in herd, tribute or taxation. Skene de verb. feign, verb. hericidia. Heriots or the delivering up of arms at the decease of a tenant, did not obtain in England till the sovereignty of the Danes, and are first mentioned in the laws of Canute.

The book of Domfnify, and generally all monkish writers have, in their judgments, and their theorets, there was a very great difference between them. Heriot was often a personal, relief always a preial service. Heriots were first contrived to keep a conquered people in subjection, and to support the publick strength and military furniture of the kingdom. Reliefs for the private advantage of the lord, that he might not have inutilum proprietatem in the feignory. Reliefs were a feudal service, barriots before any feudal tenure. Vide Spelman of Bonds, cap. 18. See Kennet's Glossary in hercunum. Council, edit. 1727.

It is so thought by our sages that the theorets must be far more ancient, and to differ from reliefs, the original therefor seems to be thus. Anciently when the tenure were military, and for life only, the arms and war-horfe of the tenant, upon his death, went, together with the land, to the lord, being due to him, as having been purchased with the heriots of the land, or as having been originally granted by the lord for publick defense, and therefore belonged to the lord that he might beftow them on the succeeding tenant for the like service; but when the feud became inheritable, the reason of the heriot ceased, and then the arms and war-horfe went to the heir who succ-ceeded to the land; yet in some mansions the cultum of the heriot was by particular agreement retained, or the lord referre it as parcel of his tenure: and though originally the heriot was the belt horse, yet it came in time to be the bust beast; for the tenants to disappoint their lords would often sell their arms and horses, and then of necessity, not give the lord by his tenure, the best beast in lieu of them, and so the heriot came to be esteemed the best beast ever after; and as it arose by cult-um or tenure, after the feud became inheritable, hence we find in some manors a cultum of paying it in goods, and in some in money. Spelm. Glos. 287. Britsh, lib. 2. fs. 60. British gloss. See Kettell's gloss. It appears not only from Spelmans's conjectures, but likewise from the laws themselves of King Canutus, that the Danes were the first inventors of heriots, and that it was a political institution of theirs, whereby the Danisb to A. for 99 years, if the tenant should so long live, remainder to B. for 4000 years; and herein two questions were made: 1st, Whether any heir should be paid, because the copyholder did not die feised; and as to this the court held clearly, that a heir was due and payable; for notwithstanding the outlaw and dilsinein, he still continued legal tenant, and such dilsinein might have been by combination to defeat the lord of his heir. The second question was, to whom the heir should be paid; and to this the court held clearly, that the remainder man for 4000 years could have no right to it, because the copyholder was never his tenant; and as to the grante for 99 years, Barkly Justice was of opinion, that it belonged to him; but hereof James Justice (they two only being in court) doubled, because that so infante the tenant died, it is with infinitae esse of the grante for 99 years was determined. But if by the custom of a copyhold manor the lord may grant a copyhold to three persons, to hold to them juccoffeis, &c, as in statutes in charters, & no alibi, for three lives, and that on the death of every one of them the lord should have his beet for an heir, and a grant is made to J. S. and his assigns, to hold to him for his own life, and the lives of two others: This at least is a good grant for the life of J. S. though not strictly purpous to the custom, and the lord on his death shall have an heir-but he shall not have an heir for the death of the Cejius jointure, because they were never his tenants. 6 Med. 93. & 1 Salik. 188. S. C.

But it hath been solemnly adjudged, that for an heir-

Præbore, Seems to signify a customary load or bur

But he who prescribes for a way, must first in certain whether it is a foot, horse, or cart-way. Vol. 163. adjudged upon demurrer.

If in bar of an action of trespass the defendant pleads that J. S. and all those whose whole estate he hath in certain lands, other themselves and their servants, time out of mind have used a way in or transthe place where, &c. to the said lands: this is a good plea, but it is not the plot a case the said way is claimed, and the rather, because it is claimed by prescription, which ought not to be laid in certo loco. Vol. 163. adjudged.

If A. be not fee of a backside in a town, and the high-street is next adjoining thither to the East, and there is a gate in the backside which, and which is in the street, the gate being in the East next to the street, and A. is also feised in fee of a meadow and a piece of land near adjoining to the backside of the North of the backside, and by deed inclosed B. of the meadow and piece of land which are of the North of the backside, and by the same deed further grants to him, and his good liber ingressum, egressum, & regregum in, ad & extra samb canona pradissim in, per & trans predict, janam and backside; by force of this grant B. may go from the street through its gates, and over the backside, to the meadow or piece of land of which he is infeccted; but he cannot go thro' the said gate and backside to other places, to the street, without coming to the said meadow or piece of land; for the liberty is granted to him of ingress and egress in, ad & extra samb canona prado- sissim in, that this is made appurtenant to the premises before granted.

Vol. 163. 139. Edgell and Holman.

In trespass for breaking his chinks, if the defendant justify going over this clofe, because he hath used time out of mind to have a way over it from D. to Black- aire, and the plaintiff replies, that at the time of the trespass the defendant, went with his carriages from D. to Blackaire, & dehinc to a mill, this will not maintain his action, for when the defendant was at Blackaire, he might goither without he would.

Vol. 163. 139. Sanders and Myafs, and fee 1 Med. 190.

But it seems, that if a man hath a way for carriages from D. to Blackaire over my clofe, and after he purchases land adjoining to Blackaire, he cannot use the said way with carriages to the land adjoining, for then it may be very prejudicial to my clofe; but it seems, if I will help myself, I must serv. the special manner, and that he used it for the land adjoining.

Vol. 163. 394. A way cannot be claimed as appurtenant or appur- tenant to a house, because it is only an easement, and no interest.

If in bar to an action of trespass the defendant pleads, that J. S. and all those whose whole estate he hath in certain lands, time out of mind, and a farm tresspass, and their servants, they have had and used passaggio in, per & transthe place where, &c. to the said lands; this is a good plea, for passaggio is properly a passage over water, and not over land; and he ought to have prescribed in the way, and not in the passage, and should have used such words as are proper and known in the law. Vol. 163. adjudged.

A man may prescribe for a way from his houses throu' a certain clofe, &c. to church, though he himself has lands next adjoining to his said house, through which of necces- sity he must first pass; for the general prescription shall be applied only to the lands of others. Palm. 367, 388.

Upon trial of an action of trespass a case was made, that the place where the supposed trespass was committed was formerly the property of the plaintiff, who some years since built a front upon it, which has ever since been used as a way; but the defendant had land contiguous, parted only by a ditch, and that he had a bridge over the ditch, the other thereof refmct on the highway. And it was inflicted for the defendant, that by the plaintiff's making it a street, it was a dedication of it to the public; and therefore he might be liable to an indissision for a nuisance, yet the plaintiff could could not sue him as for a trespass on his private property. _Sed per curiam:_ It is certainly a dedication to the public, or far as the public has occasion for it, which is only for a right of passage. But it never was underfoot to be a transfer of the absolute property in the field. So the plaintiff had judgment. _Stron._ 1004. _Hill._ 8 _Gen._

2. Sir John Lade v. Shepard. A man cannot allege, that he cannot use his way as well as he could before, but must plead that he could not use the way at all. _Craw._ 52. 53.

An ancient highway cannot be changed without an inquisition found on a writ of _Ad quod damnum._ Such change will be no prejudice to the public; and it is said, that if one change a highway without such authority, he may stop the new way whenever he pleases; nor can the King's subjects in an action brought against them for going over such new way, justify generally, as in a common highway, but ought to shew specially, by way of excuse, how the old way was obstructed, and a new one set out; neither are the inhabitants bound to keep watch in such new way, or repair it, or to make amends for a robbery committed in it. _Cra._ _Car._ 265. _Vanh._ 341. _Yev._ 141. _Haw._ _P._ _C._ 201-2.

But it hath been held, that if a water, which hath been an ancient highway, by degrees changes its course, and goes over different ground from that whereon it used to run, this highway continues in the new channel in the same manner as in the old. _22 Aff._ 95. _1 Rel._ _Abr._ 390.

2. Who are obliged to repair the highway by the Common law, and where a person shall be liable by reason of inutility, tenure or prescription.

Of Common right, the general charge of repairing highways lies on the occupiers of lands in the parish wherein they lie; but it is said, that the tenants of the lands adjoining are bound to scour their ditches. _1 Rel._ _Art._ 39. _March._ 26. _1 Vent._ 90. 183. _8 _H._ 7. 8.

Also if a parish is part in one county, and part in another, the highways in one county are out of repair, the whole parish shall contribute to the repair; but there may be an agreement between the inhabitants, that the one shall repair one part, and the other the other; and such agreement is good between themselves, and for breach the one may have an action upon the case against the other; but in an indictment they shall take no advantage of such agreements, for as to the King they are equally liable. _1 Med._ 112. _1 Vent._ 256. _3 _Keb._ 301.

Therefore if the indictment is general against all the parish, all the parish shall be charged; but if it be intended to charge one part or precint of the parish, and all the ways within the parish, it must be alleged in pleading, that by special prescription, or _ratio tenura,_ such a part of the parish _de tempore dent,_ &c., have been charged with the repairation of the ways. _1 Vent._ 256. _1 Med._ 112. _3 _Keb._ 301.

But though the parish be obliged of common right to repair the highways in it, yet it is certain, that particular persons may be bound to repair the highway, by reason of inutility or prescription; as where he owner of the lands not inclosed, next adjoining to the highway, incloses his lands on both sides of it in which case he is bound to make a perfect good way, and shall not be excused by making it as good as it was before the inclosure, if it were then any way defective, because by the inclosure he takes from the people the liberty of going over the lands adjoining to the common track. _1 Rel._ _Abr._ 366. _1 Sid._ 464.

Allo it is said, that if one inclose land on one side, which hath anciently been inclosed of the other side, he ought to repair all the way; but that if there be no such ancient inclosure of the other side, he ought to repair but half the way. _1 Sid._ 464.

There still remains the old hedge time out of mind belonging to _A._ on the one side of the way, and _B._ having land lying on the other side, makes a new hedge.

the city of London,) that shall be assièd to the payment of any sufficiency to her Majestty, five pounds in goods, or forty shillings in lands, or above, during all such time as he shall stand so assièd, and not altered, and being none of the parties chargeable for the amendment of such parishes, but only the owners of the same, not more than two able men yearly to labour in the highways at the times appointed.

And it is farther enacted by the said statute, sect. 3. "That every other that shall occupy a plough-land in villages, lying in several parishes, shall be chargeable to the making of the ways within the parish where he dwelleth, as far forth, and in such manner and form as any person having a plough-land in any one parish, is or ought to be chargeable."

It was made a great doubt in the construction of these statutes, what should be accounted a plough-land within the purview of them; for thepettingwhereof it was enacted by 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 29. "That any person that shall have in his or her occupation, wood-land or other land, to the value of fifty pounds per annum, shall be adjudged and deemed to have a plough-land, as to all or any of the purposes within any of the statutes before that time made, or of concerning the highways; any thing in them, or any usage or custom to the contrary in any wife notwithstanding."

Alfo it is farther enacted by the above-mentioned statute of 22 Car. 2. c. 12. sect. 8. "That in such places where there are several carts or teams for the amend- ment of the highways, but the usage and practice is to carry stones, gravel, earth or other materials for such amendment, upon the backs of horses, or by any other kind of carriages; that in all such places the inhabitants ufo any such horses or other carriages, shall fend in such their horses as are accustomed to that kind of labou', and fuch other their carriages, with adequate persons to work with the fame, in like manner, and under the like directions, forfeitures and penalties, as by any former statute for repairing of highways, is appointed for carts and teams."

In the explication of these statutes, the following opinions have been held, 1. That clergymen are within these statutes in respect of their spiritual possessions, as much as any other persons in respect of any other possessions. 3 Keb. 255, 476. 1 Vent. 273. 2 Inf. 704. 1 Hanck. P. C. 204.—By Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 25. sect. 12. Persons for serving as surveyors of high ways, in the Militia, shall during the time of such service be exempted from personally doing any highway duty, common called surveyor-work.

2. That he who keeps a draught ought to send a team, though he occupy no land in the parish; and in like manner, who occupies a plough-land ought to send a team, though he keep no耕. 8 Geo. 186, 356. Dalt. cap. 25. 2 Keb. 619.

3. That notwithstanding the words of the statute 3 & 4 Ph. & Mar. cap. 6. extend only to the occupiers of land, yet if the owner neither occupy them, nor let them, but fuffer them to lie ftreight, he shall be charged as much as if he had occupied them, and the public ought not to suffer for his negligence. Palm. 280. 2 Red. Rep. 412.

4. That he who keeps a draught and but two horses, ought to attend with them at the time appointed, and to pay such duty as they are able to carry. Dalt. c. 26. sect. 5.

5. That it is no excufe for parishioners indifferently at law or not repairing their highways, that they have done their full work required by statute; for the statute being in the affirmative, doth not abrogate any provision of this kind by the common law. Dalt. cap. 26. 1 Hanck. P. C. 204.

6. The King's charter, or letters patent, discharging certain lands from the duty of contributing to the repair of the highways, are not sufficient to exempt lands from the charge of the repairing the highways, which by the statute Ph. Mar. and other subsequent statutes, are chargeable to be paid for that purpose. 3 Med. 96. 1 Red. and Whiteh.
lawed by the said justices in their special feffions, shall be collected and gathered by the said surveyor or surveyors of the highways; and if any perfon or persons refuse to pay the monies so all sanctioned on him or them, that then the fame shall be levied, and recovered by the said surveyor or surveyors, by distress and publick highway, beiefs or under three feet in breadth.

Alfo it is enacted by 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 15. sect. 2. "That the justices of the peace of any county, city, division, ridings, liberty, or place, or the major part of them, being five at the least, at their quarter-feffions, may by order, or the afent of the owners, or may be interested in the said ground that shall be laid into the said highway; the said justices by the said statute imposed to impanel a jury before them, and to administer an oath to the said jury, that they will affiﬂe such damages to be given, and recompence to be made to the owners and others interested in the said ground, for their respective interests, as they shall think reasonable, not exceeding five and twenty years purchase for lands so laid out, and likewise such recompence as they shall think reasonable, for the making of a new ditch and fence to that side of the highway that shall be so enlarged, and also afﬁssion to any perfon that may be further afﬁssed, or suffer any damages by being concerned in the enlargement of such highways; And upon payment of the said money so awarded, or leaving it in the hands of the clerk of the peace of the respective county, for the use of the owner, or of others interested in the said ground, the interest of the said persons shall be for ever deducted out of them; and the said ground that shall be laid into any highway by virtue of the said act, shall be deemed a publick highway to all intents and purposes whatsoever; and the said justices shall have power to order one or more afﬁssions or afﬁdavits to be made, levied or collected upon all and every the inhabitants, owners, or occupiers of lands, houses, tenements or hereditaments, in their respective parishes or places that ought to repair the same, to such persons or persons, and in such manner as the said justices at such feffions shall direct and appoint; and the money thereby raised shall be employed and accounted for, according to the order and direction of the said justices, for the repair of the said highway, and for the making the said ditches and fences: And the said afﬁssions shall, by order of the said justices, be levied by the overseers of the highways, by ditches and sale of the goods of persons so afﬁssed, not paying the same within ten days after demand, rendering the overplus of the value of the goods so distrained to the owner or owners thereof, the necessary charges being ﬁrst deducted.

But it is provided by the said statute, sect. 2. "That no such afﬁssion or afﬁdavits made in any one year for enlarging of highways, shall exceed the rate of ﬁve per cent in the pound of the yearly income of any lands, townships, or hereditaments, or the rate of ﬁve per cent in the pound for personal efates.

Alfo it is further enacted by sect. 7 of the said statute, "That if now there be three or more seale shall be made by the said justices for laying out any ground for the enlarging of highways, the owners or proprietors of the said ground shall have free liberty, within eight month after such order, to cut down any wood or timber growing upon the said ground; or upon the neglect thereof, that the same shall be sold by order of the said justices; and owners of such wood or timber shall receive the full of what shall be made thereof, the charges being first deducted.

"And it is further enacted by sect. 5 of the said statute, "That any person aggrieved by the order or decree of the said justices may appeal to the judges of assize at the next assize only to be held for the county where such decree or order shall be made; and any of the said justices or of the said justices may reverse the said former order and decree, as in judgment they shall think fit, and if affirmed, to award costs against such appellants for their vexation and delay, and to cause the fame to be levied by diftrusts and sale of the said appelkent's goods, rendering the overplus to the said applicants.

"And it is further enacted by the said statute, sect. 6. "That where any common highway shall be included after a writ of "Ad quod damnum issued, and inquisition thereupon taken, any perfon aggrieved by such inclosure, may make his appeal to the quarter-feqons of the county to be held next after such inquisition taken, which shall finally hear and determine such appeal; and if no such appeal be made, then the said inquisition and return entered and recorded by the clerk of the peace of such county at the quarter-sessions, shall be for ever afterwards binding to all persons whatsoever.

6. Of appointing surveyors of the highways, and how they shall attend to their office.

It is enacted by the 3 & 4 Will. & Mar. c. 12 sect. 1. "That upon the first and twentieth day of December in every year, unless that day be Sunday, and then on the seventh and twentieth, the constables, headboroughs, tithingmen, churchwardens, surveyors or surveyors of the highways, and inhabitants in every parish, shall assemble together, and the major part of them as are so assembled, shall make a lift of the names of a competent number of the inhabitants in their parishes, who have an interest in lands, tenements or hereditaments in their own right or their wives, of the value of ten pounds by the year, or a personal estate of the value of one hundred pounds, or are occupiers or tenants of houses, lands, tenements or hereditaments, of the yearly value of thirty pounds, if any such there be; or if there be no such person, then of the most sufficient inhabitants of such parishes, and shall return such a lift unto two or more of the justices of the peace in or near the division of the county in which their parishes lies, at a special feast to be held for that purpose within the said division, on the third day of January next following, unless it shall happen on a Sunday, and then to be the fourth of the said month, or within fifteen days after; for which purpose the said justices are required to hold a special feast at some place within that division where the parishes lies, and to give notice of the time and place where they intend to hold the same, to the constables, headboroughs, tithingmen, churchwardens, and surveyors of the highways of every parish within the said division, at least ten days before the holding of the said feasts; and the said justices shall then and there, out of the said lifts, according to their discretion, and the largeness of the parish, by warrant un- der their hand and appointment, appoint one or two more, as they shall think fit and approve of, being of like sufficiency as aforesaid, to be surveyor or surveyors of the highways of every parish within the division, or for any hamlet, precint, liberty, tithing or town, or of and in the same division, for the year ensuing; and the said surveyors or surveyors hereof, and constables, headboroughs, tithingmen or surveyors of the highways, for the time being, or some of them, be notified to the parson or prebendaries so nominated, chosen and appointed by the said justices within six days after such nomination, by serving him or them with the said warrant or warrants, and if he or they refuse or neglect to pay the said surveyors their fees, then the said surveyors shall apply themselves to any justice of the peace within the division of the county wherein such highways are, and in default thereof to any neighbouring justice for the said county, and upon his or their making oath before such justice of the notice to the defaulter in manner aforesaid, the said surveyors shall repay all such charges as shall be allowed to be reasonable by the said justice, to be levied in manner as is likewise enacted by tit. 1 Gen. 1. 2. c. 57. sect. 2. All surveyors of the highways appointed by virtue of the act 3 Geo. 4 W. & M. cap. 12. shall within fourteen days after acceptance of their office, and every four months or oftner, if required by warrant from the justices of the peace, within all the highways, bridges, causeways, pavements, drains, ditches and water-courses belonging to such highways, with all nuisances or encroachments made upon them within the parish, township, village, hamlet, precinct, or otherwise, where they are surveyors, and give a true account in writing upon oath (for which oath no fee shall be taken by sect. 11. of this act) of all such highways, and especially of such defects as want to be repaired, and of the neglects of labourers, and of those who are obliged to find labourers or teams, to the justices at their special fessions; and all surveyors neglecting to give such account shall suffer the fine penalty, as if they had not time to execute the order of the said act and directed as by the said act is directed; unless they have some reasonable excuse, to be allowed of by the justices at their special fessions.

Also it is enacted by the above-mentioned statute of 22 Car. 2. c. 12. sect. 12. "That the surveyors shall appoint six days for the providing gravel, sand, and other materials, for the amendment of, and for working in the highways, having respect to the season of the year, and the weather, and giving notice publicly some convenient time before the several days, at which days all persons liable to the said work, shall attend and work accordingly: And the said surveyors, at the return of the defaults, shall make return every month after every default made, of such neglecting justice of the peace of the said county; and the said justice shall present the same at the quarter-sessions of the peace held next after such return made unto him; and the offenders shall respectively incur the fine forfeitures, pains and penalties, inflicted and appointed by the laws then in force for the amending of the highways."

It is enacted by 5 El. 1c. 13. "That it shall be lawful for the surveyors of the highways, for the better reparation and amendment of the ways within their several parishes and limits, where they shall be surveyors (if it shall be so to them thought necessary), to carry away, remove, and warehouse all small broken stones of any quarry or quarries lying and being within the parish where they shall be surveyors, without licence, controlment or imprisonment of the owner, so much as by their directions shall be deemed necessary for the amendment of the said ways; and that for default of any quarry lying within their several parishes and limits, or in default of rubble not to be found in any such quarry, it shall be lawful for every such surveyor, for the use aforesaid, in the several grounds of any person or persons being within the parishes and limits where they shall be surveyors, and near adjoining to the way wherein such repairoo shall be thought necessary, to carry away, remove, and warehouse all small broken stones of any quarry or quarries lying and being within the parishes where they shall be surveyors, without licence, controlment or imprisonment of the said persons, so much as by their directions shall be deemed necessary for the amendment of the said ways." But it is provided by the said statute, sect. 6. "That it shall not be lawful to any such surveyor, by virtue of the said act, to cause any rubbish to be dug out of any quarry or quarries, but only shall extend to such rubbish as shall be found there ready digged for the said quarry or quarries, and not otherwise by his or their licence and commandment; nor shall not extend or give authority to any surveyor to dig or cause to be dug any gravel, sand, or cinders in the houfe, garden, orchard, or meadow of any person, nor that it shall be lawful to any such surveyor to cause any more pits to be dug for gravel in any severall and inclosed ground than one only; and that the fame pit or hole so digged for gravel as is aforesaid, shall not by any way be in breadth or length, above twenty feet, nor shall be farther than the mouth; And it is further enacted by the said statute, sect. 6. "That every surveyor shall within one month next after such digging or pit made, cause the same to be filled and stopped up with earth, at the costs and charges of the persons; upon pain to forfeit to the owner of the land of the soil with which the said pit shall be made and digged, for every default five marks, to be recovered by action of debt, &c.

And it is farther enacted by the said statute, that every surveyor shall within the limits where he shall be surveyor, have authority to turn a water-course, or fitting of water, being in any highway or road, or any field of ground of any person whatsoever; next adjoining to the said ways, in such manner as the said surveyors shall think meetest.

But by tit. 26 Geo. 2. cap. 28. it is enacted; "That if any person shall, by reason of getting any gravel, sand, stones, chalk, or other materials, for any highway, or any other public use whatsoever, make or cause to be made any pit or hole in any common, heath, or waste ground, he shall forthwith cause the same to be sufficiently fenced off, during such time as it shall be continued open, and shall, within fourteen days after digging for such materials in any such pit or hole, cause the same to be defended, and if he shall not fill up the same, or cause it to be filled, and if he shall not fill up, slope down or fence off the same, and keep the said fence from time to time in good repair, one justice on view, or oath of one witnes, may order him to fill up, properly slope down, or fence off the same; and when any fence shall be set up, may order the same to be removed; and that if he shall not comply with such order in ten days after his receipt thereof, or the fence being left at his usual place of abode, and due proof being made, upon oath before any one justice, if the offence committed, of the service of such order, and of the refusal or neglect to comply therewith, such person shall forfeit not exceeding ten pounds, nor less than forty shillings, to be laid out in filling up, sloping down, or fencing off the same, and towards the repair of the roads in the parish or place where the offence shall be committed, and in such manner, as the justice shall direct; which forfeiture in case the same be not forthwith paid shall be levied by distress by warrant of justice, according to the law, practice, and usages, in this case hereunto, and in case of non-payment, to be sold by public auction by the justice or his deputy, and the money to arise by the sale of such goods, or the proceeds of the same, to be applied to the expenses of the said work, and after satisfaction of the same, the surplus to be paid into the county court, and applied to the expenses of the said work, and that this act shall be in force, and for the better accomplishment of the whole, and in case of any doubt in the meaning of any word or expression used in this act, the meaning thereof shall be the same as and in like manner as is used in the like words and expressions in the acts of 12 & 13. Eliz. c. 16, sect. 1. for highways and other public works, and the same words and expressions therein used shall be considered, as used in this act for like purposes; and for the better execution of the same."
It is ftaid, that the who wath lands next adjoining to a highway, it bound of common right, to fcor his ditches: but it is ftaid, that he who hath lands next adjoining to such lands, is not bound by the Common law fo to do, without fome special preftipation for that purpofe; and perhaps it is the better opinion, that he who hath trees next adjoining to the highway, and hanging over it to people, is bound by the Common law to fop the fame; and it feems cleaf, that any perfon may jutfly the lopping fuch trees, fo far as to avoid the nuance. 1 Haw. 213.

However it is enfaed by 5 Eliz. 1. 13. fept. 7. "That the hays, fences, dikes, or hedges next adjoining on either fide, to any high or common faring way, shall from time to time be diked, fcoored, repaired and kept low, by the owner or owner of the ground or foil, which fhall be inclofed with the faid hays, fences, dikes, or hedges afofale, &c."

And it is farther enfaed by 18 El. 1. 10. fept. 5. "That where it shall not repair, dicit, or fcor any hays, fences, ditches, or hedges adjoining to the highway, or common faring way, according to the true intent of the above-menfioned statute of 5 Eliz. 13. fhall forfeit for every fuch offence ten fhillings, to be leved by the surveyors, &c."

And it is farther enfaed by 3 & 4 W. & M. 12. "If any owner or occupier of lands next adjoining to any highway, not twenty feet broad, fhall neglect to clean or fcor their ditches, gutters and drains adjoining to the faid highways, or caufe the earth taken out thereof to be carried away, and lay fufficient trunks, tunnels or bridges where any cut-ways are into, the faid highways, for the fpace of ten days after notice thereof given by a surveyor, &c. every fuch offender fhall forfeit five fhillings, &c."

And it is farther enfaed by the faid statute of 3 & 4 W. & M. 12. "That the poftells of the land next adjoining to any highways, where they are not twenty feet bread, fhall from time to time and at all times, keep their hedges plaited, cut or pruned, fa to none tree, bath or thard fhall fland or grow in fuch highway, nor bough or branch be fuffered to hang over the fame, or any part thereof; but the faid hedges fhall be kept cut and pared right up from the roots, and not permitted in any fорт to fpread into or hang over the highway, or any part thereof, to the end that there may be a free and clear paffage for the travellers, and all forts of carriages laden, without being any ways prejudiced or obftructed by any hedges, trees, bushes, or branches whatsoever, and that the fun may freely shine into the fold ways to dry and amend the same.

Also it is further enacted by the above-mentioned statute of the 18 El. 1, cap. 5, sect. 6. "That every occupier of lands adjoining to the grounds adjoining to any highway, or common faring way, where any ditching or fouling should or ought to be as aforesaid, shall from time to time, as need shall require, ditch and scour in his own grounds so adjoining, whereby the water contained in the ditches over the ground next adjoining, may have pillage over such next ground so adjoining; on pain of forfeiture for every time so offending for every rod not to be ditched and scoured, twelve pence.

And by Stat. 7 Geo. 1. b. 2. c. 52. sect. 8. "If any person who ought to scour and keep open such ditches and water-courts adjoining to highways, and not to remove any annoyances shall, by the space of thirty days after notice given by the surveyors, neglect to do the same, or shall leave the earth of ditches foured in the highways for eight days, eath being made thereof by the surveyors before the justices at their special seions; such offender shall be fined by the surveyors for ditching not so foured and kept open to forfeit two shillings and fixpence, and for each other offence aforesaid, any sum not exceeding five pounds nor under twenty shillings, to be levied by ditches and file; which forfeitures shall be applied by the surveyors to the amendment of the highways: And the surveyors are authorized to order and keep open such ditches and water-courts, and to remove all annoyance, and where the ditches and drains are not sufficient to carry off the water, to make new ditches and drains through the lands adjoining, and keep them open.

Stat. 7 Geo. 2. cap. 9. sect. 1. "If the surveyors of the highways shall find any highway deep and foundrous, and the hedges adjoining to be so high as to prevent the benefit of the sun and winds, it shall be lawful for such surveyors to make presentment of such hedges to the justices of the peace, who live in or near the division where the highway is, at their special seions held for such purpoes; which justices, or two of them, are empowered to order and keep open the lands, where the hedges are, to presde to appear at the next public meeting of the justices, to shew cause why such hedges should not be new made or cut low; and if it shall appear that such highway is deep and foundrous, and damaged by the height of such adjoining hedges, the justices of the peace, or any of them, are required to direct the surveyors that the surveyors of the highways of the parish where such hedges are; directing such surveyors to leave notice in writing at the place of abode of such persons, that they are required to new-make or cut low the said hedges, within thirty days after such notice (provided such notice be given between the 8th of September and 8th of February); and in case of their neglect to do the same, the surveyors are required to cause the hedges to be new-made or cut low, so as such hedges be left three foot high above the bank.

 Sect. 2. Such persons as shall neglect to new-make or cut low such hedges, shall repay to the surveyors such reasonable charges as may have been laid to on that occasion, and in case of neglect to repay such expenses within fourteen days after the same shall have been demanded, the justices at their monthly or other public meeting, in or near the division where the hedges are situated, are to issue out a precept to the confederate and bothholders, or other officers of the place, requiring them to levy for the payment of such surveyors, such sums of money as the said expenses shall amount unto, upon the goods of such persons as have neglected to pay the same.

Sect. 3. Provided, that nothing herein shall alter the laws in relation to timber trees, which grow in hedges adjoining to the highways.

As to removing trees and bushes from the highways, it appears from the above mentioned statute of Winchelsea, cap. 5. that no small tree or bush, whereby a man may lurk to do hurt, ought to be suffered to stand within two hundred feet of either side of a highway leading from one market town to another.

And it is further enacted by the said statute of 5 El. 15. sect. 7. That all trees and bushes growing in the highways, should be cut down by the owner or owners of the ground so enlarged by the said statute of 18 El. cap. 10. sect. 7. That whoever shall not cut down or keep low all trees and bushes growing in or next adjoining to any the said ways, according to the intent of the above mentioned statute of 5 El. 15. should forfeit ten shillings.

As to the manner all other annoyances obstructing the highway are to be removed, it seems clear, that by the Common law any one may abate a nuisance to a highway, and remove the materials, but not convert them to his own use; also it seemeth, that an heir may be indicted for continuing an incroachment, or other nuisance to a highway, begun by his ancestor, because such a continuance thereof amounts in the judgment of law to a new nuisance 1 Hawk. 214.

But the common law not having been thought sufficiently to have provided against mickefs of that kind, it was enacted by the above mentioned statute of 18 El. 10. par. 7. "That no person having any ground adjoining to any highway, or common faring way, leading to any market town, shall cast or scour any ditch, and throw or lead or cast thereof into the highway, and suffer it to lie there by the space of fix months to the annoyance of the said highway, or common faring way; upon pain of forfeiture for every load of soil cast into the highway, or common faring way, in ditching or scouring, twelve pence: And that the surveyors may make fines through banks occasioned by the casting such soil into an highway.

And it is farther enacted by the said statute of 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 12. That no person shall lay in any highway, not twenty feet broad, any flone, timber, straw, dung or other matter, whereby the fame shall be any ways obstructed or annoyed; on pain to forfeit for every such thing, etc. And it is enacted by the same statute, That if any timber, stone, hay, straw, flubble or other matter for the making of dung, or on any other pretence whatsoever, shall be laid in any such highway as aforesaid, whereby the fame shall be any ways obstructed or annoyed, the owners or poileffors of the lands next adjoining to the said highway, shall clear the said way by removing the said timber, stone, hay, straw, dung or other matter, and have, take, and dispose of the same to his and their own use; and if any such owner or occupier of lands next adjoining to the said highways, shall neglect to clear the said ways of the said nuisances, he shall forfeit five shillings, etc.

As to the punishment of persons for taking away things made use of for the benefit of highways, it was enacted by the above-mentioned statute of 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 20. "That every person who shall pull up, cut down or remove any part, block, great flone, bank of earth or other security, which was set up, placed, and made for securing any horse or foot eafy in a publick highway, from waggons, wains and carts, shall, upon complaint to any justice of the peace of the place or division where such offence shall be proved by the oath of one credible witnes, etc. forfeit twenty shillings, one moiety thereof to the surveyors, etc. and the other moiety to him that shall discover the same.
it is enacted by the above-mentioned statutes of 22 Geo. 2. c. 12, par. 6. and 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 39. and also by 6 Ann. c. 29. and 9 Ann. c. 18. and 1 Geo. 1. sft. 2. c. 11. that no travelling waggain, wain, cart or carriage, wherein any burdens, goods and wares shall be carried or drawn, or whereof the said horse shall be as shall be employed in or about husbandry and manuring of land, and in carrying of hay, straw, thorn, untheaded, chalk, timber for shipping, materials for building, stones of all sorts, or such ammunition or artillery as should be for the service of his Majesty, his heirs or successors, shall at any time be drawn, or go in any common or public highway or road, above with five horses, oxen, or beasts in length, (except only where such five horses, &c. shall not be sufficient to draw such cart or waggon up any steep hill, or out of any foul place, in which case it shall be lawful to join any horses from any cart or waggon then travelling that road, with the consent of the owner or driver of such cart or waggon, to help such insufficient horses up such steep hill, or out of such foul place,) on pain of forfeiting five pounds, one moiety to the surveyor of the highways of the place where such offence shall have been committed, and the other moiety to him who shall recover thereof, and prosecute for the same, to be levied by diffrets of all or any of the horses, oxen or beasts of any person offending against the said statutes, which diffrets may be made by any person whatsoever, (without any warrant, as it is feemeth from 9 Ann. c. 18.) and the beasts or diffrets that shall be distrained are to be delivered forthwith to the surveyor of the highways, or other parish officer, of the place where the offence shall be committed; and if the said penalty be not paid within three days, the said surveyor or other parish officer may, by warrant of one justice of the peace, sell such horses, oxen, and delivered the same, or raised thereby to the said justice, who is to distribute the penalties in the manner above directed, rendering the overplus to the owner, the charges being first deducted; and if the offender shall immediately pay the said penalty to the person who shall make such diffrets, or to the surveyor, or other parish officer where the offence shall be committed, then the person so receiving the same shall deliver it to the next justice of the peace, to be by him distributed as aforesaid. Provided that if any person shall refuse or neglect to carry any of the said beasts by him distrained to the surveyor, or other parish officer as aforesaid, he shall forfeit twenty pounds, and all his goods, and every warrant of one justice of the peace, &c. And if any surveyor, or other parish officer, shall refuse or neglect to deliver any sum of money, or penalty by him received to the said justice, he shall forfeit twenty pounds, to be levied, &c. as aforesaid.

And it is further enacted by the said statute of 9 Ann. c. 18. That if any person employed by any carrier, or other person subject to the penalties mentioned in the said act, shall drive, or assist in the driving of any travelling waggon, &c. with more than six horses, &c. the person offending shall forfeit five pounds, to be levied, and disposed of in like manner as the forfutes before mentioned are directed and appointed.

Stat. 5 Geo. 1. cap. 12. sect. 1. No waggon, travelling for hire, shall go or be drawn with more than six horses; and no cart, travelling for hire, shall go or be drawn with more than three horses (four horses by 16 Geo. 2. c. 12. sect. 10. of eight objections. Why is not the person who feized, and is to have the benefit of the future reason of excluding informers where there is a penalty? Making proof muit mean legal proof. The other also is but natural justice. There are exceptions in the act as to one horse, or piece of timber, tho' drawn by ever so many, &c. It was discharges with costs. Stron. 1181. Hill, 16 Geo. 2. Rex v. Ber}]
As to empty carriages left in the highways, by flat.

30 Geo. 2. cap. 22. sect. 8. It is enacted, That if any person shall set, place or leave any empty waggon, cart, or dray, in any public highways, so as in any manner to interrupt or hinder the free passage of any other carriages, or of his Majesty's subjects, except only during such reasonable time as the same shall be loading; he shall, on conviction by confession, or oath of one witness, before one justice, forfeit any sum not exceeding twenty shillings by distress; and for want of sufficient distress, to be committed to the house of correction, or some other prison of the place in which the offence shall be committed, or the offender shall be apprehended, to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding one calendar month.

Sec. 12. That all penalties and forfeitures for offences against this act on the public highways, shall be applied one moiety to the informer, and the other moiety to the surveyor of the highways, in the parish where the offence shall be committed, to be by him applied in the repair of the highways within such parish.

Sec. 13. And if the offender shall refuse to discover his name and place of abode to the justice before whom he shall be brought, he shall be immediately delivered over to a constable or other peace officer, and shall by him be conveyed to the common gaol or house of correction of the place where the offence shall be committed, there to remain until he shall declare his name and place of abode, to the said justice, or to some other justice of such place.

Sec. 14. And any person who shall fail to answer any question committed against this act, may, by authority of this act, and without any other warrant, apprehend the offender; and shall, with all convenient speed, convey or deliver him to a constable, or other peace officer of the place where the offence shall be committed, or the offender shall be apprehended, in order to be conveyed before a justice, there to be dealt with according to law.

Sec. 15. Provided, That persons punished by this act shall not be punished by any former law.

10. Nuisances by unlawful breadth and tire of wheels, and by riding upon carriages, or mischief-beaver of the drivers.

By the statutes 5 Geo. 1. c. 12. 14 Geo. 2. c. 45. 15 Geo. 2. c. 42. no travelling waggon for hire, (other than such as are employed in busbandry, and in carrying of cheets, butter, straw, corn unthreshed, coals, chalk, or any one tree or piece of timber, or any one stone or block of marble, carver, or the covered carriages of noble- men, or the carriages of any other person, or time of ammunition or artillery for the king's service) having the wheels bound with tires or tires of less breadth than two inches and a half when worn, or being fastened on with rude-headed nails, shall go or be drawn with more than three horses, between September 29 and April 15 yearly; on pain that every owner or driver thereof shall forfeit all the horses above three, with all gears, bridles, halters and accoutrements; to be seized, diarrained or otherwise recovered, as the number of horses above six in a waggon either in length, pairs or side-wags.

By the statutes 5 Geo. 1. c. 12. 6 Geo. 1. c. 6. 14 Geo. 2. c. 42. 17 Geo. 2. cap. 6. no person in London or Westminster, or within ten miles thereof, (unless it be with broad wheels upon turnpike-roads, 26 Geo. 2. cap. 30. sect. 5.) shall carry at any one load, in wagons or carriages, having their wheels fixed with iron, more than 12 feet of meal of five bushels each, or more than 12 quarts of malt, nor more than 7000 of bricks, nor more than one ton 12 cwt of coal, or coke; or be guilty of paying any one of the horses, with the gears, bridles and halters therewith used, on conviction in three days before one justice.

And by flat. 18 Geo. 2. cap. 33. the wheels of every car or wagon by mortal injury, shall be six inches broad in the felley, and not wrought about with iron, nor be drawn with above the number of three horses after they are up the hills from the water side; on pain of forty shillings, by warrant of one justice, by distress; and for want of distress, or non-payment in six days after demand, to be committed till paid: but this not to ex- tinct any other summons or suits, then or hereafter brought, for goods, or shall carry any goods half a mile beyond the paved streets of the said cities and places. And any person within the said limits, using any cart, car, or dray, having the wheels full six inches broad, when worn, may have the same bound round with tire iron, provided it be six inches broad, and made flat, and not fet out with rose-headed nails.

By flat. 1 Geo. flat. 2. cap. 57. sect. 8. If any person driving any cart, dray or waggon, in the streets of London, shall ride upon the same, not having some other person on foot to guide the same, he shall on conviction before the justice of the said place, or before any one justice, be convicted of one witness, forfeit 10s. by distress and sale; half to the informer, and half to the poor; and in default of payment, to be sent to the house of correction for three days.

And by flat. 24 Geo. 2. cap. 43. sect. 8, 9, If any carter, drayman, carman, waggoner, or other drivers, shall ride upon the same in London, or within ten miles thereof, not having some other person on foot to guide the same, he shall on the like conviction forfeit 10s. in case such driver shall not be the owner of such carriages; and in case he be the owner, then any sum not exceeding 20s. to be recovered, levied, and applied, as by the aforesaid act of the 1 Geo. flat. 2. cap. 57. sect. 8. And any person, though not a peace officer, may stop and apprehend such offender, and carry him as soon as conveniently may be before a justice; and if any person shall refuse, above, or prevent any person endeavouring to apprehend such offender, or when he is apprehended, shall refuse or endeavour to release him, he shall forfeit 20s. in like manner.

And, more generally, by the 27 Geo. 2. cap. 16. sect. 7. If the driver of any cart, car, dray or waggon, shall ride upon any such carriage, not having some other person on foot to guide the same, as are respectively drawn by one horse only, or by two horses abreast, and are conducted by some person holding the reins of such horse or horses, excepted 1) or if the driver of any carriage whatsoever, on any part of any street or highway, shall, by negligence or wilful misbehaviour, carry any kind of goods to any person contrary to the act of 1 Geo. flat. 17 Geo. 2. cap. 6. as respectively drawn by one horse only, or by two horses abreast, and are conducted by some person holding the reins of such horse or horses, excepted 1) or if the party shall not pay upon conviction the justice (by the afo) may commit him to the house of correction. 2 B. Jof. 187.

And by flat. 30 Geo. 2. cap. 22. sect. 7, 12. If the driver of any carriage within London or Westminster, or in any public street or common highway within the bills, shall by negligence or wilful misbehaviour intercept the free passage of his Majesty's subjects, he shall, on conviction by confession, or oath of one witness, before one justice, forfeit any sum not exceeding 10s. or shall be committed to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding one month, on the like apprehension of any of such justice.

And every such driver, offending in any of the aforesaid acts, and being convicted thereof, by confession, or oath of one witness, before one justice, shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 10s. or shall be committed to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding one month, on the like apprehension of any of such justice. And every such driver, offending in any of the aforesaid acts, and being convicted thereof, by confession, or oath of one witness, before one justice, shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 10s. or shall be committed to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding one month, on the like apprehension of any of such justice.

And every such driver, offending in any of the aforesaid acts, and being convicted thereof, by confession, or oath of one witness, before one justice, shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 10s. or shall be committed to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding one month, on the like apprehension of any of such justice.

And every such driver, offending in any of the aforesaid acts, and being convicted thereof, by confession, or oath of one witness, before one justice, shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 10s. or shall be committed to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding one month, on the like apprehension of any of such justice.
the offender shall be apprehended; and if there be no officer present, then to some other officer for the use of the poor as aforesaid.

And by sect. 9, 10. of the said statute, if the driver of any wagon, cart, car, dray, or other carriage, on any public highway, shall ride upon any such carriage, not having some other person to drive the same carriage, and the several carriages as are drawn by one horse only,
or by two horses abreast, and are conducted by some person holding the reins, excepted;) or if the driver of any carriage whatsoever, on any of the said highways, shall, by negligence or willful misbehaviour, intercept the free passage of any other carriage, or shall use any offence on the said highways; or if the driver of any emery or unloaded wagon, cart or other carriage, shall refuse or neglect to turn aside, and make way for any coach, chariot, chaise, loaded wagon, cart, or other loaded carriage, he shall, on conviction by confession, or oath of one witness, before one judge, forfeit any sum not exceeding 20s. by distress; for want of sufficient distresses, to be committed to the house of correction, or to some other person of the place where the offence shall be committed, or the offender shall be apprehended, to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month. The said defaults were and are made the object of the repression of the highways in the parish where the offence shall be committed, to be by him applied in the repair of the highways within such parish.

Sect. 11. And if he shall refuse to discover his name and place of abode to the justice before whom he shall be brought, he shall be immediately delivered over to a constable or other peace officer, and shall by him be con victed to the common gaol or house of correction of the place where the offence shall be committed, there to remain until he shall declare his name and place of abode to the said justice, or to other justice of such place.

Sect. 12. And in many cases when any such offence committed against this act, may by authority of this act, and without any other warrant, apprehend the offender,
and shall with all convenient speed convey or deliver him to a constable or other peace officer of the place where the offence shall be committed or the offender shall be apprehended, in order to be conveyed before a justice, there to be dealt with according to law.

Sect. 14. And any person shall be admitted to be an evidence, notwithstanding his being an inhabitant of the place where the offence shall be committed.

Sect. 15. Provided, That persons punished by this act shall not be punished by any former law.

11. How persons charged with offences relating to the high ways are to be proceeded against; and how such persons may de fend themselves.

It is enabled by the above-mentioned statute, 2 & 3 Ph.
& Mar. cap. 8. sect. 2. "That the steward of every least may inquire of the oaths of the suitors of all offences which shall be committed within the leet against every article of the said statute, and to affils such fines and amercements for the same, as shall be thought meet by the said stewards: and in such case, the said partnership, the quarter-feelions of every place may in quire of the said offences which shall be committed within the limits of their commission, and to affils such fines as they, or two of them, whereas one of to be of the guarum, shall think meet: And the steward of every least shall make fines indented of all the fines, foresaid and amercements for the defaults preferred before him, and shall deliver the one part thereof sealed and signed by him to the bailiff, and high constable of every hun dred, rape, latte or wapentake, wherein the default shall be preferred, and shall make the other part to the constable and churchwardens of the parish wherein the defaults were made, the fame to be yearly delivered within fix weeks after the feast of Michaelmas: And the clerk of the said place shall make the like effect indented of the fines, &c. for the defaults preferred before the justices of the place, &c. which effects shall be sufficient warrant to the said bailiff or high constable, to levy the said fines, &c. by way of different: And if no sufficient dif feres can be found by the said bailiff or high constable; or if the said offender shall obstinately refuse to pay the said fine, &c. and do not pay the same within twenty days after a lawful demand of the same by the said offi cer, he shall forfeit double the sum that he should before have paid.

And it is farther enacted by the said statute, sect. 3.
That every of the said bailiffs and head constables, shall at least once every year, betwixt the first day of March and the last day of April, make a true account and pay ment of all such sums of money (to the constable and churchwardens of every parish wherein the offences were committed, or two of them,) as he shall have collected upon any of the said effect to pain of, to forfeit for every time he shall not do, forty shillings.

And it is farther enacted by the said statute, sect. 4.
That all fines, &c. which shall be due for any offence against the provisions hereof shall be to the churchwardens of every parish wherein the offence shall be committed, to be bestowed on the highways in the said parishes: And the said churchwardens shall have authority to call the said bailiff and head constable to account before the juf tices of peace, or two of them, whereof one to be of the county, to give an account, information or otherwise: the which justices shall have authority to call the said churchwardens to account, and to commit the said bailiff and head constable to prison, till he shall pay all such arrearages as shall be adjudged by the said justices; and every of the said bai liffs and head constables upon their accounts shall have allowed for them, and shall make and pay, eight pence for his own pains, and twelve pence for the fees of the clerk of the peace, or steward of the leet, where the effect indented of every several parish that they shall deliver is as aforesaid; and the successors of every churchwarden shall have the like action of account against their predecessors, as is before appointed against the bai liff.

And it is enacted by the above mentioned statute of 5
El. c. 13. sect. 8. That every surveyor shall within one month after any default or offence against the said statute of 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 8. or the said statute of 5 El.
c. 13. present every year to the next justice of peace, on pain to forfeit for every such offence in such fort, not by him preferred, forty shillings: And that every such justice of peace unto whom any such offence shall be so preferred, shall certify the same presentment at the next general county seisin; on pain to forfeit, for not certifying of the same, any such presentment made in every deliver, five pounds; and that the justices of peace of every county where the said offences shall be committed, may inquire thereof at their quarter-feelions, and affils such fines for the same, as they or two of them, whereof one to be of the guarum, shall think meet:

And it is farther enacted by the said statute, par. 9.
That every justice of peace may of his own proper knowledge, in the open general seisins, make presentment of any highway not well and sufficiently repaired and amended, or of any other default or offence, contrary to either of the said statutes of 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 8. or 5
El. c. 13. and that every presentment made by any such justice of peace upon his own knowledge, if not arrears, shall be as good, and of the same force, strength and effect in the law, as if the same had been preferred, and adjudged by the oath of twelve men: And that for such default so preferred, as is aforesaid, the justices of peace of the said county shall immediately at the said general seisins, have authority to affils such fines, as to them, or two of them, whereof the one to be of the guarum, shall be thought meet: Saving to every person that shall be touched by any such present ment his lawful traverse to the same presentment, as he might have under his privilege for his whole entry by the laws of this realm before the making of this statute.

It hath been holden in the execution of this clause, that the party against whom such a presentment shall be made, cannot take any traverse to the want of repair of such highway: but it is agreed, that he may plead that some other
other person ought to repair the same, and traverse his own objection to it do. Neither it is obvious upon what reason the former opinion is grounded, that he cannot traverse the want of repair of such highway, for since the statute expressly saves to every person, who shall be touched by any such pretention, his lawful traverse to the same, as he might have to an indictment of treliefs or forcible entry, and it is for the defendant to any such indictment may traverse the whole matter alleged against him, why may he not as well have the same benefit in the present case? And though the record of a justice seating by force of any statute as a judge, be not traversable; yet it seems hard by such a general rule, to make any force not traversable, which by the express words of the statute, which authorizes the making of it, is allowed to be traversable: It is true indeed, that a precentment in a court leet is not traversable, unless it touch the party's freehold; but I do not see why such a precentment in purvisance of this statute should have the like privilege, since the statute hath no mention of such precentments in courts-leet, but gives the like traverse as is allowed by law upon any indictment of treliefs, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 217.

It is further enacted by the said statute of 5 El. c. 13. sect. 10. That all such fines, &c. to be suffered by the said general precentments shall be enforced in such manner, and employed to such uses and intents, as in the said statute of 2 & 3 Ph. & M. are appointed.

And it is further enacted by the said statute of 18 El. c. 10. sect. 8. That all justices of assize, judges of oven and terriers, and justices of the peace in their fellowships, and stewards of leets, in their leets, shall hear and determine every offence, matter and cause, that shall grow, come, or rise, by reason of the said statute.

Also it is enacted by the said statute of 22 Car. 2. c. 12. sect. 9. That if any person shall fall in his respective day's labour in every year towards the repairing of the highways, or neglect to send his respective carriage, &c. referred to by the county courts, to be enforced in such manner as the next justices of the peace, who ought, upon proof by oath of one credible witness, to levy by diffrets and sale of goods, &c. for every day-labourer failing as is aforesaid, one shilling and sixpence; and for every man and horse that shall make default, three shillings; and for every cart with two men, ten shillings; for every respective day wherein they shall make default; which penalties shall be employed towards the repairs of the highway, &c.

And it is further enacted by the same statute, sect. 10. and 3 & 4 Eliz. & Mar. c. 12. That the affeiments to be made by levying in the several of these statutes for the repairs of the highways, shall be levied by diffrets and sale of the goods of every person so affeimented, not paying the same within ten days after demand, rendering the overplus to the owner, the necessary charges being first deducted.

It is enacted by the said statute of 22 Car. 2. c. 12. sect. 4. That all deferts of repairs of cauces, pavements, highways or bridges, shall be presented in the county only, where such cauces, &c. lie, and not elsewhere; and that no such affeiments or indictment shall be removed by certiorari, or otherwise, out of the said county, till such affeiment or precentment be traversed, and judgment thereupon given.

And it is further enacted by the said statute of 3 & 4 H. & M. c. 12. That all matters concerning highways, cauces, pavements, and bridges, mentioned in the said act, shall be determined in the county where the same do lie, and not elsewhere; and that no precentment, inditement, or order, made by virtue of the said act, shall be removed by certiorari out of the said county into any other court.

Yet it hath been resolved, That if the quarter-seffions, under pretence of the jurisdiction given them by these statutes, take upon them to do any thing manifielly ex-cedding the same, to as much as make a barrier on forayors of the highways to make up their accounts were a special seffion, their proceedings may be removed by certiorari into the King's Bench, and there quashed; for the quarter-seffions have no manner of power given them to intermeddle in any such affairs, but only by way of appeal. 1 Hawk. 218.

A certiorari was granted to remove an indictment for not doing the statute labour in the highways, on producing a precedent where it was done, in the case of Rex v. Eckford, 12 Geo. 1. Strange 849. Mich. 3 Geo. 2. Rex v. Eckford. 12 Geo. 1.

An order was made on the 7 & 8 Will. 3. cap. 29, for the parishes at large to repair the highways, the 6d. in the pound levied on the inhit not being sufficient. And a certiorari being moved for, it was objected 3 & 4 H. & M. cap. 12, had taken it away; to which it was an-answered, that this act extended only to a bridge on a foulowk law, Sed per certiorari. They must both be taken together; the rate must be made in aid of the inhit, by virtue of the former law. So a certiorari was denied. Strange 944. Mielc. 6 Geo. 2. Rex v. inhabitants of Eckerfield.

Upon motion to quash a certiorari to remove an inditement against the defendants, at assizes, for not repairing a bridge; it was inflected, that by 1 Ann. cap. 18, the certiorari is taken away. To which it was answered, and resolved by the court, That this act extended only to bridges where the county is charged to repair; and that where a private peron or parish is charpe, and the right of suit in question, the act 3 & 4 H. & M. cap. 11., had allowed the certiorari, a certiorari shall not be refused to quash. Stran. 900. Easler. 4 Geo. 2. Rex v. inhabitants of Hammond.

It is enacted by the said statute of 3 & 4 H. & M. c. 12. That no person shall be punished for any offence against the said act, unless such offender be prosecuted for the fame within five months after the offense committed; and that no person who shall be punished for any offence, by virtue of the said act, shall be punished for the fame offence by virtue of any other act, or law whatsoever.

As to the manner offenders may defend themselves, it is enacted by the said statute of 3 & 4 H. & M. cap. 10. That no person shall be held criminally liable for any offence, or rate, or other act by the said justices of the peace, the general quarter-seffions of the peace may take such order therein as to them shall be thought convenient, and the same to conclude and bind all the said parties.

Also it seems to be implied in the construction of these as well as of all other penal statutes, that no one ought to be convicted of any offence against them, without having notice of the accusation made against him, and an opportunity of defending himself. And therefore I shall take it for granted, that generally no one ought to be punished for any of the above mentioned offences, without being called to account for his defence, and having the liberty to traverse the matter alleged against him; it is true that it is generally holden, that no traverse can be taken against a precentment by a justice of peace of his own knowledge, as to the want of repair; yet this opinion seems fully questionable. 1 Hawk. P. C. 219.

However it is certain, that in all other cases whatever is indicted or precentment in any court, except a court-leet, for any offence relating to the highways, may traverse the whole matter alleged against him in such indictment or precentment; but it is feemeth to be agreed, that he who is preferred for such an offence in a court-leet, can only traverse it by the act of the court, as passing thence, as changing with being bound to such repairs in respect of the tenure of his lands, &c. for which purpose it is certain, that he may remove it by certiorari into the King's Bench, and there traverse it; also there is no doubt but that after conviction, or upon a demurrer or confition, any one may take exceptions to any such indictment or precentment, and apply for want of prosecution in the court in diresctionwill very rarely suffer a man to take such exceptions, before such conviction or confition, without a certificate that the ways are in good repair. 1 Hawk. P. C. 219.

Therefore, for the better understanding in what cases it may lay to, in certiorari or precentment of this kind, I shall lay down, says Mr. fergeant Hawkins, the following rules concerning them.
First, That it is safe in every such indiction to fly both the place from which, and also the place to which the way supposed to be out of repair doth lead, yet except for want of such certainty, there sometimes been declared that a nuance can be indited for in these cases; but there is no necessity to fly that a highway leads to a market town, because every highway leads from town to town. 1 Hawk. P. C. 219.

2dly, That it is necessary in every such indiction expressly to fly in what place the nuance complained of is situated, which cause an indiction for flying a way at D, leading from D. to C. is not good; for it is impossible that a way leading from D. should be in D. and no other place is alleged. 1 Hawk. P. C. 219.

3dly, That every such indiction ought also certainly to fly to what part of the highway the nuance did extend, as by flyng how many feet in length, and how many feet in breadth it contained, or otherwise the defendant will neither know of the certainty of the charge, against which he is to make his defence, neither will the court be able from the record to judge of the greatness of the offence, in order to affix a fine answerable thereunto; same manner ground without thing added. All that an indiction for flying a certain part of the King's highway at K. is naught, for the uncertainty thereof. Alto it hath been resolved, that the place wherein such a nuance is alleged, is not sufficiently ascertained in such an indiction, by flyng that it contained so many feet in length, and so many in breadth, by ellimation. 1 Hawk. 319, 220.

4thly, That every such indiction must fly, that the way wherein a nuance is alleged, is a common highway, for which cause it hath been resolved, That an indiction for a nuance to a horfeway, without adding that it was a highway, is naught: and upon the same ground it fmethe also, That an indiction for a nuance to a common footway to the church of D. for all the parishioners of D. is not good; yet it seems, if to those last words, viz. for all the parishioners of D. had been omitted, such an indiction might be maintained. 1 Hawk. 220.

5thly, That it is not safe in an indiction against a common perfon for not repairing a highway, which he ought to have done in respect of the tenure of certain lands, barely to say that he was bound to repair it ra_ nson warrant to ground without thing added. All that an indiction for repairing a certain part of the King's highway, if he had been repaired, and that in an indiction against a bishop, &c. for not repairing a highway, in respect of certain lands, it ought to be flown in what capacity he ought to repair it, because otherwise it cannot be known in what capacity the process is to be awarded against him. 1 Hawk. 220.

6thly, That every such indiction the fact alleged against the defendant must be expressed in such proper terms, that it may clearly appear to the court to have been a nuance; and for this cause it hath been resolved, That a premissent for diverting a highway is not good, because a highway cannot be diverted, but must always continue in the same place where it was, however it be obstructed, and a new way made in another place. 1 Hawk. P. C. 220.

But it hath been resolved, That an indiction against a man for flogging a highway in his own land, is good, without laying the offence done of & armi. Also it is said that a premissent that a highway in such a place is decayed by the default of the inhabitants of such a town, is good, without naming any perfon in certainty. But it hath been adjudged, that an indiction against particular persons must specially charge them every one; for which cause it hath been resolved, that an indiction against general for not repairing or conserving a street, that they, &c. non devulgata, did not rely upon, them. 1 Hawk. P. C. 220.

By that. 1 Geo. 1. B. 2. s. 52. fol. 12. Perfon's argued by any thing done on that act (except those who shall fill the nuance, and carry away the earth taken out of them, or shall obstruct the road, or fume, timber, fish or dung left in the highways, or who shall not remove any other annoyance by water.)

Courts may appeal to the next sessions, whose order shall conclude and bind all parties.

Stat. 5 Geo. 2. cap. 33. sect. 1. If any perfon shall wilfully and maliciously throw down or destroy any turnpike-gate, or any post, rail, or other fence belonging to any turnpike-gate, erected to prevent puffing without paying the toll directed by any act of parliament made or to be made, and shall be convicted before his Majesty's justices of affine, oyer and terminer and general gaol-delivery; every perfon so offending shall be adjudged guilty of felony; and the court before whom such person shall be tried, shall have power to transport such felon for seven years.

Sect. 2. If such offender shall return into Great Britain or Ireland before the expiration of seven years, he shall suffer death with the benefit of clergy.

Sect. 3. The commissioners appointed to put in execution any act of parliament for repairing the highways, or making rivers navigable, may out of the tolls discharge the costs of any action or prosecution, which shall be commenced or maintained by the pulling down or destroying any turnpike-gate, post, rail, or other fence, belonging to any turnpike-gate, or any turnpike house, or any lock, sluice, or other works, or any navigable river erected by authority of any act of parliament.

Sect. 4. If the commissioners, appointed to put any act of parliament in execution, shall not have power by erecting or maintaining any such gates, where they have not power to erect such gates, it shall be lawful for justices of peace in quarter-seions, upon complaint, in a summery way to hear and determine the fame, and to order the sheriff to remove such gates.

Sect. 5. This act shall continue for five years from the 24th of June 1732. [Further continued by several acts, and made perpetual by 27 Geo. 2. cap. 16.]

Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 20. § 1. If any perfon shall wilfully or maliciously pull down, or destroy any turnpike-gate, or any post, rail, wall, charge, bar or fence, belonging to any turnpike-gate set up to prevent puffing without paying any toll laid and directed by act of parliament made or to be made, or any house for the use of such turnpike gates, or any lock, sluice, or other works on any navigable river erected by authority of parliament, or forcibly refuse any person being lawfully required to pass any of the offences before mentioned; every perfon so offending shall be adjudged guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

Sect. 2. If any perfon shall wilfully and maliciously draw up any good-gate, erected by authority of parliament upon any navigable river; erecting or maintaining, being convicted upon the oath of one witnes before two justices of peace for the county or place, or of the adjacent county, shall be sent to the house of correction and kept to hard labour for one month.

Sect. 3. Every offence afo said may be determined in any adjacent county in England.

Sect. 4. No attainer for any of the offences made felony by this act, shall work corruption of blood, loss of dower, or forfeiture of lands and goods.

Sect. 5. If any perfon shall commit any of the offences declared to be felony by this act; and being out of prifon shall discover and cause to be apprehended one or more, who shall commit any such offence, so as they be convicted; every such perfon, on conviction of the offenders, shall have his Majesty's pardon for the felonies afobefore.

Sect. 6. The inhabitants of every hundred in England, within which a turnpike-road is not exempted, shall make satisfaction for the damages, and the said damages may be recovered by action of debt, &c. in the name of the clerk of the peace of the county, without naming the name of the clerk of the peace; and the damages to be recovered shall be to the use of the trustees or proprietors of any turnpike or navigable river; (the same to be recovered against the inhabitants of such hundred not exempted.)

"the highways." This seems to be descriptive only of such offences as are the objects of turnpike acts, such as passing without paying the toll, taking off horsecars or waggons, paying the toll grossly, and the like, but whether such and is the offence of failing or neglecting to do the statute labour. Besides this, the intention of sect. 11. of this act is for the encouragement of informers, by giving the whole penalty to them for their own benefit. Now the surveyors of the highways can never be within the meaning of this clause, because by the 23 Car. 2. and 1 Geo. 3. be bound to inform: The words are, "he shall give an account thereof, and it is a mischiefe in him to omit it. If the clause in question should extend to the highways in general, the confecution of falsifying and not only by an affidavit upon land; because if the penalties, which by the former acts were ordered to be applied towards repairing them, were wholly vested in the informer, there would be no funds for that purpose. But what seems absolutely decisive of this point is the recital in sect. 28 Geo. 2. cap. 17. sect. 15, which immediately follows the next act.

Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 50. [intituled, An act for the amendment and preservation of the publick highways and turnpike roads of this kingdom, and for the more effectual execution of the laws relating thereto.] Whereas by the great number of highways, turnpike roads, vehicular traffic, and carriages, and their various weights and burdens, and increase and upon the same, the small breadth and narrow dimensions of the fields of the wheels of such waggons and carriages respectively, the great part of the said highways and turnpike roads of this kingdom, and the excessive weights and burdens loaded and carried and in upon the same, and the small breadth and narrow dimensions of the fields of the wheels of such waggons and carriages respectively, the great part of the said highways and turnpike roads are become ruinous, and almost impassable, and unless a speedy remedy be had in the premisies, all the provisions made by law for the highways and roads, and for maintaining and keeping the same in repair, will in great measure be rendered ineffectual and compensating, and commencing to be thereby greatly prejudiced and obstructed: Wherefore for remediuing and preventing the said misciefs and inconveniences for the future; it shall not be lawful for any waggons, wain, cart or wheel-carriage whatsoever (other than and except as herein after-mentioned) to travel, pass or be drawn in any turnpike-road, unless the felies of the wheels of every such waggons, wain, cart or wheel-carriage respectively, be of the breadth or gauge of nine inches from side to side at the least; and every owner or owners of such waggons, wain, cart or wheel-carriage, drawn, driven or conveyed in or upon such turnpike-road, carriage, draught or direction, tenor and true meaning of this act, shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay the sum of five pounds, to be recovered and applied in such manner as herein after-mentioned, or otherwise shall forfeit and lose any one of the horsecars or beasts of draught, drawing such waggons, cart or wheel-carriage, not being the thall or thall horse, together with all geers, bridles, halters and accouterments, to such horse or beast of draught respectively belonging, to the sole use and benefit of the owner or owners who shall feize or detain the same.

Stat. 2. And the owner or owners making such feizure, carriage, or direction other to deliver the horse, beast and things so seized and detained into the custody of the confiable of any other parish officer of any town, parish or place, in or near the place where such feizure or directions shall be made; and every such confiable or parish officer respectively, in and are hereby required to take and receive the same into his and their custody, and safely keep the same, and till the person or persons making such feizure or directions shall upon oath make proof, before some justice or justices of the peace of the offence committed; and the said justice or justices before whom such proof shall be made, and are hereby required to send his or their proctor or such confiable or parish officer immediately to deliver the horse, beast and other things so forfeited to the party or parties, who feized or detained the same, to and for his and their own use and benefit; paying such reasonable charges for keeping and securing the same, as such judicature or justices shall allow or direct; but in case no such proof shall be made within three days next after such seizure or direction, or within the said three days at any time after, and being feized or restrained, shall be returned back to the owner or owners thereof; such owner or owners paying reasonable charges for keeping and securing the same.

Stat. 3. Provided always, That nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any carriage or waggons, waggon, cart or other wheel-carriage, and other carriage thereupon or for calk, nor shall any thing in this act extend or be construed to extend to any waggons drawn by less than five horses or beasts of draught, or to any other wain, cart, or other wheel-carriages drawn by less than four horses or beasts of draught, or to any waggons, wain, cart, or other wheel-carriages, excepted where the same to be drawn in or upon any turnpike-road, with any number of horses or beasts of draught, and also for any waggons or other four-wheel carriage, having the felies of the wheels thereof of such breadth or gauge as aforesaid, to travel, pass, or be driven upon any turnpike-road as aforesaid, with any number of horses or beasts of draught exceeding nine feet; and for any cart or other two-wheel carriage having the felies of the wheels thereof of the breadth or gauge aforesaid, with any number of horses or beasts of draught not exceeding five, without being subject and liable to be weighed at any crane, machine, or engine, or to the additional toll of forty shillings granted and made payable for every waggons or other carriage drawn by six horses, by 24 Geo. 2. cap. 43.

Stat. 5. Provided, that it shall and may be lawful for any waggons, wain, cart or carriage other, having the felies of the wheels thereof of such breadth or gauge as aforesaid, to travel, pass or be driven upon any turnpike-road, or within any districts, for the extinguishing of the same, or the raising of such waggons, waggon, or carriage, excepted where the same to be drawn in or upon any turnpike-road, and to be for the extinguishing of the same, or the raising of such waggons, waggon, or carriage, excepted where the same to be drawn in or upon any turnpike-road, or exceed any number of horses or beasts of draught not exceeding eight, and for any cart or other two-wheel carriage, having the like wheels, with any number of horses or beasts of draught, not exceeding five, without being subject to any penalties or forfeitures for cauing the same to travel, pass or be driven by any greater number of horses or beasts of draught, than are now allowed by law.

Stat. 6. And whereas in and by several acts of parliament made and passed for amending and repairing particular highways and roads within this kingdom, several high and extraordinary tolls and duties are upwards, and to be levied and paid for waggons and other wheel-carriages, drawn by more than a certain number of horses or beasts of draught therein respectively mentioned, with an intent in effect to prohibit the passing of such carriages, and thereby the better to preserve the said roads: It shall and may be lawful for and to the trustees appointed or to be appointed, in or by virtue of any such act of parliament now in force, or now depending in parliament respectively, for repairing and mending such particular highways and roads as aforesaid, and for many other purposes, and for the better carrying on their respective duties; and they are hereby authorized and required to mitigate, lessen and reduce the said high and extraordinary tolls and duties, for or in respect of such waggons or other wheel-carriages only, having wheels of the breadth or gauge herein before preferred, in such manner.
manner as no greater toll or duty be demanded or taken for the fame, than is provided and directed by the said acts respectively to be paid and taken of wagons and other four-wheeled carriages drawn by five or four horses or beasts of draft; and the said trustees within their several districts, or any nine or more of them respectively, are hereby authorized and required to give directions in writing to the several colliers within their respective districts, to take and receive such tolls and duties and no other.

Sect. 11. And it shall and may be lawful to and for all trustees appointed, or to be appointed by any act or acts of parliament made or to be made for the repairing or amending any highway or highways within this kingdom, or any two or more highways, and they are hereby authorized and required, by writing under their hands to order the felies of the wheels of all wagons, wains, carts or other carriages, which are or ought to be of the breadth or gauge herein before directed and prescribed, to be measured and gauged at any turnpike or toll-gate, erected or to be erected upon any part of the highway or road in or upon which such waggon, wain, cart or carriage respectively shall travel, pass or be drawn.

Sect. 12. Provided, That in case it shall appear to the satisfaction of the surveyor or surveyors, gate-keeper or gate-keepers of any turnpike-road, that the felies of any wagon or wheel-carriages, travelling or pausing upon any such turnpike-road, were original, and had been made of the breadth of nine inches, and by long usage and wearing shall have been reduced to, and become of less breadth or gauge; then and in such case, it shall and may be lawful for such wagon or wheel-carriage to travel, pass or be drawn at any such turnpike-road, so as the felies of all the wheels thereof be of the full breadth of eight inches at least; and the owner or owners of such wheel-carriage shall not in such case be subject liable to the penalties herein before inflicted and directed to be levied for driving, or causing to be drawn, wagons and carriages the felies of the wheels whereof are under the breadth of eight and above the inches aforesaid.

Sect. 13. And if any person or persons shall hinder or attempt to prevent or obstruct the measuring or gauging the felies of such wheels, or the feizing or disarming any horse or beast of draught, hereby directed to be forfeited for the offences hereinbefore mentioned, or shall use any violence to any person or persons employed or concerned in such measuring, gauging, feizing, disarming, as aforesaid; every person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of ten pounds.

Sect. 14. And in case any person or persons shall drive or act as the driver or drivers of any wagon, wain, cart or carriage, having wheels the breadth or gauge wherein the direction and true intent and meaning of this act, or drawn with more than the number of horser hereby respectively appointed (except as is herein before excepted) upon any turnpike-road, that then and in every such case, it shall and may be lawful to and for the confible, right-thingman, or surveyor of the highways, or any other inhabitant of the parish or place where the offence shall be committed, and to and for the surveyor or surveyors of the said turnpike-road, and to and for any person or persons to be appointed by the trustees, or any five or more of them, to apprehend and take, or cause to be apprehended and taken such person or persons so driving or acting as driver or drivers as aforesaid, before one or more justices or justices of the peace for the county, riding or division where the said offence shall be committed; and upon conviction thereof either by the confession of the party, or by the oath of one or more credible witneses or witnesses to the said justices, or by the seales of any such person or persons so offending shall respectively forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of five pounds, to be laid out, applied and recovered in such manner as other penalties hereby imposed are hereby directed and appointed to be recovered and applied; and in case any person or persons so offending shall have no goods and chattels, wherein immediate distresses may be had and made for the same; then it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices and justices of the peace, by warrant under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, to commit the offender or offenders to the custody of any officer or officers of the peace within the space of one month, or until he or they shall have paid the said sum of five pounds.

Sect. 15. And if any owner of any wagon, wain or cart, travelling for hire, shall drive or cause to be driven, drawn or conveyed such wagon, wain or cart, in or upon any highway or highways, or on any turnpike-road, without having his and their several names and places of abode written or printed in large legible letters upon the tilt or other conspicuous place of such wagon; every person so offending shall for every such offence be subject and liable to such and the same penalties and forfeitures, as the owners of wagons or carriages having the felies of the wheels thereof whose breadth or gage aforesaid are, are made subject and liable by this act; and if any person or persons shall so write or print, or cause to be written or printed, any false or fictitious name on such wagon, wain or cart as aforesaid, every owner of such wagon, wain or cart, shall publicly use on any turnpike-road as aforesaid, with such false or fictitious name, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of fifty pounds.

Sect. 16. And the several penalties and forfeitures inflicted and directed to be forfeited and paid upon this act, and not hereby otherwise provided for, shall and may for the time being be enforced and levied on any person or persons who shall use or resort in form and prosecute for the fame, either by action of debt, bill, plaint or information in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, with treble suits of costs, in which no protection, wager of law, or more than one, shall be allowed, or by a summmary way or proceeding before any two or more justices of the peace for the county, riding or place, where such offence shall be committed at the option of the person or persons who shall prosecute for the same; and for which purpose it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices to hear and determine any of the offences against this act, and to receive the complaints of the person or persons aforesaid and required and required to be given in and for the form and in the manner and according to the form or information exhibited, or complaint made in that behalf, within ten days after such offence committed, to summon such party or parties accused; and the said writs or petitions to be either sides; and and in case the party accused shall not appear upon such summons, then, upon oath made of the committing any of the facts above-mentioned by one or more credible witnises or witnesses, to issue a warrant for apprehending the party offending within the jurisdiction of such justices; and upon the appearance or contempt of the party accused in not appearing (upon the proof of notice given) to proceed to the examination of the witnesses or accusers on oaths, to give judgment or otherwise dispose accordingly as the said justices shall think fit; and the said judgment of such offence, either by the view of such justices or any of them, or any such information as aforesaid, or on confession of the party accused, to award and issue warrants for the levying any pecuniary penalties so adjudged, together with the costs of such prosecution, on the goods of the offender, and to cause false to be made thereof in case they shall not be redeemed within five days, rendering to the party the overplus (if any there be) and where goods of such offenders cannot be found, to commit such offender to prison, there to remain for the space of three months, or until such pecuniary penalty or penalties be paid, and if any person or persons shall make false or fictitious statements or complaints, or shall within five days after such notice given enter into a recognizance with two sufficient sureties, before one or more justices or justices of the peace of and for such county, riding, liberty or place, where such appeal shall lie, to try such appeal at the quarter-sessions of the peace to be held for such county, riding, liberty or place, next and immediately after such notice given; and the said Justices upon hearing the matter of the said complaint, or upon due proof made to them of such notice of the county or part of it, as well as the person or persons by them they shall not prosecute the said appeal shall and may at their dispositions mitigate the penalties or forfeitures incurred by the party complaining, or vacate or set aside the conviction or convictions, or set the party or parties free from the said or any other £20.6. imprisonment, to carry into execution the fame, with such costs as to them shall seem reasonable; and also by their order or warrant to cause such costs to be levied by dittrefs and sale of the goods of the person or persons to give such notice of appeal as aforesaid, and for want of sufficient dittreffer to commit the party or parties to the common goal of the county, riding, liberty or place, wherein such appeal shall be heard and determined, for any time not exceeding two months, or until payment of such costs shall be made; and if the person ordered to pay such costs shall happen to live in any county, riding, liberty or place, without the jurisdiction of the said court, it shall and may hereby give such notice, within the peace of the county, riding, city, liberty or place, wherein such person shall inhabit; and every such Justices is hereby authorised and required, upon request to him for that purpose made, and upon a true copy of the order or warrant to cause such costs produced before him by some credible witnesses upon oath, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause the money mentioned in that order to be levied by dittreffer and sale of goods of the person ordered to pay the same; and if no sufficient dittreffer can or may be had, to commit such person to the common goal of the county, riding, city or liberty, for any time not exceeding two months, or until payment of such costs as aforesaid.

Sec. 17. And all the pecuniary penalties and forfeitures recovered and levied by virtue and in pursuance of this act shall be paid, applied and disposed of in manner and form, that is to say, in the first place, to the use of the person or persons who shall inform and sue for the same, and the other moiety thereof to the trussers for repairing the road where the said offence shall be committed, or to such person or persons as they, or any five or more of them, shall by writing signed with their hands order, direct or appoint, that the same may be applied for and towards the repairing of the said road.

Sec. 18. And all the laws made or hereafter to be made by any act or acts of parliament, whereby toll-gates or turnpikes are or shall be enacted to be made and erected, or tolls or dues for amending turnpike-roads or any other roads, or any other laws relating thereto, shall from henceforth be put in due execution; and for that purpose the trussers empowered to act under the authority of the said several acts respectively, or any five or more of them, are hereby required at their next and other publick meetings from time to time to make proper rules and orders, for the more effectual putting the laws in execution, and to appoint such person or persons as they shall think fit, effectually to carry on prosecutions for offences committed against this act, or any of the said laws, within their respective limits and districts; and to give strict charge and commission to their trussers and to the Justices of the several road districts, or any other officers or persons against any of the said laws shall come to his or their knowledge, to have been committed upon the said turnpike-roads respectively in those several districts, to give immediate notice thereof to one of the trustees belonging to the said roads, who shall forthwith procure a meeting of the trustees belonging to the said roads, or any five or more of them, who shall give immediate directions for prosecuting such offences.

Vol. II. No. 89.

Sec. 19. And this act shall be openly read in the presence of the said trussers as often as there shall be a meeting of the said trussers, and all those officers of them: And if any such officer shall be found to have been negligent in his duty required by this act, or to have omitted giving notice as aforesaid, every such officer shall be forthwith removed from his office by the said trussers respectively, for the want of them, and is hereby for ever after rendered incapable of holding any office whatsoever under the said trufit.

Sec. 20. And no person or persons who shall keep any viuailuing-house, ale-house, or other house of public entertainment, or who shall sell any wine, cider, beer, ale, spirits or other strong liquors by retail, shall be capable of taking, holding or enjoying any benefit of any of the roads, or the places of trust or profit under the trussers of any act of parliament made or to be made for erecting turnpikes respectively, or of farming the tolls thereby granted and made payable, during such time as he shall keep such viuailuing-house, ale-house or other house of publick entertainment, or shall sell any wine, cider, beer, ale, spirits or other strong liquors by retail.

Sec. 21. And in case any action or prosecution shall be commenced and prosecuted in pursuance of this act, under the authority of any of the said trussers or their substitutes, or any five of them; in every such case for the want of any of the said trussers respectively, or any five or more of them, shall out of the profits arising by the tolls of such turnpike road, allow and pay to the beneficiary so much as the costs allowed by the said trussers or their substitutes shall fall short of reimbursing him his just and reasonable expenses.

Sec. 22. Provided, that nothing in this act shall be construed to oblige the said trussers to commence or prosecute, or cause to be commenced or prosecuted, any action or proceeding for any such offences, unless upon the confession of them. And if any person or persons hereby authorized to make such application or witness can be had and produced, to prove the commission of such offence.

Sec. 23. And it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that if any action or suit shall be commenced against any person or persons for any thing done or acted in pursuance of this act, then and in every such case such action or suit shall be commenced and prosecuted within fix calendar months next after the fact committed, and not afterwards; and the same and every such action or suit shall be brought in the county, riding or place, where the person against whom such action or suit shall be brought is a resident, and not elsewhere; and the defendant or defendants in every such action or suit, shall and may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon; and that the same was done in pursuance of or by the authority of this present act; and if the said shall appear to have been done, or if any such action or suit shall be brought after the time herein before limited for bringing the same, or be brought in any other county or place than as aforesaid, then the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; or if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be nonsuitcd, or if the defendant or defendants shall have appeared; or if upon demurrer judgment shall be given against the plaintiff or plaintiffs; the defendant or defendants shall and may recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for recovery thereof, as any defendant or defendants hath or have in any other cases by law.

Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 17. Sd. 6. The trussers appointed by or under the authority of any act of parliament made or to be made for repairing and amending turnpike-roads, or any five or more of them, shall by the direction of the said trussers or their substitutes, or any five or more of them, if they shall give immediate directions for prosecuting such offences.

THE fame shall come to any turnpike-gate, with an intent to avoid the payment of any part of the tolls or duties to be thereat collected; each and every person being owner of such waggon or carriage, and being thereby convicted of being the truete of such tolls or duties, or any three or more of them, or one or more of the said fuperiors, or juflices, or warrant under the hand and seal of theoftware tolls or duties or any three or more of them, or the faid juflices or juries, rendering the overplus to the owner (if any) on demand, after deferting the reasonable charges of making fuch diffrets and fees, to be fettled by fuch truete in any one or more of such tolls or duties or any three or more of them, or by the faid juflices or juries; and each and every driver of fuch waggon or carriage, fo offending and being thereof convicted as afoforeaid, shall be committed to the house of correction for the space of one month; and in cafe any collector or receiver of the tolls or duties at any gate or turnpike, where to which any of thefe wheels or engines, or the weight of the weights or the breadth or gage of nine inches from fide to fide, to pafs or repafs through any fuch gate or turnpike without weighing thereof and being thereof convicted in manner as afoforeaid, fuch collector or receiver fo offending shall be committed to the house of correction, to be there kept to hard labour for the space of one month.

Sect. 9. Any waggon, win or other four-wheel carriage, not having the breadth of their wheels of the breadth or gage of nine inches from fide to fide, may travel, pafs or be drawn upon any turnpike road, provided every fuch waggon, win or other four-wheel carriage, be not drawn by more than fix oxen in pairs and two horfes, or eight oxen in pairs and one horfe; and that any cart or other two-wheel carriage, not having the felies of their wheels of the breadth or gage afoforeaid, may travel, pafs, or be drawn upon fuch turnpike road, provided fuch cart or two-wheel carriage be not drawn by more than fix oxen or neat cattle in pairs and one horfe, or four oxen in pairs and two horfes.

Sect. 11. In all cafes where by virtue of any act or acts of parliament now in force, the toll or duty on horfes or other beasts drawing or paffing thro' any turnpike bar or gate, doth not amount to more than the fum of one half-penny for every horfe drawing any wheel-carriage whatfoever, not having the felies of their wheels of the breadth or gage of nine inches from fide to fide, or to more than one penny for two horfes drawing any fuch carriages as afoforeaid, or to more than three halfpence for three horfes drawing any fuch carriages as afoforeaid, the truete or any five or more of them appointed by virtue or under the authority of fuch acts of parliament, shall and may, if they fhall find the fame neceffary, upon con- fidering the flate of their repective tolls, collect double the former tolls or duties, in cafe fuch tolls or duties do not exceed one halfpenny, and three halfpence in cafe the fame do not exceed one penny, and two-pence in cafe the fame exceed halfpence, may call for the additional tolls or duties which are direcdt to be taken by this act, in cafes where the prefent toll or duty amounts to two-pence or more upon the horfes drawing any carriage, in fuch and the fame manner as if such toll or duty was laid upon the carriage.

Sect. 15. Any act may be lawful for all courts, and all and every juflices or juries of the peace, before whom there shall be any action, information or proceeding, for any penalty or forfeiture inflied by any act or acts of parliament made or to be made for repairing and amending turnpike-roads, or any way resorting to or con- cerning the public road, riding, division or place, where the offence fhall be committed, upon the oath of one of more credible witnifes or witneffes, fhall forfeit and pay the fum of five pounds, which fur, in cafe the fame be not forthwith paid, fhall be levied by difcretes and sale of the offender's goods and chattels, by warrant under the hand and seal of the said truete or any three or more of them, or the faid juflices or juries, rendering the overplus to the owner (if any) on demand, after deferting the reasonable charges of making fuch difcretes and fees, to be fettled by fuch truete in any one or more of such tolls or duties or any three or more of them, or by the faid juflices or juries, and as such and every driver of fuch waggon or carriage, fo offending and being thereof convicted as afoforeaid, fhall be committed to the house of correction for the space of one month; and in cafe any collector or receiver of the tolls or duties at any gate or turnpike, where to which any of thefe wheels or engines, or the weight of the weights or the breadth or gage of nine inches from fide to fide, to pafs or repafs through any fuch gate or turnpike without weighing thereof and being thereof convicted in manner as afoforeaid, fuch collector or receiver fo offending shall be committed to the house of correction, to be there kept to hard labour for the space of one month.}

any forfeiture or penalty inflied as afoforeaid, to examine into the real merits of fuch prior forfeiture, action, information, proceeding or conviction; and if thereupon it fhall appear that the fame was not done, made or profec- cuted eflentially, to recover and apply the penalty or for- feiture to fide, fhall and may be made to the true and real ends and purpofes, for which fuch penalties or forfeitures were enacted, but to favour the offender; fuch prior forfeiture, action, information or conviction, fhall be deemed to be fraudulent and null and void to all intents and purpofes whatsoever; and every fuch act, juftice, verdict, or defree of the supreme court of this kingdom, to determine and give judgment, as if no fuch prior forfeiture, action, information or conviction had been made, had, profecured or obtained.

Sect. 13. No perfon fhall be qualified or capable of acting as a truete in the execution of any fuch act as afoforeaid, unlefs he fhall be in his own right, or in the right of his wife, in the actual pofterion or receipt of the rents and profits of lands, tenements or hereditaments of the clear yearly value of forty pounds, or profecured of or intitled unto personal estate alone, or real and personal estate together, to the value of eight hundred pounds, or fhall be intitled to and profecured of or intitled unto personal and real estate together, the value of eight hun- dred pounds. So help me God.

and if any perfon fhall profecute to act contrary to the true intent and meaning thereof, every fuch perfon fhall for every fuch offence forfeit and pay the fum of fifty pounds to any perfon who fhall fuc for the fame; to be recovered in any of his Majesty's courts of record at btit im- minifter by action of debt, or on the cafe, or by bill, fuit, or information wherein of, in the estate or property, of any one of the laws, nor more than one imparlance fhall be allowed.

Sect. 14. Every owner or owners of any common stage-waggon or cart, from and after the faid twenty-fourth day of June, having the felies of the wheels of lefs breadth and gage than nine inches, or fix inches from fide to fide, which are not made, or are not obliged by law to write or paint, or caufe to be written or painted, upon his or their waggon or cart, paint or caufe to be painted upon the tilt of every fuch waggon or cart which has a tilt, and upon the most confpicu- ous part of fuch waggon or cart which has not a tilt, the following words in large and legible characters, that is to fay, COMMON STAGE-WAGGON, or CART, as the cafe may be; and if any owner or owners of any fuch waggon or cart, from and after the faid twenty-fourth day of June, travel with or by himfelf, or under the name of afoforeaid waggon or cart, or any other name or names hereby required to be painted as afoforeaid, he fhall forfeit and lofe one of his horfes or beasts of draught, (not being the fhaft or tilt horfe) together with all the gears and accoutements to fuch horfe or beast of draught belonging, to the fole use and benefit of the perfon or persons which haf followed and taken the fame, and for the perfon or persons making fuch forfeiture or diftrefs fhall proceed in like manner, and be intitled to the like remedy, as is directed and given in cafes of forfeitures of horfes by the faid act made in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of his present Majesty.

And whereas many perfon are deterred from prosecuting offences committed against theveral turn- pike laws, and it is inconvenient to others being upon journeys, or engaged on necessary business, to profecute the fame as the law now stands: And whereas many laws have been made for and relating to turnpike-roads since 24 Geo. 2, and more acts of the same kind have likely been enacted, so that any person or informer may at his election sue for and recover any forfeiture or penalty, imposed by this or any aét or acts of parliament made or to be made for erecting turnpikes for repairing and amending turnpike-roads, or by any other act or acts, in the manner as such forfeitures and penalties are respectively and severally directed to be sued for and recovered, or by action at law, to be brought by such informer or prosecutor in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, in manner following, that is to say, in the suit, the plaintiff shall be liable to any such private party or corporation, it shall be lawful to sue for and recover the same by action of debt, in which it shall be sufficient to declare, that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of being forfeited by an aét intituled, An aét to amend an aét made in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled, An aét for the amendment and prejudice of the publick highways and turnpike-roads of this kingdom; and for the more effectual execution of the laws relating thereto; and where the penalty or forfeiture is or shall be liable to any such private party or corporation, it shall be lawful to sue for and recover the same by action of trover against the person liable to such penalty, in which the value of any such horse, beast of draught, or other goods, as is or are liable to the forfeiture, shall be given in damages without any proof of any seizure or demand.

Sec. 17. And every surveyor of any turnpike-road, and every toll-gatherer, and all such persons employed by commissioners and truresses appointed for the repairing roads, as receive salaries or rewards, who shall wilfully neglect to seize any supernumerary horse or horses driving in any wagon, wain or cart, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this and the said recited aét, and shall also wilfully neglect to lay such information upon oath before one or more of his Majesty's Justices of the peace for the county wherein such offence was committed, or before any body of commissioners for raising turnpike-roads or other meetings, as the by said recited aét is directed, shall, upon due information made upon oath before one or more of his Majesty's Justices of the peace for the said county or place, forfeit the sum of ten pounds; five pounds thereof to be paid to the informer, and the rest for the use of the commissioners and truresses in such manner as the commissioners and truresses for such respective turnpikes shall think fit.

Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 28. This aét was to continue only for seven years from the 24th of June 1758; it is therefore expired on the 24th of June 1765: But part of it is continued for the further term of seven years by the following aét passed last session.

Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 38. (Intituled, An aét to continue part of an aét made in the thirty-third year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, An aét to render more effectual the several laws now in being for the amendment and preservation of the publick highways and turnpike-roads of this kingdom; and for making further provisions for the preservation of the said roads.)

Sec. 2. Whereas by an aét made in the thirtieth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, An aét to render more effectual the several laws now in being for the amendment and preservation of the publick highways and turnpike-roads of this kingdom, it was, among other things, enacted, That during the time of seven years, to be computed from the 24th day of June one thousand seven hundred and fifty, every person driving, or causing to drive, such truresses appointed to or appointed to be appointed, by virtue or under the authority of any aét of parliament made or to be made, for making, repairing or amending turnpike-roads, or such person or persons as are or shall be authorised by them, shall and may do and commit any of the abovesaid forfeitures or penalties, and take for every wagggon, wain, cart or carriage, having the felles of the wheels thereof of less breadth or gage than nine inches from side to side at the leaf, at the bottom or side thereof, or for the horses or beasts of draught drawing the same, one half more than the toll or duties which shall be payable for any such carriage, or vehicle, or by any aét or aét of parliament made or to be made for making, amending or repairing turnpike-roads; except carts or carrasses drawn by one horse or two oxen, or by two horses or four oxen, having the felles of the wheels thereof of more than nine inches from side to side at the bottom from side to side: And it is by the said aét recited, That there are in several acts of parliament made for making, amending and repairing turnpike-roads, exemptions allowed from payment of costs in particular cases in the said afts respectively mentioned, and liberties allowed in particular cases to pay horse tolls than are charged upon other waggons, carts or carrasses, passing through turnpike-gates or bars; and that it would tend to the advantage and preservation of turnpike-roads, to confine such exemptions, liberties, privileges and advantages, to carryages with wheels of the breadth or gage of nine inches, or thereof; and that it would be reasonable to extend such time asfofaid, no perfons shall, by virtue of any of the said afts of parliament, have, claim or take, the benefit or advantage of any exemption from tolls or part of tolls, or to pay lesser toll for or in respect of any wagggon, wain, cart or carriage, or horses or horfes drawing the same, or in other carrasses of the turnpike-gates or bars, to pay, unless such wagggon, wain, cart or carriage, have felles of the wheels thereof of the breadth or gage of nine inches, except as before excepted: And it is therefy also enacted, That, during the time afofaid, it shall not be lawful for any wagggon or carriage, having felles of the wheels thereof of the breadth or gage of nine inches as afofaid, to pass upon any turnpike-road, or through any turnpike-gate or bar, unless the same be drawn by horses or beasts of draught, in pairs; provided, that where there is an odd horse or beast of draught, belonging to such wagggon or wain, it shall be lawful for such odd horse or beast of draught, to draw such wagggon or wain, together with the other horses or beasts of draught, drawing in pairs; and provided, that such horses, or beasts of draught, do not in the whole exceed the number of horses, or beasts of draught, allowed by law; and that it shall not be lawful for any wagggon or wain, having the felles of the wheels thereof of less breadth or gage than nine inches, to pass upon any turnpike-road, or through any turnpike-gate or bar, if the same be drawn by horses, or beasts of draught, in pairs, and not by oxen: And it is hereby likewise enacted, That any persons, or any of the persons hereby enacted, who shall, for the benefit of the owner of any common flag-wagggon thereby prohibited, shall be punished for the same by indictment or information, and shall, at the election of the prosecutor or informer, for every such offence, be subject to and liable to the like penalties and forfeitures as the owners of waggon and carriages, having the felles of the wheels of less breadth or gage than nine inches from side to side, are made subject and liable to, by an aét made in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, An aét for the amending and preserving of the publick highways and turnpike-roads of this kingdom; and for the more effectual execution of the laws relating thereto; to be paid and applied to such uses and purposes, and to be levied and recovered as is hereby directed; and that no composition shall be made for or in respect of any wagggon, wain, cart or carriage, having the felles of the wheels thereof of less breadth or gage than nine inches, as is hereby before enacted, except as excepted; And whereas it will tend to the advantage and preservation of turnpike-roads, that so much of the said aét as is herein before recited, shall be further continued — ed from the said twenty-fourth day of June one thousand four hundred and sixty-five, for, and during the time or term of seven years.

Sec. 2. Provided always, That nothing herein contained shall extend, or be continued to extend, to continue a clause, or words, of any statute, so as to take away or destroy the continuance of the said act, the trustees appointed or to be appointed by virtue of or under the authority of any act of parliament made or to be made for making, repairing, or amending turnpike-roads, and such person and persons as shall be authorized by them, shall and may, and they are hereby required and shall, if having, and shall, wains, carts and carriages, having the felleys of the wheele thereof of the breadth or gage of nine inches from side to side, at the bottom or sole thereof, and drawn according to law, to pass through any turnpike-gate or gates, bar or bars, within one hundred miles from London, up on paying only so much toll, or duty as shall not exceed one half of the full toll or duties payable for such wains, carts and carriages respectively, or for the horses, or beasts of draught, drawing the same, by virtue of any act or acts of parliament made or to be made for making, repairing or amending turnpike-roads; but the said clause, or any matter and thing therein contained, shall from and after the said twenty-fourth day of June one thousand four hundred and sixty-five cease and determine; except the wheels of such waggons and wains shall be fixed thereto, in the manner hereafter described and directed.

Sec. 3. And if it further enacts, That from and after the said twenty-fourth day of June, the trustees appointed or to be appointed by any act of parliament, passed or to be passed for the making, repairing or amending any turnpike-road, or any person authorized and appointed by them, shall, during the time aforesaid, permit and allow, or permit and allow, to waggons, carts and wains of all sorts, having the next or any smaller wheels, the use of the breadth and gage of nine inches from side to side, of any road of the highway, or any other place, where such road or highway is, or may be, continued, and shall be, by virtue of any act or acts of parliament, hereby authorized and directed, to be made and constructed, or to be used and employed, for the carriage of goods, waggons, carts and carriages, and every thing thereunto belonging; and if any person or persons shall think him, her or themselves, aggrieved by the determination of such justice, he, she or they may appeal to the general quarter-feelions of the peace, who shall finally determine the matter, and allow such carts not exceeding forty thollings to either party, as such felleys shall think fit; in which case no certiorari shall lie or be brought.
or any five or more of them, to receive and take, over and above the sum (as aforesaid, in the feu of 20s. a hundred weight, for every hundred weight which each fuch waggon, together with the loading thereof, shall weigh, over and above the weight of fix tons; and also the sum of 20s. a hundred weight, for every hundred weight which each fuch cart or other carriage, with the loading thereof, shall weigh, over and above the weight of three tons; and that the money arising from fuch additional duties of 20s. a hundred weight, shall be applied to the repair of fuch highway or highways, where fuch gate or gates, bar or bars, are or shall be placed; any thing contained in the failing thereof to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sect. 6. Provided always, That nothing in an aét, intituled, An aét for the prefervation of the publick roads in that part of Great Britain called England, paffed in the 14th year of his late Majefty King George the Second; nor in an aét, intituled, An aét to explain and amend an aét paffed in the 14th year of his Majefly's reign, intituled, An aét for the prefervation of the publick roads, in that part of Great Britain called England; and so much of an aét paffed in the third year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled, An aét for the better repairing and amending the highways, and for fettling the rates of the carriage of goods, paffed in the 21st year of his faid late Majefty, nor in this aét, fhall be underftood to compel the truftees of fuch turnpike-road to erect any crane, machine or engine, for the weighing carts, waggons or other carriages, having wheels of the breadth of nine inches, or to weigh the fame.

Sect. 7. And whereas inconveniences have arisen from making hedges or other fences, and from ploughing or breaking up the fole of lands or grounds near the middle or centre of turnpike-roads; for remedy thereof, Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That after the term of one year from the paffing of this aét, no person shal make, any hedge or other fence, on any turnpike-road not included on both sides, within the dilance of thirty feet, or plough or break up the fole of any land or ground within the dilance of fifteen feet, from the middle or centre of any turnpike-road made or to be made within this kingdom: And if any person fhall hereafter make, or cause to be made, any hedge or fence contrary hereto, within the dilance of thirty feet from the middle or centre of any turnpike-road, it fhall be lawful for the truftees for the care of fuch road, or any five or more of them, to cause fuch hedge or fence to be taken down at the expence of the person or persons to whom it belong; and in cafe fuch person fhall neglect or refuse to pay fuch expence to the faid truftees, or fuch person or persons as they, or any five or more of them, fhall appoint to receive the fame, it fhall and may be lawful for any one or more juftices or juftices of the peace for the county or place where the offence fhall be committed, by warrant under his or their hand and feal, or hands and feals, (which warrant fuch juftice or juftices is and are hereby authorized and empowered to grant) to levy the fame by diffrfs and fale of the offender's goods and chattels, rendering the overplus to the owner on demand: And if all men were to pafs into three classes, the leaff, the middle, and highbfe; and were valued at four pounds, the clas they were in; that is, if any injury was done, fatisfa(lion was to be made according to the value or worth of the man to whom it was done. The leaff were thofe who were worth ten pounds, or two hundred fhillings, and they were called vii diuuentori, or rubredians, to the number of 12, and were valued at six hundred fhillings, and were called fahbuidernmen, and their wives fahbuiderna; the highbfe were valued at twelve hundred fhillings, and were called rooffhuiderna, and their wives rooffhuiderna.

Homage (Homagium,) Probably derived from beamps, because where the tenant does this service to his lord, he says, I become your man; it is also called mancet. Co. Litt. fel. 64.

The French word import us much as fides eicentiorum; for in the original grants of lands and tenements by way of fee, the lord did not only tie his tenants to certain services, but also took a submition, with promis and oath to be true and loyal to him as his lord and liege. The submition was and is called homage, the form whereof you have the second figure 17 Ed. 2. in these words: When a freeman shall do homage to his lord, of whom he holdeth in chief, he shall hold his hands together between the hands of his lord, and shall say thus: I become your man from this day forth for life, to serve you, and to bear your homage, and shall owe you my faith, for the land I hold of you, and the faith that I owe unto our Sovereign Lord the King, and to such other lords. And in this manner the lord of the fee, for which homage is due, taketh homage of every tenant as he cometh to the land or fee, withall, lib. 9. c. 1. except they be women, who perform not homage, but by their husbands. Yet Fitzherbert in his Nat. Evec. s. 577. faith the contrary. The reason of this, Skena gave to the verb. sign. verbo Homagium, because homage specially concerneth service in war. He faith also, That consecrated bishops do no homage, but only fealty; and yet we find the archbishop of Canterbury, and the bishop of York, on his knees to our Kings at their coronation; and it has been held, that the bishop of Sothor in the Act of Mon., is homager to the Earl of Derby. And in the Reg. Orig. fel. 266. a woman taking lively of lands holden by Knight's service, must do homage, &c. Concerning the homage of consecrated bishops, see Hakluyt, and Fuller. This is observed in these words: By our law a religious man may do homage, but may not say to his lord, Ego devois homin us offerter, because he hath professed himself to be only God's man; but he may say, I do unto you homage, and to you shall be faithfull and loyal. See of this Britton, cap. 67. Homage is also taken in some cases to signify the pertinent respect or duty, as in the place where the services are to be performed, as in the French, homager, homage, homagium. In their Latin of the word, and otherwise. Homage is sometimes used for the jury in a court baron. Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 2. cap. 27.

The reason is, because it confineth most commonly of such as owe homage unto the lord of the fee; and these, by the Feudal Law, called Persons of Fee. Of homage you may read in the 29th chapter of the Grand Charta of Normandy, and others not used by us. See further in Hateman suisfit. de feudis, pag. 801. read Skene de verb. sign. tit. Homagium, to whom you may also add a large discourse in Specul. Durb. called Speculum etiam de feudis tertiis. Homage is sometimes used for the jury in a court baron. Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 2. cap. 27.

Homage anfeetrel, is, where a man and his anfeetrel, time out of mind, held their land of their lord and his anfeetrel by homage; and if such lord have received homage, he is bound to acquit the tenant of his homage, and to give him the free services of all other lords above him of every manner of service; and if the tenant hath done homage to his lord, and is impelled, and vouches the lord to warranty, the lord is bound to warrant him; and if the tenant lief, he shall recover in value against the lord so much of the lands as he had at that time of the oath and homage. To this effect Littleton; upon which Coke says, in his example here put, There must be a double prescription both in the blood of the lord and the tenant; and therefore I think, there is little or no land at all at this day held by homage anfeetrel. Yet (as one averse) in the manors of Harington in Hereforshire, whole lord is of the same name, and HOMICIDE, properly so called, is either against a man's own life, (called self-murder, or felis de se,) or the life of another. Homicide against the life of another either amounts to felony, or does not. That which amounts not to felony, is either justifiable, and causes no forfeiture at all, or it is involuntary, but loses the forfeiture of the party's goods.

1. Of self-murder, or felis de se.

2. Of justifiable homicide.

3. Of excusable homicide.

4. Of manslaughter.

5. Of murder.

1. Of self-murder, or felis de se.

In this, as well as all other felonies, the offender ought to be of the age of discretion, and corpus mensis; and therefore, that an infant killing himself under the age of discretion, or a lunatick during his lunacy, cannot be a felis de se.

1 Hauk. P. C. 67, 69.

2. Of justifiable homicide.

But here I cannot (says Mr. serjeant Haukinst) but take notice of a strange notion, which has unaccountably prevailed of late, that every one who kills himself must be non corpus de se; for it is said to be impossible that a man in his fenses should do a thing so contrary to nature and law, as to his own destruction.

If this argument be good, self-murder can be no crime; for a madman can be guilty of none. But it is wonderful that the repugnancy to nature and reason, which is the highst aggravation of this offence, should be thought to make it impossible to be any crime at all, which cannot but be by the forcing occasions the moral disposition, that none but a madman can be guilty of it; may it not with as much reason be argued, that the murder of a child or a of a parent is against nature and reason, and consequently that no man in his fenses can commit it? But has a man therefore no use of his reason, because he acts against right reason? Why may not the pations of grief and discontent tempt a man knowingly to act against the principles of nature and reason in this case, as those of love, hatred, and revenge, and such like, are too well known to do in others.

Homicide laws have always had such an abhorrence of this crime, that not only he who kills himself with a deliberate and direct purpose of so doing, but also in some cases he who maliciously attempts to kill another, and in pursuance of such an attempt unwillingly kills himself, shall be adjudged in the eye of the law a felis de se; for wherever death is caused by any act done with a murderous intent, it makes the offender a murderer; and therefore if A. discharge a gun at B. with an intent to kill him, and the gun break and kill A. or if A. strike B. to the ground, and then hastily falling upon him wound himself with a knife, which B. happens to have in his hand, and die, in both these cases A. is felis de se for he is the only agent.

But if B. being so assaulted, had been driven to the wall, and holding up a pitchfork or knife, flanding in his defence, and A. had hastily run upon the same, and been slain, B. should be judged to kill him in his own defence. And for the same reason, perhaps in the case above, if B. after he had fallen to the ground, had holden up his knife or sword in his defence, and A. had fallen thereon, and been slain, B. should be judged to kill him di se defendendo; for here B. exerts his strength in his own defence, and so does, as is received by A. 1 Hauk. P. C. 68. S. P. C. 16. H. P. C. 28. 29. Pult. 119. b. Crom. 28.

He who kills another upon his defence or command, is in the judgement of the law as much a murderer, as if he had done it merely of his own head, and the pardon the family has continued there many ages, is one W.J., a tenant, who can procure to hold his land of Thomas Whitney, Esq. the present lord, by homage ancestr:ed. Cawd. ed. 1727. Homicide, 1 is a jury in a court baron, confounding of the homage paid to the lord of the fee; and thee by the Feudalists are called Pares curiae: They in- quire and make prefrontments of defaults and deaths of tenants, admittances, and forraders in the lord's court, &c. Prift. f. 211. where it is noted per dominum factum, simul etenemento, homagium, quia in principis hujus guerre homagium faum reddiderat Regi Francia. Cawd. ed. 1727. Homofoken, or Hamfoken, and Hamfolk, (from the Sax. bami, i. e. domus, habitations, and sect, libertas, immunitas, ) is by Broniun. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 23. thus de- fined: Hoomfokeno (fchool) domus contra pacem De- minis Regis, vel infultus factus in domo extra pacem Domini. It appears by Rojald, that in ancient times some men had an immunity to do this. St quis homfocom violatores, iure Angilam Regii: emendat 5 lib. LL. Canuti. cap. 39. Homfokeno. Si quid prior tenet placitum in curia frons de his qui infringantur domum vel curiam alecium ad homogamiam, vel furandum, vel quicquid afferatum est, vel aliquod aliud facendum, contra voluntatem illius qui debet domum vel curiam. Ex Reg. Priora. de Cokesford. See Ham- foken.

Hoomfoken, Is also the privilege of freedom which every man has in his house; and he who invades that freedom is properly said facere homfoken. This I take to be what we now call burglarly, which is a crime of a very heinous nature, because 'tis not only a breach of the King's peace, but a breach of that liberty which a man hath in his house, which, as we commonly say, fhoul be his cottage, and therefore ought not to be invaded. Broniun. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 29. Du Cange. It is also taken for an impunity to those who commit this crime, viz. Homefoken, Ioct. 6. quietus offe de amer- ciamenitis pro ingreffa bolfitti violenter et fius laesur, & contra pacem Regii, & quod tencati placita de bolfijiendi transgressio in curia ejus. W. Thoro. p. 2930. See Dall. Homicide. (Homicidium,) Is the killing of a man, and is divided into voluntary and coafal: Homicide vol-untary is that which is deliberate, and committed of a fet purpose to kill; coasal is done by chance, without any intention to kill. Homicide voluntary is either with pre- cedent malice, or without. The former is murder, and is a felonious killing through malice prepended of any per- son living in this realm, under the King's protection. Wiff. jur. par. 2. Symbol. tit. Indictments, sect. 37. & c. qno 51. where you may see divers subdivisions of this matter. See Dall. & W. Tho. lib. 14. cap. 3. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 4. 15. 17. Beiron. lib. 5. cap. 6. 7. R. Justifiable homicide in the due advancement of public justice, relates either to criminal or civil causes. As to the first, it may be justified in several cases: as if a person having actually committed felony will not suffer himself to be arrested, but stand on his own defence, or fly, so that he cannot possibly be apprehended, or define himself, or put his goods or persons in the power of the constables, officers of police, or any without a warrant from a magistrate, he may be lawfully slain by them. 1 Hawk. P. C. 70. 37. 22 Aff. 55. Brs. Cor. 87. 89. S. P. C. 13. 3 Inf. 221. Dub. cap. 98. H. P. C. 38. Com. 30. 7.

If an innocent person be indicted for felony, where, in truth, no felony was committed, and will not suffer himself to be arrested by the officer who has a warrant to that purpose, he may lawfully be killed by him, if he cannot otherwise be taken; for there is a charge against him upon record, to which he is bound to answer. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71.

If a criminal, endeavoring to break the goal, affults his gaoler, he may be lawfully killed by him in the affay. 1 Hawk. 71.

If those who are engaged in a riot, or a forcible entry, or detainer, stand in their defence, and continue the force in opposition to the command of a just peace, &c., or resist such just endeavour to arrest them, the killing of them may be justified; and so perhaps may the killing of dangerous rioters by any private persons, who cannot otherwise suppress them, or defend themselves from them, inasmuch as every private person seems to be authorized by law to arm himself to the full extent of the public peace. 1 Hawk. 71. Com. 30. 6. 153. b. H. P. C. 37. Pech. 121.

If treafurers in a foileet, chace, park or warren, or any inclosed ground where deer are kept, will not render themselves to the keepers, upon hue and cry made to stand by; King's peace, but fly from, or defend themselves against them, they may be lawfully by force of the statute de malfactoribus in pariis, and 4 Will. & Mar. cap. 10. 1 Hawk. S. P. C. 13: b. Com. 30. b. Dyer 328. 57. 3.

If either of the parties fighting in a combat allowed by law, for the trial of some special case, be slain, he who kills him is justified, and the death of the other is imputed to the just judgment of God, who is preferred to give the victory to him who fights in maintenance of the truth. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71. Dub. cap. 98. Plow. Com. 9. b. 3 Inf. 221. 37 H. b. 214.

If a public officer in the due advancement of justice in civil causes may also be justified in some cases: As where a thief, &c., attempting to make a lawful arrest in a civil affair, or to take one who has been arrested and make his escape, is repelled by the party, and unavoidably kills him in the affay. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71. 1 Lev. Rep. 169. 1 Hawk. 5. 6. 31. Dub. inf. 65. Com. 34. Dub. cap. 98.

And in such case the officer is not bound to give back, but may stand his ground and attack the party. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71. H. P. C. 37.

But no private person of his own authority can arrest a man for a civil matter, as he may for felony. 1 Hawk. 71. Com. 38. Neither can the thief himself lawfully kill those who barely fly from the execution of any civil process. 1 Hawk. 71. H. P. C. 37.

As to justifiable homicide of a private nature, in the just defence of a man's person, house or goods, it may happen either by the killing of a wrong-doer, or an insolent person, in the making of such defence. And, first, the killing of a wrong-doer in the making of such defence, may be justified in many cases; as where a man kills one who affaulfs him in the highway to rob or murder him; or the owner of a house, or any of his servants, or lodgers, &c., kill one who attempts to burn it, or to commit in it some violent, or other felony; or a woman kills one who attempts to ravish her; or a servant coming suddenly and finding his master robbed and slain, falls upon the murderer immediately and kills him; for he does it in the height of his fury, and under just apprehension of the person making the attempt upon himself; but in other circumstances, he could not have justified the killing of such an one, but ought to have apprehended him, 1 Hawk. P. C. 71. 72. 24 H. 8. cap. 5. Dub. cap. 98.

Neither shall a man in any case justify the killing another by a pretence of necessity, unless he were himself wholly without fault in bringing that necessity upon himself; for if a man, in defence of an innocent person, &c., kill any person whatsoever, he is guilty of manslaughter at least; as where divers rioters wrongfully detain a house by force, and kill those who attack it with lions, and endeavour to burn it. 1 Hawk. 72. Com. 37. 7-5.

Neither can a man justify the killing another in defence of his house or goods, or even of his person, from a bare private trespafi; and therefore he that kills another, who claiming a title to his house, attempts to enter it by force and shoves at it, or that breaks open his windows in order to arrest him, or that perils in breaking his hedges after he is forbidden, is guilty of manslaughter; and he who in his own defence kills another that affaults him in his house in the day-time, and plainly appears to intend to beat him only, is guilty of homicide fo defendendi, for which he forfeits his good, but is pardoned of course; yet it seems, that a private person, and, a furtiari, an officer of justice, who happens unavoidably to kill another endeavouring to defend himself from it, it supposes dangerous rioters, may justify the &c., insomuch as he only does his duty in aid of the public justice. 1 Hawk. 72. H. P. C. 40. 57. Coryn. C. 35. Dub. cap. 98.

And I can see no reason, says Mr. Jerjeant Hawkin, why a person, who without provocation is assailed by another in any place whatsoever, in such a manner as to make it a murder, and as he is charging a pistol, or pulling at him with a drawn sword, &c., may not justify killing such an affiant, as much as if he had attempted to rob him: For is not he who attempts to murder me more injurious than he who barely attempts to rob me; and can it be more justifiable to fight for my goods, or persons, and life, or to be taken, and it is not more justifiable to be able to reason, that a man in such circumstances may lawfully kill another, but it seems also to be confirmed by the general tenor of our law-books, which speaking of homicide fo defendendi, supposes it done in some quarrel or affray; from whence it seems reasonable to conclude, that where the law judges a man guilty of homicide fo defendendi there must be some precedent quarrel, in which both parties always are, or at least may justify be supposed to have been, in some fault; so that the neces- sity to which a man is at length reduced to kill another by the manufacture presumed to have been owing to him- self; for can it be imagined, that the right of self-defence is founded on the highest reason, will adjudge a man to forfeit all his goods, and put him to the necessity of pur- chasing his pardon, without some appearance of a fault. And too it may be said, that there is none in chance- medley, and yet that the party's goods are also forfeited by that. I answer, That chance-medley may be intended to proceed from some negligence, or at least want of sufficient caution in the party, who is so unfortunate as to commit it, so that he doth not seem to be altogether faultless. Besides, one of the reasons given in our law- books for such homicide fo defendendi forfeits goods, is because there is a person, or a true man is killed; but it seems fur- fird, That he who apparently attempts to murder another, which is the most heinous of all felonies, should be esteemed such, when those who attempt other felonies, which seem to be much les criminal, are allowed to be killed as downwright villains, not defenting the protection of our law. 1 Hawk. 72. Aud. 41. Com. 37. 28. Dub. cap. 98. S. P. C. 15. a. 3 Inf. 57. Bov. 33. Dub. 98.

However, perhaps in all these cases, there ought to be a distinction between an affault in the highway and an affault in a town; for in the first case it is fast, that the person that is to justify killing the one that assaults is the one that is moti- vating back at all; but that in the second case, he ought to retreat as far as he can without apparently hazarding his
3. Of execuable homicide.

Executable homicide is either per injuriam, or de tendendo. Homicide per injuriam, or by misadventure, is where a man in doing a lawful act, without any intent to kill, and without any criminal negligence, suffers a person to be killed in the act of doing a thing, in which case the rider is guilty of homicide per injuriam, and he who gave the blow, of manslaughter. 1 Hawk. 73. 3 H. P. C. 58, 59.

Where a workman, having first given loud warning to all persons to fland clear, flings down a piece of timber from a height, and thereby kills one who happens to be underneath: But if any person flings down such a piece of timber idly in play, or even a workman fling it down in the streets of a town, where the danger is apparent in respect of the number of persons continually passing by, he is guilty of manslaughter. 1 Hawk. 73. 3 Keyst. 40. 4 Bro. 68. c. 4. 4 H. P. C. 31. 3 Bro. 292.

Where workmen flres through stones, rubble, or other things, from a house, in the ordinary course of their business, by which a person underneath happens to be killed: if they look out and give timely warning to those beneath, it will be his defence in misadventure; if without a labourer being at work with a hatchet, the head thereof flies off, and kills one who flands by. 1 Hawk. P. C. 73. 6 Ed. 4, 7, 8. Bro. Cor. 59, 148.

Where a third person whips a horse on which a man is riding, whereasupon the horse flies out, and runs over a barrel in which the rider is guilty of homicide per injuriam, and he who gave the blow, of manslaughter. 1 Hawk. 73. 3 H. P. C. 58, 59.

And if a man happen to kill another in the execution of a malicious and deliberate purpose to do him a personal hurt, by wounding or beating him; or in the wilful commission of any unlawful act, which necessarily tends to his own destruction, he may be charged with the murder of the person which he has killed. 2 Hawk. 68. 1 H. P. C. 31. 3 Keyst. 40.

If any one flot at any wild fowl upon a tree, and the arrow killeth any reasonable creature after off, without any evil intent in him, this is by misadventure; for it was not unlawful to shoot at the wild fowl: But if he had shot at a cock or a hen, or any tame fowl of another man's, and the arrow by mischance had killed a man; if his intention was to feal the poultry (which must be collected from circumstances,) it will be murder by reason of that felonious intent; but if it was done wantonly, and without that intention, it will be merely manslaughter. 2 Hawk. 258. 9.

The rule before laid down supposeth, that the act from which death ensued, was malum in se. For if it was barely malum in se, as shooting at game by a person qualified by statute to keep a gun for that purpose; the case of a person offending, will fall under the same rule as that of a qualified man. For the statutes prohibiting the destruction of the game under certain penalties, will not, in a question of this kind enhance the accident to the degree of a felony. 3 H. P. C. 34.

Neither shall he be adjudged guilty of a les crime who kills another, in doing such a wilful act as shews him to be as dangerous as a wild beast, and an enemy to mankind in general; as by going deliberately with a horse used to strike, or discharging a gun among a multitude of persons, or throwing a great stone, like a piece of timber from a house into a street, through which he knows that many are passing; and it is no excuse that he intended no harm to any one in particular, or that he meant it to do for sport, or to frighten the people, 1 Hawk. P. C. 74. 2 H. P. C. 32, 44. 3 H. P. C. 57. 2 Hawk. 260.

indictment contra formam statutis, because the statute makes no new offence, but only takes away the privilege of the clergy from an old one, and leaves it to the judgment of the Common law, from whence it follows, that a perfon indicted on the statute, may be found guilty of nothing but generally. 47. From the same reasons it has been harmonized, That if both an indictment lay, and a verdict also find, a fact to be contra formam statutis, which cannot possibly be so, as A. and B. aided and abetted C. contra formam statutis, yet neither such indictment nor verdict are void, but A. and B. shall be dealt with in the same manner as if the words contra formam statutis had been wholly omitted, because the substance of the indictment being found, they may be rejected as surplus and fendeeks: And, at fortury, therefore it is certain, that they shall do not an indictment or verdict vitiate an indictment which would be good without them;

so also, That they will not supply a defect in a vicious one, which otherwise specially prejudice the statute.
1 hawk. 77. H. P. C. 58.

5. Of murder.

Homicide against the life of another, amounting to felony with malice, is either murder or petit treason. And first of murder, which anciently signified only the private killing of a man, for which, by force of a law introduced by King Canutus for the preservation of his Datos, the town or hundred where the fact was done, was to be arrenered to the King, unless they could prove that the murderer, before or after the murder, offered or commit a libel, which was called aeuslibe, or could procure the offender, &c. And in those days, the open willful killing of a man through anger or malice, &c. was not called murder, but voluntary homicide. 1 Hawk. 78. Bratt. 134 b. 135. a. Kelyng 124. a. Bradt. 121. a.

But to the Civil law concerning Englishire having been abolished by 14 Ed. 3. 4. the killing of an Englishman or foreigner through malice propeeny, whether committed openly or secretly, was by degrees called murder; and 13 Ric. 2. 1. which re.JFrames the Karen's pardon in certain cases, does in the preamble, under the general name of murder, include all such homicide as shall not be pardoned without special words; and in the body of the act expresses the same by murder, or killing by await, af-fault, or malice prepended. And doubtles the makers of 25 H. 8. cap. 1. which excluded all willful murder of malice prepended from the benefit of the clergy, intended to include open, as well as private, homicide within the word murder. 1 hawk. 78. S. P. C. 18 b. 19. a.

By murder therefore at this day we understand, the willful killing of any subjedt whatsoever, through malice forethought, whether the perfon slain an Englishman or foreigner.

Not only he who by a wound or blow, or by poisoning, strangling or foming, &c. directly causes another's death, but also in many cases, he who by wilfully and deliberately doing a thing which apparently endangers another's life, and thereby occasion his death, shall be adjudged to be a murderer. 1 hawk. 78. 3 Indl. 48. H. P.

And such was the case of him who carried his fick father, against his will, in a cold frosty season, from one town to another, by reason whereof he died. 1 Hawk.

Such also as it is the case of one, who, by the neglect of a child, left it in an orchard covered only with leaves, in which condition it was struck by a kite, and died thereof.

And in some cases a mean shall be said, in the judgement of the law, to kill one who is in truth actually killed by another, or by himself; as where one by durec of imprimation compels a man to accuse an innocent perfon, who on his evidence is condemned and executed;
or where one has occasion to kill him self or another;
or where one lays positon with an intent to kill a man,
which was afterwards accidentally taken by another,
3 Indl. 91. Dall. cap. 93 supra eb. 1. 7. Plew. Com.

Also he who willfully neglects to prevent a mischief, which he may, and ought to provide against, is, as some have, in judgment of the law, the actual cause of the damage which ensues; and therefore if a man have an ox or horfe, which he knows to be mischiefous, by being used to goe or drinke at those who came near them, and do not tie them up, but leave them to their liberty, and they afterwards kill a man; according to some opinions,
the owner may be indicted, as having himself killed him;
and this is agreeable to the Mofsical law. According to as it is agreed by all, such a perfon is guilty of a very gross misdemeanor. 1 hawk. 79. Fina. Gronle 311. S. P.

Also it is agreed, That no perfon shall be adjudged by any act whatever to kill another, who doth not die thereof within a year and a day after; in the computation whereof, the whole day on which the act was done shall be reck-

But if a perfon hurt by another die thereof within a year and a day, it is no excuse for the other, that he might have recovered, if he had not neglected to take care of himself. 1 hawk. 79. 3 Indl. 53. Kelby 26.

As to the place where such killing is within the consequence of the law, it seems, that the killing of one who is both wounded and dies out of the realm, or wounded out of the realm and dies here, cannot be determined at Common law, because no other can try a jury of the neighbourhood where the fact was done. But it is agreed, that the death of one who is both wounded and dies beyond sea, and it is said by some, that the death of him who dies here of a wound given there, may be heard before determined the confable and martial, according to the law of the King, if the King, it is said, by being examined by the privy council, may by force of 33 H. 8. cap. 23. be tried (in relation to the principal offenders, but not as to the accessaries,) before commissioners appointed by the King, in any county of England.

A murder at sea was anciently cognizable only by the Civil law, but now by force of 27 H. 8. 4. and 28

King's Commissioners in any county of England, according to the course of the Common law; yet the killing of one who is at land of a wound received at sea, is neiter determinable at Common law, nor by force of either of these statutes; but if it be tried by the confable and martial,

And it is said by some, that the death of one who died in one county, of a wound given in another, is not indictable at all at Common law, because the offence was not complete in the county wherein the wound was made only of what happened in their own county. But it hath been held by others, That if the corps were carried into the county where the stroke was given, the whole might be enquired of by a jury of the same county. And it is said, that appeal might be brought in either county, and the case from a jury returned to the other county.
And at this day, by force of 2 & 6 Ed. 24. the whole is triable by a jury of the county wherein the death shall happen,

And it was anciently holden, That the caufing of an abortion by giving a poifon to, or striking a woman big with child, was murder: But at this time, it is faid tribus, a general opinion, and not more, unless the child be born alive, and die thereof, in which cafe it feems clearly to be murder, notwithstanding some opinions to the contrary. And in this refept also, the Common law feems to be agreeable to the Medicall, which is as to the purpose thus expreafed; If men thrive and hurt a woman with child, fo that her fruit depart from her, and yet no malchifh follow, he fhall be purely painiflied, according as the woman's husband will lay upon him, and he fhall pay as the judges determine; and if any malchifh follow, then thofe fhall give life for life. 4 Hawk. 80. Bratt. 131. 3. P. C. 21 Bratt. 131. G. 97. 3. Cro. 5. 2 aff. 2. Br. Cro. 68. Dull. cap. 93. Exodus, cap. 21. v. 22. 23.

It feems also agreed, that where one counfels a woman to kill her child when it fhall be borne, who afterwards kills it in pursuance of fuch advice, he is an accessory to the murder. 1 Hawk. 8o. Dyer 316. 3. Igft. 51. 52.

As to what killing shall be adjudged of malice prepene or murder; it is to be obferved, that any former effept of doing malchifh may be called malice; and therefore that not fuch killing only as proceeds from premeditated hatred or revenge again the perfon killed, but alfo in many other cafes, fuch as is accompanied with circumftances that fhew the heart to be prevaltly wicked, is adjudged to be of malice prepene or afterwards, and consequently murder. 1 Hawk. 8o. Kelvyse 127. Sran. 766.

And according to this notion, it is thought proper to consider, 1. Such murder as is occasioned through any exaftion upon an olhcr party, by whom who is fit in particular; which feems to be moft properly called experif malice. 2dly, Such as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for fome other purpofe, and not to do a perfonal injury to him in particular who is ftit, in which cafe the malchifh feems to be purely fuch to be implied. 1 Hawk. 80. Kelvyse 129, 130.

To murder in the firft fente, fuch as fhew a direct and deliberate intent to kill another, as poifoning, flaving, and fuch like, are fo clearly murder, that there are not any queftions relating thereto worth expreafing: But the cafes which have borne dispute, have generally happened in the following inftances. 1ft. In dwell-ling. 2dly, In killing another without any provocation, or but upon a fight one. 3dly, In killing one whom the perfon killing pretended to hurt in a lefs degree. 1 Hawk. 80.

As to the firft influence of this kind, it feems agreed, that wherever two pirates in cool blood meet and fight on a precedent quarrel, and one of them is killed, the other is guilty of murder, and cannot help himself by alleging that he was firft fhock by the decalced; or that he had ofen decline to meet him, and was prevalt upon that occaflon to flay him, it was his only intent to vindicate his reputation, or that he meant not to kill, but only to disarm his adversary: For fince he deliberately engaged in an act highly unlawful in defiance of the laws, he muft at his pleafe abate the confquences thereof. 1 Hawk. 8o, 81. 1 Buffle 86, 87. 2 Buffle 414, 415. 2 Rol. Rep. 365. 3 Buffle 171. 6 H. P. C. 48.

And from hence it clearly follows, that if two per-

But the law so far abhors all dwelling in cold blood, that not only the principal who actually kills the other, but also his seconds are guilty of murder, whether they join or not; and perhaps the contrary opinion is so far from being a converfiton to make a man by such resoning the murderer of his friend, to whom he was so far from intending any mischief, that he was ready to hazard his own life in his quarrel. 1 Hawk. 82. H. P. C. 51. Dalton. cap. 93.

As to the mere cause of this kind of a murder as happens in killing another without any provocation, or but upon a flight one; it is to be observed, that whenever it appears that a man killed another, it shall be intimated prima facie that he did it maliciously, unless he can make out the contrary, by shewing that he did it on a fudden provocation, &c. 1 Hawk. 82. Kenyng 27.

Also it feems to be agreed, that no breach of a man’s word or promise, no trepafs either to lands or goods, no affront by bare words or geftures, however faile or malicious it may be, and agraved with the most provoking circumstances, will excuse him from being guilty of murder, no fuch triftere, as to attack the perfon who offends him, in fuch a manner as manifestly endangers his life, without giving him time to put himself upon his guard, if he kills him in pur-fance of fuch affault, whether the perfon flain did at all fight in his defence or not; for fuch and cruel a re-

But if a perfon so provoked had beaten the other in the face, and that he might plainly appear that he meant not to kill, but only chaffe him; or if he had restrained himself till the other had put himself on his guard, and then in fighting with him had killed him; he had been guilty of manslaughter only. 1 Hawk. 82. Kenyng 55 61. 131.

In the event of the offence flall be ad judged guilty, who facing two persons fighting together on a private quarrel, whether fudden or malicious, takes fome part with one of them, and kills the other. 1 Hawk. 82. Kenyng 61. 136. Cr. Tit. 206. 12 Co. 87.

Neither can he be thought guilty of a greater crime, who bears him to de fend the quarrel, being actually attack by him, or pulled by the nofe, or flipp’d upon the forehead, immediately kills him; or who happens to kill another in a contention for the wall; or in the defence of his perfon from an unlawful arreft; or in the defence of his house from those who claim a title to it, attempt forcibly to enter it, and to that purpofe flhoor at it, &c. or in the defence of his poliflion of a room in a publick house, from thole who attempt to turn him out of it, and thereupon draw their swords upon him; in which cafe the killing the affaffant hath been holden by fome to be juftifiable. But it is certain, that it can amount to no more than manslaughter. 2 Hawk. 82. 83. H. P. C. 57. 3 Inf. 55. Kenyng 137. H. P. C. 57. Cr. Tit. 27. a. Kenyng 51.

Nor was he judged criminal in a higher degree, who feeing his fons nofe bloody, and being told by him, that he had been beaten by fuch a boy, ran three quarters of a mile, and then returning, faw the boy, and laid to him, that he had been cudgel, whereof he afterwards died. 1 Hawk. 83. H. P. C. 48. Cr. Tit. 266. 12 Co. 87.

As to the third infinence of the kind, viz. fuch murder as happens in killing one whom the perfon killing intended to be a lefs degree; as to which it is to be observed, that whenever the same is of a fudden, fudden revenge, unlawfully and deliberately beats another in fuch a manner that he afterwards dies thereof, he is guilty of murder, however unwilling he might have been to have gone to far. 1 Hawk. 83. Kelyng 110.

Also it feems, that he who upon a fudden provocation executes his revenge in fuch a cruel manner, as fnares a man cow, and deals with his blood, is guilty of murder, if death ceafes, as when the tenderer or of a boy, finding a boy feeling wood, tied him to a horse’s tail, and beat him, whereupon the horse ran away and killed him. 1 Hawk. 83. Cr. Cap. 131. 1 fain. 199. Palm. 54. 1 Rel. F. C. 49.

As to the other time where fuch killing shall be ad judged murder, which happen in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for some other purpose, and not to do a personal injury to him in particular who happens to be fain, they are as follow. And first, Such fudden killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereas the principal intention was to commit another felony; it feems agreed, that wherever a man happens to kill another in the execution of a deliberate purpofe to commit any felony, he is guilty of murder; as where a perfon fhotting at tame fowl, with an intent to feed them, accidentally kills a man; or where one fets upon a man to rob him, and kills him on the fudden, not with malice aforemed; or where a perfon fhotting at, or fighting with one or two with a defign to murder him, miffes him, and kills another. 1 Hawk. 83. Kenyng 117. H. P. C. 46. 50. Dalton. cap. 93. More 87.

And in killing a man in fuch cafes, where the very act of a perfon having fuch a fudden violent inclination, in the immediate cause of a third perfon’s death, but alfo where it is an act occasioned by fuch a fudden misfortune, it makes him guilty of murder; and fuch was the cafe of the husband, who gave a poifomed apple to his wife, who eat not enough of it to kill her, but innocently, and against the husband’s will and perufuations, gave part of it to a child who died thereof; fuch alfo was the cafe of the wife who mixed rathone in a potne fent by an apothecary to her husband, which did not kill him, but afterwards killed the apothecary, who to vindicate his reputation tafted it himself, and afterwards died thereof. Neither is it material in this cafe, that the ftricking of the potne might make thole of the operation of the poison more forcible than otherwise it would have been; for in no manfuch as fuch a murderous intention, which of itself perhaps in fuch a cafe might juftifiely be made punishable with death, proves now in any cafe to be fubfcribed to the King’s fiding a fudden fit of ficknefis, it fhall be as feverely punished as if it were a fudden blow. And if the effeét, the miffing whereof is not owing to any want of malice, but of power. 1 Hawk. 84. Plow. Crum. 474. 9 Co. 91.

But if one happened to be poifoned by rathone laid in water, and the perfon by whom he is fuddenly killed, is guilty of homicide pcr intentam only, because his intentions were wholly innocent. 1 Hawk. 83. 2 Plow. Crum. 474. 9 Co. 91. b.

Alfo if a third perfon accidentally be killed by one engaged in a combat with another upon a fudden quarrel, it feems that he who kills him is guilty of manughter only; but it hath been adjudged, that if he carries his refentment fo high as not only to execute his revenge against thole who have affronted him, but even againft fuch as have no otherwife offended him but by doing their duty, and endeavouring to reftain the affaffant from doing the affaffant in fuch a manner as to make his defence or that he has no otherwife offended him, than if he had acted in cool blood. 1 Hawk. 84. H. P. C. 45. 50. 3 Inf. 52. Dalton. cap. 93. Sowil 67. Kenyng 60. 22 Att. 71. 2 Co. 40. 9 Co. 68. Crum. 25. a. b.

If it hath been resolved, that if the third perfon then in fuch a fudden affray, do not give notice for what purpose he come, by commanding the parties in the the King's name to keep the peace, or other wise manifi-ently fleeing his intention to be not to take part in the quarrel, but to appease it, he who kills him is guilty of manslaughter only, for he might suspect that he came to kill him, and therefore he made no resistance or force, as required by law.
As to the second infinace of this kind, viz. such kiling as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, where the principal design is to commit a bare breach of the peace, not intended against the person of him who happens to be slain; it seems clear, that where divers persons resolving generally to reft all opposers in the commission of any such breach of the peace, and to execute it in such a manner as naturally tends to raise tumults and affrays, as by committing a violent difeffein with great numbers of people, hunting in a park, &c. and in fo doing happen to kill a man, they are all guilty of murder; for they had a common design, and by the event of their actions, who wilfully engage in such bold disturbances of the publick peace, in open opposition to and defiance of the jufice of the nation. 1 Hawk. 84. Savil 67. More 86.
Palm. 35. Cram. 24. b. 31. a. H. P. C. 47.
Yet where divers rioters, having forcible poifeffion of a house, afterwards killed the perfon whom they had ejected, as he was endeavouring in the night forcibly to reftain the poifeffion, and to fixe the house, they were adjudged guilty of manslaughter only, notwithstanding they did the fact in maintenance of a deliberate injury, perhaps for killing the person who had the poifeffion, it was much in fault himself. 1 Hawk. 85. Cram. 28. k. H. P. C.
56.
But if in fuch, or any other quarrel, whether it were fudden or prefumed, a judifice of peace, confufible or watchman, or even a private perfon, be flain in endeavouring to keep the peace, and supposes the affray, he who kills him is guilty of murder; for notwithstanding it was not his primary intention to commit a felony, yet insomuch as he perifts in a left offence with fo much ob-fercialty as to go on in it to the hazard of the lives of those who no other wise offend him, but by doing their duty in maintenance of the law, which therefore afford them its more immediate protection, he seems to be in this refpeft equally criminal, as if his intention had been to commit a felony. 1 Hawk. 85; H. P. C. 45. Dal. cap. 93.

68. Cram. 23.
56. Viz. to the third infinace of this kind, viz. fuch killing,
as happens in the execution of an unlawful action,
the principal motive whereof was to affift a third perfon; it feems clear, that if a matter maliciously intending to kill another take his fervants with him, without acquainting them with his purpofe, and make his adversary and fight with him, and the fervants seeing their master engaged take part with him, and kill the other, they are guilty of manslaughter only, but the manner of murder. Pl.
51. 52.
And therefore it follows à fortiori, that if a man's fervant or friend, or even a stranger, coming suddenly, fee him fighting with another and fide with him, and kill the other; or feeing his fword broken fend him another, wherewith he kills the other, he is guilty of manslaughter only, 1 Hawk. 85. Cram. 26. b. H. P. C. 57.
Dal. cap. 94. 1 Roll. Rep. 407, 408. 3 Jiff. 205.
H. P. C. 52.
Yet in this very cafe, if the perfon killed were a falliff, or other officer of judifice, reftified by the master, &c. in de execution of his duty, fuch friend or fervant, &c. are guilty of murder, whether they knew the perfon flain were an officer or not. 1 Hawk. 85. Kyd. 67, 86.
5.
But perhaps it may be objected, that in this left cafe
there seems to be no more malice than in the former;
and fuch third perfon being wholly ignorant that the party killed was an officer, seems to be no more in falt than if he had been a private perfon. 1 Hawk. 85.
52. But this is objected, that fighting is highly unlawful,
and that he who on a sudden fceuing perfon engaged in it, is so far from endeavouring to part them, as every good judifice ought, that he takes part with one side, and fights in the quarrel, without knowing the cause of it, flues a high contempt of the law, and a fome ignominy to the peafance of the country; and must at his peril take heed what he does; and confe-quently might perhaps in this judifice be adjudged in the foregoing cafes to act with malice, which doth not always fignify a particular ill will against the perfon killed, as appears by many of the above-menfioned cafes; and that such perfon be favoured in refpect of the fuddenness of the occasion where both the quarrel and the perfons are private, yet he muft not expect such indulgence, where the fight, in which he fo rashly engaged, was begun in opposition to the judgement of the nation, and a perfon happens to be killed thereby who engaged in maintenance thereof, and the cause is not under its more particular care,
and may juftly challenge, that his oppofer be made examples to deter others from joining in fuch unwarrantable quarrels. 1 Hawk. 85, 86. 1 Sid. 160. Noy 50.
Plaw. Com. 100.
But if a man facing another arrefted and refrained from his liberty, under colour of a profecution or civil proces, &c. by fuch who in truth have no fuch authority, happen to kill fuch trefpiffers in refraining the perfon arrefted, he shall be adjudged guilty of manslaughter only, notwithstanding the injured perfon submitted to them,
and endeavoured not to refcue himfelf, and the perfon who committed the murder, did not know that he was illegitarily arrefted; for fince in this event it appears, that the perfons fain were trefpiffers, covering their violence with a fheal of juftice, he who kills them is indigued by the law, which in thefe cafes judges by the event, which event he who engage in fuch unlawful actions muft abide at their peril.

cafe lately adjudged.
As to the fourth infinace of this kind, viz. fuch killing
as happens in the execution of an unlawful action,
wereof the direct design was to escape from an arreft, it seems to be agreed, that whoever kills a thiftiff, or any of his officers, in the lawful execution of a civil proces, as on arrefting a perfon upon a capias, &c. is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 86. Dal. cap. 93. H. P. C. 45.
24. a.
Neither is it any exue to fuch a perfon, that the procexs was erroneous, (for it is not void by being so), whereof the party was not aware the night, or that the officer did not tell him for what cause he arrefted him, or the what court, (which is not neceffary when prevented by the party's reftiffence); or that the officer did not fhow his warrant, which he is not bound to do at all, if he be a bailiff commonly known, nor without a demand, if he be a bailiff of an unknown office. 1 Hawk. 86. 9 C.

Yet the killing of an officer in fome cafes will be manslaughter only; 35. where the warrant by which he acts gives him no authority to arreft the party; as where a bailiff arrefts J. S. a barnman, who never was known, by force of a warrant to arreft J. S. knight. 1 Hawk.

arrefts are made unlawful. H. P. C. 46.
As to the fifth infinace of this kind, viz. fuch killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the principal purpofe was to fuper an illegal authority; it feems clear, that if perfons take upon them to put death, either by virtue of a new compofition wholly made, or by virtue of an unknown juridifcution, which clearly extends not only to all of this natur
as if the court of Common Pleas caufe a man to be executed for treafon or fcene; or the Court Martial, in time of peace, put a man to death by the martial law, both the judges and officers are guilty of murder. 1 Hawk.

Sec. 7. The execution of no murder, whether felonious or of a murder shall, if such conviction and execution be in Middlesex, or the city of London, or the liberties thereof, be immediately conveyed by the sheriff or sheriffs, or their deputy and their officers, to the hall of the Surgeons' company, or such place as the said company shall appoint, and be delivered to such prisoner as they shall appoint, who shall give to the sheriff or his deputy a receipt for the fame; and the body so delivered shall be dissected and anatomized by the said surgeons, or such persons as they shall appoint: And in case such conviction and execution be in any other country or place in Great Britain, the judges of assize, or other proper person of the place, shall be put in execution the next day but one after such conviction, (except as before excepted) and the body of such murderer shall in like manner be delivered by the sheriff, or his deputy and his officers, to such surgeon as such judge shall direct.

Sec. 3. Sentence shall be pronounced in open court immediately after the conviction of such murderer, and before the court proceed to any other business, unlessthe court fee cause for postponing the fame; in which sentence shall be expressed not only the usual judgment of death, but also the time for the execution thereof, and the marks of the manner hereby directed, in order to impress a just horror in the mind of the offender, and on the minds of such as be present, of the hemous crime of murder.

Sec. 4. After sentence pronounced, in case there appear reasonable cause, it shall be lawful for such judge, before whom such criminal shall have been tried, to try the execution at his discretion, regard being had to the intent of this act.

Sec. 5. It shall be in the power of any such judge to appoint the body of such criminal to be hung in chains, but in no case the body of any murderer shall be buried, after execution, unless after such conviction he shall have given the sentence of death, and a such judge shall direct the same either to be disposed of as aforesaid, to be anatomized, or to be hung in chains.

Sec. 6. After conviction and judgment, the gaoler to whom such criminal shall be delivered shall confine such prisoner to some cell, or safe place within the prison, separate from the other prisoners; and no prisoner, except the gaoler or his servants, shall have access to such prisoner, without licence under the hand of such judge before whom such offender was tried, or under the hand of the Sheriff or under-sheriff.

Sec. 7. In case such judge for cause to refute the execution, he may refuse any or all the requisites or regulations herein directed to be observed by the gaoler, by licence in writing signed.

Sec. 8. After sentence, and even execution, such offender shall be fed with bread and water only, (except in caves of receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and except in case of any violent sickness or wound, in which case some known physician, surgeon or apothecary, may be admitted to administer necessaries; the Chriftian and Surname of such physician, &c. and his place of abode, being first entered in the books of such prison; and in case such gaoler offended against, or neglected to put in execution any of the preceding requisites, be he forfeit his office, and be fined 20s. and suffer imprisonment until the fame be paid.

Sec. 9. If any person shall by force let at liberty, or refuse or attempt to refuse, or set at liberty, any person out of prison, committed for or found guilty of murder, or shall cause any person to escape from the prison, by which murder, going to execution, or during execution, he shall be deemed guilty of felony, and shall suffer death without benefit of clergy.

Sec. 10. If any person after execution, by force refuse, or attempt to refuse the body of such offender out of the custody of the flaw, or his officers, during the conveyance of such body to any of the places hereby directed, or from the company of surgeons, or their servants, or from the house of any surgeon where the fame

Sec. 11. Nothing herein shall extend to repeal or alter so much of 11 Geo. 1. cap. 26. as relates to the suppon- tion of the execution of pernons convicted of capital of fences in Scotland, for the respective times in the said act mentioned.

The body of such criminal to be hung in chains. See sect. 5.

As meeting the consent of the judges to consider of this act, there was some doubt whether hanging in chains might ever be made part of the sentence; but on debate it was agreed by nine judges, that in all cases within the act, the judgment for defetting and anatomizing only should be part of the sentence: And if it should be thought advisable, the judge might afterwards direct the hanging in chains special order to the sheriff, pursuant to the power given by this clause.

Homine surgilli. Is a writ to bail a man out of prison: In what cases it lies, see F. N. B. fol. 6. Reg. Orig. fol. 77.

2 L. P. 23.

A homine replagiantibus cannot be brought either by the wife herself, or by her procurator amicorum against her husband; and the nature and proceedings in the writ shew it to be so.

Habeas corpus was returned, that W. was in custody by capias in writheimam. The cause was, That upon a homine replagiantibus, the sheriff returned an inquisition, finding that the party was eloid'g; whereupon a writheimam duled, returnable October Martin, which was not yet come; but the defendant was taken upon it. It was objected, that he could not be bailed upon the writheimam; for that it was an execution, and he had no day in court, and the plaintiff could have a new writheimam. Which that seemed to be the fene of the Chief Juffice, to which the right agreed was, (among other things) that after eloid'g returned, and writheimam also awarded, the defendant could not be pled non capi in the action, because he could not fatisfy the return, and that upon pledging non capi he shall be bailed. And they disliked the cause in Raym. 474, and the Lord Grey's cafe, Skin. 61. but affirmed the cause in the Rejifier 79 a. and cited Lctto. 7 t. a. F. N. B. 74. adding this farther reason, that because in the fable of the writ is denied, and balled, and the matter stands indifferent, the bill laid down by Lord Gere, upon Wifon. 1. cap. 15. The court held, that there might be a new writheimam; for the bail must be in a fum certain with condition, that he appear de die in diem, and if judgment be agatn him, that he render his body in writheimam, ibidem reman- nendo, to the common return of the humble writheimam, at large; and if so he be rendered, he is in custody as before; and the court held, that before the writheimam returned, the defendant cannot be bailed. 2 Sub. 38. Mich. 12 W. 5. B. R. Mar v. Hatts. The defendant pleaded in abatement, want of addition in the plaintiff, not the return of capital in writheimam. The plaintiff demurred; Holt Ch. J. at first, inclined strongly, that the plea was good, and would diftinguish this from other writs of retrievem; for here, he said, the proceed of out- lawy lies immediately upon the pluries homine replagiantiis, which he affirmed to be a writheimam in stili, and in common law, that the proceed of outlawy is not used upon the pluries replagiantiis, but upon the capias in writheimam, which issues upon the sheriff's return of averia elongata upon the pluries; and upon the sheriff's special return of the capias in writheimam, that is, upon his return of multa bona on the writheimam, a capias shall go against the perfon, and fo to outlawry. But by Powell J. There is no dif- ference; for in both cases, the proceed of outlawy is upon the writheimam, and not upon the original writ; for in a homine replagiantibus, there shall fall no writheimam till return of the homine replagiantibus; and as the first writheimam in common return must be de averia, so foi the first in a homine replagiantibus, and he one of the per- sons; and then at the end of the day the whole court awarded a representant sufferor; for pro- cess of outlawy lies in a homine replagiantibus, yet thereon ought not to be any addition. For the pluries, on which we hold plea here, is not the original in retrievem; but the original writ of retrievem is it, which writ is vicinientis; so if the retrieval be removed by recorders, that to a writheimam thereon there will be proceed of outlawy, yet there is no addition according to the statute; fo that it is not the original, and therefore out of the statute. 3. There being no addition to the first retrievem, the pluries, (which indeed is the original to us) much have none; and so the judgment was reversed, from the first. The Court said, that there never is any addition to a writ which is vicinientis. 6 Mich. 84. Mich. 2 Ann. B. R. Lord Barnaby v. Wool. See 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Homine replagiantibus.

Homines, A fort of feudal tenants. They claimed a privilege of having their cauls and persons tried only in the court of their lord. Hosspitator, In partem paftalis. (Fr. hoteleous, a confused mingle-mangle of divers things jumbled and put together.) Among the Dutch it signifies fish cut in pieces, andInden with herbs or root, not unlike that which the Remants eat under the title of the fish common, and that literally it signifies a pudding mixed of diverse ingredients, but by a metaphor, signified a compound, or putting together of lands of several tenures, for equal division of them, fol. 55. For examples; A man feified of thirty acres of land in fee, hath iffe two daughters, and given with one of his daughters, to a man that marries her, ten acres of the same land in frank-marriage, and dies feied of the other twenty acres. Now, if that is thus married will have any part of the twenty acres whereof her father died seied, the must put her lands, given in frank-marriage, in hoteleous, that is, the must refuse to take the sole profits of the lands given in frank-marriage, and suffer the land to be common, and mingled together with the other land whereof her father died seied; so that an equal division may be made of the whole between her and her sister, and thus for her ten acres the shall have fifteen acres, elle her sister will have the whole twenty acres. The father's death seied is as good as the father died seied; and, after his death, seied as his father's, in the same manner as above. The division is not lawful, because it is an act of the father's will, and must not be taken in all that formerly he had received, and then out take that of the others. Cowell. See Adminis.

If a person authorized to arrest another who is shelter'd in a house, is denied quietly to enter into it, in order to justify the breaking the open doors upon a capias from the King's Bench or Chancery, to compel a man to find furnaces for the peace or good behaviour, or even upon a warrant from a justice of the peace for such purpose:

HUE

Hudigeld. Significat quasdamiam transgressione illata in forum transgressum. Fleta, lib. 2, cap. 47, 628. A thing done to those who are committed for hudigeld, which fee, & quare. When a villain or servant had committed any trespass, for which he delivered whipping or corporeal punishment, when he bought off his penalty with money, the price of exemption from such chastisement was called hudigeld, or hudigeld: some to the Fleta, and yet felony andervent, for the felons may escape before the justice can be found; all hue and cry was part of the law before the statute of 1 Ed. 3, cap. 16, which first inflicted justices of the peace.

And although, fays he, it is essentially incumbent upon felons to purrue hue and cry when called upon, and they are severely punishible if they neglect it; and it prevents many inconveniences if they be there; for it gives a greater authority to their pursuit, and enables the pursuants, in his affidavit, to plead the general issue upon the informations. See 1 Stat. 22. 2 Stat. 5. 3. treas. 2. cap. 5. Smith & Repl. Angl. lib. 2, cap. 20. and the fol. 13. Edw. 1. of Winchester, 3, & 28 Ed. 3. 11. & 27 Eliz. 13. The Normans had such pursuit with a cry after offenders, which they called clamour de hars, whereas you may read the learned Cujmynan, cap. 54. and it may probably be derived from barbar. fyligiri. Hue is used alone in fol. 4. Ed. 1. st. 2. In the ancient records this is called Huefum & clamor. See Cabot’s 2 par. Ingl. fol. 172.

But the clamor de hars was not a pursuit after offenders, but a challenge of anything to be his own after money given to face his hide. See 1 Edw. 3. cap. 16. and 172. and yet felony andervent, for the felons may escape before the justice can be found; all hue and cry was part of the law before the statute of 1 Ed. 3, cap. 16, which first inflicted justices of the peace.

imprison him in the common gaol, or carry him to a justice of the peace. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 102.

If the person pursued by hue and cry be in a house, and the hue and cry be raised and continued upon the demand of the constable, and notice given of his being, he may break open the doors; and this he may do in any case where he may arrest, though it be only a suspicion of felony, for it is for the King and Commonwealth, and therefore a virtual non satis is in the case. If it seems in this case, that if he cannot be otherwise taken, he may be killed; and the necessity excute the constable. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 102.

It is a rule against any person, or where any hue and cry comes to a constable, whether the person be certain or uncertain, the constable may search in suspect places within his vill, for the apprehending of the felons. Dott. cap. 28. 2 Ed. 4. 8. b. 1 Cramp. de Pace 178. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 103.

But though he may search suspected places or houses, yet his entry must be per egen apertur, for he cannot break open doors barely to search, unless the person against whom the hue and cry is levied be there, and then it is true he may; therefore in case of such a search, the breaking open the door is at his peril, viz. justifiable if he be there; but it must be always remembered, that in case of a constable's door, there must be first a notice given to them within of his business, and a demand of his name, to avoid refusal, doors may be broken. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 103.

If the hue and cry be not against a person certain, but by description of his features, person, clothes, horse, &c., the hue and cry doth justify the constable, or other person, following it, in apprehending the person so described, whether innocent or guilty, for that is his warrant; it is a kind of process that the law allows, (not usual in other cases) viz. to arrest a person by description. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 103.

But if the hue and cry be upon a robbery, burglary, manslaughter or other felony committed, but the person that did the fact is neither known nor described by person, clothes or the like; yet such a hue and cry is good, as hath been said, and must be pursued; tho' no person certain be named or described. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 103.

In this case, all that is necessary, is to give the name of the persons, &c., to those who pursue the hue and cry, to take such persons as they have probable cause to suspect; as for instance. Such persons as are vagrants, that cannot give an account where they live, whence they are, or such fustious persons as come late into their inn or lodgings, and give no reason why they were there before, and the like. 2 Ed. 4. 8. b. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 103.

And here the justification of the imprisonment is mixed partly upon the hue and cry, and partly upon their own suspicions; and therefore, 1. In respect that it is upon hue and cry, there needs no averment 'that the felony was done, yet it must be averred that an information was given that the felons were there; if the arrest be by, or if that constable that first received the information, and so raised the hue and cry; or if the arrest were made by that constable, or those villains to whom the hue and cry came at the second-hand, it must be averred that such a hue and cry came to them, purporting such a felony to be done; but 2. Also in respect the hue and cry names, or describes the person of the felon, but only the felony committed; and therefore the arrest of this or that particular person, and so applied, is left to the suspicion and discretion of the constable or the people of the second or third hand to the vill, and he, that arrests any person upon such general hue and cry, must aver that he searched, so well as the constable, is principally the act of the constable of the vill, and the others are but his deputies or stiffrists within the precincts of his constablewick. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 104.

In town, there can be no doubt but that both by the Common law, as also by the several statutes which injoin the levy of hue and cry, they who neglect to levy one, (whether officers of justice, or others) who neglect to pursue it when rightly levied, are justifiable by indictment, and may be fined and imprisoned for such neglect, unless the constable be levied upon a hue and cry, by the warrant of a justice of the peace, or by the concurrence of two or more justices. And now by the 3 Ed. 2. cap. 16. lett. 11. it is enacted, "That every constable of the hundred, and every constable, birthholder, headborough or tithingman of any given, parish, village, hamlet or tything within the hundred, or the branches within the precinct thereof, wherein the robbery shall be committed, shall attend, to his knowledge, either by notice from the party or parties robbed, or from any other person or persons, to whom notice shall be given thereof pursuant to this or any other statute, shall, with the utmost expedition, make and cause to be made, fresh futi and hue and cry, after the felon or felons by whom such robbery shall be committed; and if any constable, birthholder, headborough or tythingman, shall offend in the premises, by refusing or neglecting to make, or cause to be made, such fresh futi and hue and cry, every such offender shall, for every such refusal or neglect, forfeit five pounds."

It is a statute for "Statutes concerning the raising hue and cry," sec 1380.

Humber (River) in Yorkshire, fifth-garts and polec, &c., to be removed, 23 Hen. 8. e. 18. 1. Hundred (Hundredum, centuria) is a part of a thirteeno called, either because of old each hundred bound 100 ships'jouls of the King's peace, or a hundred able men for his wars. But it rather think's he so-called, because it was composed of an hundred families. "There is shown Brempton tells us, that an hundred contains centum villas; and Giraldus Cambrensis writes, that the Isle of Man hath 343 villas. But in those places the word villia must be used to connote a country family; for it cannot mean a village, because there are not above 40 villages in that island. So where Mr. Lambert tells us, that an hundred is so called, a numeros centum hominum, it must be understood of an hundred men, who are heads or chiefs of so many families. These were first ordained by King Alfred; the 26th of the King of the West Saxons; Aurelian Res, (1461 Lambard, vol. Centuris,) usi cum Guthrumo Dei; &c., et initium illum dixit a Juturna, ac diem fucem consilium, Anglia primus in striphrinis, centurias, & decorias, partibus eft. This dividing counties into hundreds, for better government, King Alfred brought from Germany.
HUN

For these ends, or centems, is a jurisdiction over an hundred towns. This is the original of hundreds, which still retain the name, but their jurisdiction is devolved to the county-court, some few excepted, which have been by privilege annexed to the Crown, or granted to some great subject, and to remain still in the nature of a franchise. The Lord High Steward's Court, the Courts of Assize, Psches, and Calzons, which are supposed to have come from the office of the hundred-courts, formerly born out by the sheriff to other men, were all, or the most part, reduced to the county-court, and so remain at present. So that where you read now of any hundred-courts, you must know, that all these numerous franchises, which were once in the sheriff's hands, but are now under the immediate command of the county-court, and so remain at present. So that where you read now of any hundred-courts, you must know, that all these numerous franchises, which were once in the sheriff's hands, but are now under the immediate command of the county-court, and so remain at present.

Hyppeathrate, A ship, (from the Lat. hyppeates, a pledg,) is to pawn the fame for necessaries; and a man is only the owner of the ship, though the master of the ship could not impawn the ship; for he has no property either general or special nor is such power given to him by the constitutioning the master; but the defendant’s counsel said, that by the Civil law the master may in cafe of necessity, and when he has no other means to provide necessaries for her. And Hobart J. held clearly, that the admiral law is, that if the master and crew are defeated, and the voyage may be defeated, the master, in such case of necessity, may impawn for money, &c. to relieve such extremities by impounding the money for; for he is trusted with the ship and voyage, and so may reasonably be thought to have the power implicitly given him, rather than be the whole lost. lies thereupon. But afterwards in process in case upon the identitn naminis, the question was, if the superfedeas lies thereupon, it being only a furmiye and matter in fact,
and lies more properly, and more frequently, for preventing an arrest upon outlawry, and after the party is taken upon the arrest, is a thing not frequent in ufe, and is in nature of an act and suit, where it will find surety to pay the debt if found that he be not another person; and the court inclined strongly, that it is no superfedeas, but much in the discretion of the court,

Ideots and lunatics. Ideot is a Greek word properly signifying a private man, who has no publick office.
Among the Latins it is taken for illacitorius, impotentis, in our law for non compos mentis, or a natural fool. The words of the statute 17 Ed. 2. c. 9. are Rex baketed in flendid terrarum futurorum naturallio, whereby it appears he must be a natural fool, that is, a fool a nativitate:
for if he was once wife, or become, a fool by chance or misfortune, the King shall not have the custody of him.

The manner of the description of a person, who,
from the want of reason and understanding, comes within the protection of the law, is that of non compos mentis.
Ci. Litt. 240. 4 Co. S. 124. Skin. 177.

There are, says my Lord Coke, four kinds of men who may be made to be non compos: 1. An idiot, who is non compos from his nativitate. 2. One made such by fit incidents. 3. Lunatick, qui aliquandos gaudet luciditi intervallis, who is non compos only for the time that he wants understanding. 4. One that is drunk; which last is so far from coming within the protection of the law, that his drunkenness is an aggravation of whatever he does amifs.

1. An idiot is a fool or madman from his nativitate, and one who never has any lucid intervals; therefore the King has the protection of him and his estate, during his life, without rendering any account; because it cannot be presumed that he will be ever capable of taking care of himself or his affairs. And such a one is described a person that cannot number twenty, tell the days of the week, does not know his father or mother, his own age, &c. But these are mentioned as instances only;
for idiot, or not, being a question of fact, must be tried Idiot. 1 H. P. N. D. 29. Skin. 177.

But tho' an idiot must be fo a nativitate, yet if by inquisition it be found, that A. is an idiot not having any lucid intervals per f I a t i u m a l t o n a m n a u r m a n , this is a sufficient finding; for the inquisition having found the part an idiot, the adding f l a t i u m a l t o n a m n a u r m a n is surplusage, and shall be rejected. 3 Med. 42. 44. B. 2. Black. 171.
Skin. 5. 173. S. Proctor and Lady Franger.

2. One made such by sicknes, which my Lord Hale calls Dementia accidentalis vel adventitis, and which he again differenciat into a total and a partial insanity, from its being more or less violent, is such a madness as excluding criminal cases; and tho' the party also in every thing else be intituled to the same protection with an idiot; and tho' his disorder seems permanant and fixed, yet as he had once reason and understanding, and as the law fees no impossibility but what he may be refurred to them again, it makes the King only a trustee for the be nef, and not having, or giving, any profit or interef in his estate. 1 Hale H 7. P. C. 30.

3. A lunatick; this is also Dementia accidentalis vel adventitis, and takes its name from the great influence which the moon has in all disorders of the brain; and that he has such a number intervals of reason, yet during his plague he is capable of law to the same indulgence as to his oafs, and stands in the same degree with one whose disorder is fixed and permanent. 4 Co. S. 125. 4 Lim. 247.

4. One made mad by drunkenness, which is called Dementia effecluata, and tho', as has been said, such a pefon be not intituled to the protection of the law, yet if a person by the unskillfulness of his physician, or by the contrivance of his enemies, eat or drink such a thing as cauerth phrenzy, this puts him in the same condition with any other plenly, and he is thus a lunatick; if by the acts of one or more such prides ces an habitual or fixed phrenzy be cauerth, tho' this madness was contracred by the vice and will of the party, yet this habitual and fixed phrenzy thereby cauerth puts the man in the same condition, as if the same was co-occcurcd invaridly at firft. Pern.

But tho' this subject of madmens may be fpun out to a greater length, and branched into several kinds and degrees, yet it appears that the prevailing dilcription herein is in between ideocy and lunacy; the firft a faticity vel dementia naturalis, which excercibes the party as to his aelfe, and intitles the King to the receipt of the rents and profits of his estate during his life, without being obliged to render any account for the same;
the other accidental or adventitious madmens, which,
what ever permanent and fixed, or with lucid intervals, goes to the general ruin of the life, and is equally exacathed with ideocy, and is done during the phrenzy but because they differ, that in the latter case the King, as has been faid, is only a trustee for the lunatick, and accountable to him, if he happens to be refurred to his underftanding, or to his representatives, if it happen otherwife. 3 Soc.

1. How idiots and lunatics are to be found duc.
2. Who hath an interefl in, and jurisdiction over them;
and of appointing them proper curators and committees,
and the power and duties of such committees.

3. How far the want of understanding shall be paid prejudice them in civil and criminal cafes.

4. How their duts are good, void, or voidable;
and how they are to sue or defend.

1. How idiots and lunatics are to be found duc.

Every person of the age of discretion is in law presumed to be of found mind and memory, unless the contrary appear; and this rule holds as well in civil as criminal cases. 1 Hale H 7. P. C. 32.

It is not madmen or lunacy in civil cases, and in order to the commitment or custody of the perfon and his estate, which belongs to the King, either to his own use and benefit, as in case of ideocy, or to the use of the party, in case of accidental madmens or lunacy, is by writ or commission to the sheriff or flockman, or particular commissioners both by their own inquisition and by inquisition to inquire, and return their inquisition to the Chancery; and thereupon a grant or commitment ment of the party and his estate ensues: And in case the party or his friends find themselves injured by the finding him a lunatick or idiot, a special writ may issue to bring the party to the Chanceller, or before the court competent; and if, on examination, it appear the party is no idiot, the whole commission and office shall be dischargd without any traverse or mon-trum de droit. 9 Co. S. 31. 4 Co. S. 126.
And for this writ of multa inquiringa, see Fea. N. B. 324. 3.

All the party found an idiot or lunatick may traverse the inquisition, as may any other perfon having a title
the land, and therefore it is said, that by the statute 18
Hen. 6. there ought to be a month's time between the return of the inquisition and the grant of the custody and lands, in order for the parties to come in and tender such traverse. Skin. 176.

If by the party or a person he found a lunatick, and the custodies granted to J. S. and the party thus found be a faire facies to set aside the inquisition, the committee of the lunatick cannot plead nor join issue in such faire facies; for he can have no interest in the Ideally, lunacy or madness, which excels in capital cases, it is not necessity that it was found by inquisition that the party was a madman, idiot, lunatic and incapable of being tried. This distinction, established by this statute, between the King's interest in the lands or tenements of that such lands and tenements shall in no wise be alienated, and the King shall take nothing to his own use; and if the party die in such estate, then the residue shall be distributed for his soul, by the advice of the ordinary.

And as to idocy, lunacy or madness, which excels in capital cases, or been delivered unto them when they come to age like a house, and to such farm and tenements shall in no wise be alienated, and the King shall take nothing to his own use; and if the party die in such estate, then the residue shall be distributed for his soul, by the advice of the ordinary.

2. But though a lunatick be by commission to be under the care of the publick, and such committee is to be appointed for him by the Lord Chancellour, whose acts are subject to the control and correction of the court of Chancery; yet such a one, whether so appointed, or whether he of his own head take upon him the care and management of the estate of a lunatick, is but in nature an extraordinary trust or truftee for him, and accountable to him, his executors or administrators. 4 Co. 127. 2 Chalm. Co. 239.

And as the committees of a lunatick have no interest, but an estate during pleasance, it has been, that they cannot make leases, nor any ways incumber the lunatick's estates without a special order from the court of Chancery, where the profits are not sufficient to maintain the lunatick. 1 Vern. 262. Fryer v. Marchant.

Also where a lunatick, before he became such, made a mortgage of good part of his estate for 50 l. and the committee transferred this mortgage, and took upon 3 400 l. more upon it, and it was held by my Lord Keeper, that the mortgage was void but a security for the 50 l. only. 1 Vern. 262, 263.

And though the King, as it has been said, has the sole direction and management of idiots, &c. yet a private person may confine a friend who is mad, and bind and beat him, &c. in such a manner as is proper in such circumstances. 2 Rat. 546.

And also by the 12 Ann. cap. 23, recting, that whereas there are sometimes in parishes, towns and places, persons of little or no estate, who by lunacy, or otherwise, are furiously mad, and dangerous to be permitted to go abroad, and by the laws in being the justices of the peace and officers have not authority to confine and confine them, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace, where such lunatick or mad person shall be found, by warrant under their hands and seals, directed to the constables, churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, town or place, or some of them, to cause such person to be apprehended and kept safely locked up in such place within the county where such parish or town shall lie, as such justices shall, under their hands and seals, direct and appoint; and (if such justices find it necessary) to be there chained, if the legal settlement of such person shall be in any parish, town or place; or, if such settlement be in such county; and if such settlement shall not be there, then such person shall be sent to the place of his or her last legal settlement, as vagrants by this act are directed to be sent, (whipping excepted) and shall be kept safely locked up or chained, as aforesaid; and the charges of keeping and maintaining such person, or of removing a refrainer, (which shall be for and during such time only, as such lunacy or madness shall continue,) shall be satisfied and paid by order of two or more justices of the peace for the county, town or place where such settlement shall lie, out of the estate of such person, if such person hath an estate to pay and satisfy the same, or of the two or more of such justices, if he hath not such an estate, then the charges of the keeping and maintaining such person, during such refrainer, shall be satisfied, and paid by such ways and means as the poor of such parish, town or place, are by the laws in being to be provided for."

Provided, that this act, or any thing contained therein, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to refrain or abridge the prerogative of the Queen, or the power or authority of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Commissioners of the Great seal, but the time being, or of his; it or of the,. Professor of Divinity, or of the Palatine of Lancaster for the time being, or of the Chamberlain or Vice-Chamberlain of the County Palatine of Chester for the time being, touching or concerning the premises."

3. How far their want of understanding shall be said to prejudice them in civil and criminal cases.

Civil cases. An idiot, or perfon non campus, may inherit, because the law, in complaint of their natural infirmities, presupposes them capable of property. Co. Lit. 2, 92, b. 365.

Also an idiot, or person of non-sane memory, may purchase, because it is intended for their benefit; and if after recovery of their memory they agree there to, they cannot avoid it; but if they die during their lunacy, their heirs may avoid it, for they shall not be subject to the consequences of their want of capacity; so if it after their memory recovered, the lunatick, or person non campus, die without agreement to the purchase, their heirs may avoid it. Co. Lit. 2, 2 Port. 203.

If an idiot or lunatick marry, and die, his wife shall be endowed; for this works no forfeiture at all, and the King has only the custody of the inheritance in one case, and the power of providing for him and his family in the other; but in both cases the freehold and inheritance is in the idiot or lunatick; and therefore if lands descend to an idiot or lunatick after marriage, and the King, on official found, takes those lands into his custody, or grants them over to another, as committee, in the usual manner; yet, the King, in the way the heir will not be tenant by the curtesy, or the wife endowed, since their title does not begin to any purpose till the death of the husband or wife, when the King's title is at an end. Co. Lit. 31 a, 4 Co. 124, 125. Yet see Plow. 263 b. 1 Febn. 10.

A lunatick shall be tenant by the curtesy, and shall have dower; so that a woman, being a lunatick, kill her husband, and any other, yet the shall be endowed, because this cannot be felony in her, who was deprived of her understanding by the act of God. Perk. 365.

If a person non campus be difabled, and a deficient evil, this, it is said, takes away his entry, and prevents the entry of the heir; for regularly the non campus in this case cannot allege the disability in himself, because he cannot be supposed conscious of it, nor is he allowed ever, at any time, to allege it, for when he is once non campus, there is no certain time when he can be adjudged to recover that disability, unless where he is legally committed, and then the acts during his lunacy will be set aside and discharged, and afterwards the commission superseeded; for in no other way can the non campus be legally referred to his right, and to his capacity of acting. Lit. 362. 405. Co. Lit. 247.

Color on non campus, being lord of a copyhold manor, may make grants of copyhold estates, for such estates do not take their perfection from any power or intert in the lord, but from the custom of the manor, by which they have been demised and demitable time out of mind, 4 Co. 23 b. Co. Copib. 79, 107.

The estates are held by the Civil law, and likewise by the Common law, incapable of being executors or administrators; for these disabilitics render them not only incapable of executing the trust reposed in them, but also by their infinity, and want of understanding, they are incapable of determining whether they will take upon themselves the execution of the trust or not. Gould's. Orph. Leg. 36.

Therefore it hath been agreed, that if an executor become non campus, that the spiritual court may, on account of this natural disability, commit administration to an other. 1SBib. 39.

IDE

An idiot, or person non campus, being robbed, shall be bound by a sale of his goods in a market overt. 2 Hil. 713.

Criminal cases. It is laid down as a general rule, that idiots and lunaticks, being by reason of their natural disabillitics incapable of judging between good and evil, are punishable by no criminal prosecution whatsoever. 1 Hale, P.C. 341.

And therefore a perfon, who loxes his memory by sickish, infirmity, or accident, and kills himself, is not de fe de. 3 Hil. 54.

So if a man give himself a mortal stroke while he is non campus, and recovers his understanding, and then dies, he: Such a de fe de for the three under the homicide, the act must be that which makes the offence. 1 Hale, P.C. 341.

But it is not every melancholy or hypochondriacal dis- temper that denotes a man non campus, for there are few who commit this offence, but are under such infirmities; but it must be such an alienation of mind that renders them to be madmen, or frantic, or distillute of the use of reason. 1 Hale, P.C. 342.

And as a perfon non campus cannot be a se de de by killing himself; so neither can he be guilty of homicide in killing another, nor of petit treason; also if one who is committed for a capital offence, but becomes non campus before conviction, he shall not be arraigned; and if after conviction, he shall not be executed. 1 Hale, P.C. 30. 1 Haw. P. C. 2.

It seems to have been anciently holden, in respect of that high regard which the law has for the safety of the King's person, that a madman might be punished as a traitor for killing, or offering to kill the King; but this is now contradicted by better and later opinions. Fen. C. 351. Regis, 309. 4 Co. 124 b. 1 Roll. Rep. 324.

The great difficulty in these cases is, to determine where a person shall be said to be so far deprived of his sense as not to have any of his actions incumbent on him, or where, notwithstanding some defects of this kind, he still appears to have so much reason and understanding as will make him accountable for his actions, which my Lord Hale distinguishes between, and calls by the name of Total and partial infirmity; and that it is difficult to define the indivisible line that divides perfect and partial infirmity, yet, I say, it must rest upon circumstances, duly to be weighed and considered both by the judge and jury, left on the one side there be a kind of inhumanity towards the defects of human nature, or on the other side too great an indulgence given to great crimes; and the best measure he can think of is this: such a person, as labouring under melancholy distempers, hath yet ordinarily as great understanding as ordinarily a child of fourteen years hath, is such a person as may be guilty of treason or felony. 1 Hale, P.C. 30.

It hath been already observed, that he who is guilty of any crime whatsoever from his voluntary drunkenness, shall be punished for it as much as if he had been sober. Vide infra.

Also he who incites a madman to do a murder, or other crime, is a principal offender, and as much punishable as if he had done it himself. Reslo. 53. Dall. cap. 4. 177. P. C. 2.

And here we must observe a difference the law makes between civil suits that are terminated in compeientium damnati ilati, and criminal suits, or prosecutions, that are ad paenam & in vinditum criminis commissi; and therefore it is clearly agreed, that if one who wants discretion commits a crime, and the perdon or persons he has employed to do it, shall be compelled in a civil action to give satisfaction for the damage. 2 Roll. 454. Hib. 134. Co. Lis. 247. 1 Haw. P. C. 2. 1 Hale, P. C. 15, 15, 38.

4. How far their acts are good, void, or voidable; and how they are to sue and defend.

So in case of a fine levied by an idiot, it shall stand against him and his heirs; for no averment of idiocy can vacate the fine; nor will an office, binding him an idiot a naturitate, be sufficient to reverse the fine, for that to lessen the credit of judgments in courts of record, by trying them by other rules than themselves.

2 And. 193. 4 Co. 124.

As to acts done by them in pari, they are distinguished into void or voidable, the void to themselves and all who take by actual delivery, because no man is allowed to presumably himself, for the insecurity that may arise in contracts from counterfeited makes and folly; besides, if the excuse were real, it would be repugnant that the party should know or remember what he did; but their heirs and assigns may avoid such acts in pari, but not by reason of the idiocy; because if they can prove it, it must be presumed real, since no body can be thought to counterfei

If an idiot or lunatic enter into recognizance, or acknowledge a натурitate, neither they themselves, nor their heirs nor executors can avoid it; for these are securi-

Terror menti, vel erataminda, is a writ to the escelhor or sherifl of any county, where the King hath notice that there is an idiot naturally born, so weak of understanding, that he cannot govern or manage his inheritance, to call before him the party suspected of idocy, and examine him: Also the said sheriff is to give notice of the same, or apartment whether he be sufficiently witted to dispose of his own lands with direction or not, and to certify accordingly into the Chancery; for the King hath the procision of his subjeds, and by his prerogative the government of their lands and subdurance that are naturally deficient in their own direction. Jews, (Ydorici, Here in England, in former times, the Jews and all the rest belonged to the chief lord where they lived; and he had such an abstinence property there, that the church could not have use of it, and it was better to remove to another lord without leave. This appears in Matt. Paral. p. 521. 606. where we read that Hen. 3. fold the Jews to Earl Richard his brother for a certain term of years, that was Rex exteriorus, comes eusfcraver. They were distinguished from the Christians both living and dying; for they had proper judges and courts, where their causes were decided; and they wore a badge on their outward garments upon the breast in the shape of a table, and were fined if they were abroad without such badge. They were never buried in the country, but brought up to London, and there buried. This the Jews of our times do not, that they might be buried without the walls of any other city. And anciend y we had a court of the justices allotted for the government of the Jews. See 4 Iff. fol. 234. Rex

Ignoramus. It is word properly used by the Grand Inquisitor, impannel'd in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick, and written upon the bill, by which they signify their opinion as defective, or too weak, to make good the pretentiment; the effect of which words so written is, that a farther inquiry upon that party for that fault is thereby stopped, and he delivered without further answer. It hath a resemblance of that ancient censure of the Romans, where the judges, when they absolved a person accused, did write A. upon a little table provided for that purpose, i. abhivemus: if they judged him guilty, they wrote B. cap. C. ab omnibus: if they found the charge defective and doubtful, they wrote N. L. that is non Ignoranza. (Ignoramus) Which is want of knowledge of the law, shall not excuse any man from the penalty of it: And every person is bound at his peril to take notice of that law of the realm; and ignorance of it, though it be involuntary, where a man affirms that he hath done all that in him lieth, shall not excuse him.

But though ignorance of the law excuseth not, ignorance of the fact doth; as if a person buy a horse or other thing in open market, of one that had no property therein, and not knowing but he had right; in that case he hath done a thing, and the ignorance shall excuse him. But if the party bought the horse by mark only in the market, or knew the seller had no right, the buying in open market would not have excused. Deed, and Status. 5

A privilege was sometime granted, that a person should not be impaled, or returned upon a jury, unless he be a tenant or tenant-nor in alquith affinis, juratis, recogniscinum, &c. Parch. Imparltance. (Interlocutio or Interlauque.) Is a motion or execution made in court by the tenant or defendant, upon the count of the demandant, or declaration of the plaintiff; whereby he craves relief, or a farther day to put in his answer. See Broth. tit. Continuance. Imparltance is general or special. Special is with this clause, Saluus omnibus advantageis, san ad juridisthunm curiam, quam ad brevem & narratom. Kitchin, f. 200. General is that which is made at large, without inferring that, or the like clause. Cowell.

The declaration, and before the defendant can be compelled to plead, many times there is an imparltance; which is a longer and further day given by the court, and usually till the first day of the next term, upon a petition made by the tenant or defendant, whereby he craves relief. And this termeth to be special or general; special, as where this or the like clause is inserted, saving all advantages, as to the jurisdiction of the court, as to the writ and declaration; general, is consequtely where that or the like clause is not contained. Reg. Plaict. 55.

Formerly the defendant in all cases had an imparltance to the term next after the return of the process, except the special plea's were by original, or for any or against attorney's or other privileged persons, or against prisoners in the custody of the marshal; in which cases the defendant was bound to plead, without any imparltance, and the same term the declaration was delivered, if delivered four days before the end of the term and except the proceeding by pluries, or the court ordered the return of the first return of Egbert or Michaelmas term, and the action laid in London or Middlesex; and in which last cases, if the declaration was delivered before the eftin day of May, or craftum animantium, the defendant was to plead the deed before the eftin day of the following term. See Broth. tit. Continuance; and in which last cases, if the declaration was delivered before the eftin day of May, or craftum animantium, the defendant was to plead the deed before the eftin day of the following term. See Broth. tit. Continuance; and in which last cases, if the declaration was delivered before the eftin day of May, or craftum animantium, the defendant was to plead the deed before the eftin day of the following term. Mich. 5 Ann. But now, by a rule made in Trinity term 5 & 6 Geo. 2. upon all processes to be filed out of this court, returnable the first or second return of any term, if the plaintiff declares in London or Middlesex, and the defendant lives within twenty miles of London, the declaration shall be delivered with notice to plead within four days after the delivery, and the defendant shall plead within the said four days without imparltance; and in case the plaintiff declares in any other county, or the defendant lives about twenty miles from London, the declaration shall be deliver'd with notice to plead within four days after the delivery, and the defendant shall plead within the said eight days without any imparltance; and in default of pleading in either of these cases, judgment may be entered. In both these cases the declaration must be delivered at least four days before the end of the term, exclusive of the day of the delivery, otherwise the defendant shall be held to an imparltance. 1 Att. Pract. in K. B. 148, 149.

The defendant may imparlt if the plaintiff amend his declaration; otherwise if he accepts of costs, for by such amendment it shall be accounted as a new declaration; but if the defendant accepts of costs for such amendment, he is not compelled for what he was pleased by the amendment, and therefore it is reason he should plead to the declaration so amended, and not impart. 2 L. P. R. 34. 55. cites Mich. 22 Car. 2. B. R.

If the plaintiff declares, but proceeds no farther for three terms, defendant may impart. 2 L. P. R. 35. cites Hill. 23 Car. 2. R.

In the case we have proceeded to file, and the defendant amends his plea, he shall pay the plaintiff's costs; but the court will not grant an imparltance; per Roll Ch. J. 1655. For after file joined, and warning given for a trial upon that file, it is too late to impart. 2 L. P. R. 35.

The court would not grant the defendant an imparltance, tho' he was fixt upon a bond of 28 years old, and could not file the bond; but bid him pray over it, and plead; for the antiquity of the bond is no caufe of imparltance. 2 L. P. R. 33. 36. P alph. 1656. "Johnson's cafe."

Where the plaintiff fues out a special original, the defendant cannot impart, but must plead as soon as the rules are out; because, where the writ is general, the caufe of action appears in the declaration, which the law allows the defendant convenient time to confer with, and advise upon; but when the defendant is taken upon a special capity, there the declaration is mentioned in the writ itself; and the defendant fees what the caufe of action is, and may take a copy of it, and prepare his answer ready against the term by the times that the rules are out. 2 L. P. R. 36.

Imparltance is not to enable the party the better to inform himself of the caufe of action, in order to his defence. 2 Shaw. 310. Trin. 35 Car. 2. B. R. Ann'.

A second imparltance was moved for in a gow warrant, and said to have been granted, in the cafe of the city of London, but the court denied it; for Abyr fad, that by the course of the court, they were to have but the common procedure. And the court faid, that being ex gratia, they may grant or deny it as they please. Comb. 12. Hill. 12 f. 2 fam. 2. Ann'.

One pleaded a foreign plea after imparltance, which could not be; but it was objected, not to be after imparltance, because there was no entry of defendaut sim & ripping, but that it is not an entry of imparltance. 13 Mod. 307. Mich. 11 W. 3. Levenor v. Bredington.

Impollibility, A thing impossible in law, is all one with a thing impossible in nature: And if any thing in a bond or deed be impossible to be done, such deed, &c. is void. 21 Car. 1. B. R. Yet where the condition of a bond becomes impossible by the act of God, in such case it is held the obligor ought to do all in his power towards a performance; as when a man is bound to enfoff the obligee and his heirs, and the obligee dies, the obligor must enfoff it. 2 Co. v. Impoition, (from the Lat. impoio) Signifies the tax received by the Prince, for such merchandise as are brought into any haven within his dominions from foreign nations. 31 Eliz. 5. It may in some fort be disfiguished from custom, because custom is rather that profit which the Prince maketh of wares shipped out; yet they are frequently confounded. Cowell, edit. 1727.

An indictment is a brief narrative of an offence committed by any per son, which the public good requires should be punished; and therefore it is said to be a prosecution at the suit of the King merely. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 169. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

Hence also, from its being the King's suit, it is every day admitted that the party, who prosecutes it, is a good witness to prove it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

And from its being the King's suit it is agreed, that no damages can be given to the party grieved upon an indictment; or any other criminal prosecution; notwithstanding the King, by the statute of 3 Ric. 2, c. 12, has empowered a court to try, for breaches committed by felons, expressly direct that the party shall recover damages by such a prosecution. 2 Roll. Abr. 83. Cro. Cas. 531, 558. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

Allo where by statute damages are given to the party grieved by the offence intended to be redressed, it forms that they cannot be recovered on an indictment grounded on such statute, unless such method of recovering them be expressly given by the statute; but that they ought to be had for an action on the statute, in the name of the party grieved. 1 Jones 380. Cro. Cas. 488. 1 Roll. Abr. 220. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

But if a statute prohibit any act to be done, and by a substantive clause gives a recovery by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, but mentions not indictment, the party may be indicted upon the prohibitory clause, and thereupon fined, but not to recover the penalty, as upon the statute of 3 Jac. cap. 5, prohibiting recidivists to baptize their children by a popish priest, but the fine to be recovered they might not to exceed the penalty. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 171. and see Cro. Jac. 645-4.

But if the act be not prohibitory, but only that if any person shall do such a thing he shall forfeit 5l. to be recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, he cannot be indicted for it; but the proceeding must be by information, bill, plaint, or information. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. 371.

And although damages cannot be recovered on an indictment, yet the court of King's Bench, having the King's privy seal for that purpose, may give to the prosecutor the third part of the fine assized on a criminal prosecution for any offence whatsoever. 1 Ed. 4, 21. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

Allo it is every day's practice of that court, to induce defendants to make satisfaction to the prosecutors for the costs of the prosecution, and also for the damages sustained by the injury, whereas the defendants are convicted, by intimating an inclination on that account to mitigate the fine due to the King. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

1. What matters are indictable, where an indictment is necessary, or the party may be tried for a civil offence without it.

2. By whom an indictment is to be found; who may and ought to be indicters; and whether the indictors, or grand jury, may find part of a bill brought before them true, and part false.

3. Within what place the offence incurred of foul crime.

4. What ought to be the form of the body of an indictment at Common law, and how it ought to set forth. 1. The substance and manner of the fact; 2dly. The persons men-

5. Where the offence indicted may be laid jointly, and where solely, and where both jointly and severally; and where the offences of several persons may be laid in one indictment.

6. What ought to be the form of the caption of an indictment; and where an indictment may be quoted.

1. What matters are indictable, where an indictment is necessary, or the party may be tried for a civil offence without it.

Only not capital offences, such as treasons and felonies, are indictable, but likewise all other crimes being of a public nature, and malum in se, the of an inferior kind, as misprisions, and all other contempt, all disturban tces of the peace, all oppressions, and all other misdemeanours whatsoever of a public evil example against the Common law, may be indicted. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

But no injuries of a private nature, unless they some way concern the King, can be punished by way of indictment at Common law. 21 & 22 Phill. P. C. 20. Drs. Indictment 16.

Allo generally where a statute either prohibits a matter of publick grievance, or commands a matter of publick convenience, as the repairing the common streets of a town, &c. every such disobedience of such statute is indictable; and banishment they when once been fined upon an action on the statute, such fine is, it seems, a good bar to the indictment, because by the fine the end of the statute is satisfied. 2 Ilf. 55, 163. Cro. Jac. 577. 1 Med. 34. 1 Std. 209.

Allo if a statute extend only to private persons, or it extend to all persons in general, but chiefly concern disputes of a private nature, as those relating to differences made by lords on their tenants, it is said, that offences against such statute will hardly bear an indictment. Sid. 209. 2 Med. 34. 1 Med. 71, 288. 1 Lev. 299. Royn. 205. 1 Vent. 104. 2 Ilf. 121, 232. 2 Hawk. P. C. 211.

Allo where a statute makes a new offence, which was no way prohibited by the Common law, and appoints a particular proceeding against the offender, as by commitment, or action of debt, or information, &c. without mentioning an indictment, it seems to be felt at this day that we will not maintain an indictment, because the mentioning the other methods of proceeding only forms impliedly to exclude that of indictment. 1 Strow. 398. 2 Ed. 34, 273. Cro. Jac. 643, 644. 1 Med. 79.

Yet it hath been adjudged, that if such a statute gives a recovery by action of debt, bill, plaint or information, or otherwise, it authorizes a proceeding by way of indictment. Trin. 3 Gao. 1. Rex v. Donan. 2 Hawk. P. C. 211.

Allo where a statute adds a new penalty to an offence prohibited also by the Common law, it is in the election of the prosecutor to proceed either at Common law, or on the statute; and if he conclude his indictment contra formam statut. it will not make it good upon an indictment on the statute, yet if the indictment be good as an indictment at Common law, it shall stand as such, and the words contra formam statut. shall be rejected. 2 Hawk. P. C. 211.

In all criminal cases the most regular and safe way, and most consonant to the Common law, and the statutes of Magna Charta, cap. 29. 5 Ed. 3. cap. 9. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 4. 28 Ed. 3. cap. 3. and 42 Ed. 3. cap. 3. is by precrastination or indictment of twelve sworn men; yet at Common law there were several means of putting the party to answer for a criminal offence without any indictment, some whereof are still in force; and others either grown obsolete or wholly taken away by statute. 2 Hal. Hift. P. C. cap. 20.

1. If a thief or robber had, on fresh pursuit, been taken with the malinour, and the goods found upon him brought into the court with him, he might have been tried tried immediately, without any indictment: And this is said to have been the proper method of proceeding in such matters which had the franchise of insigntabule, but is obsolete at this day. 2 Hawk. P. C. 211.

2. Another kind of proceeding in cases capital without indictment is, where an appeal is brought at the suit of the party, and the plaintiff is not found upon that appeal, he may be arraigned at the King's suit upon such appeal; and so it is in the case of an absentee, or re-leaf; and in such case, altho' the party be indicted as well as appealed, yet upon the nonuit of the plaintiff, the proceeding for the King shall not be upon the indictment, but upon the appeal. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. 402.

3. If a person indicted of treason or felony confesses the fact, and accuses others of being guilty of the same offence with him, by which he becomes and is admitted an approver, the parties accused may, on his appeal, be tried without other indictment or prefaceumt. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. cap. 2. but for the learning hereof, see 2 Hawk. P. C. 204, 225, &c.

4. There were before the statute of 1 H. 4. cap. 14. appeals by particular persons, especially of treason, in parliament, which are said to have been very frequent in ancient times, and especially in the reign of Ric. 2. but now wholly taken away by the said statute; and are therefore where in the reign of Car. 2. the Earl of Bridjet preferred articles of high treason, and other misdemeanors, against the Earl of Clarendon, it was resolved by all the judges, that such articles were within the said statute 1 H. 4. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. cap. 60. and proper impleadments by the house of commons of high treason, or other misdemeanors, in the lords house, have been frequently in practice, notwithstanding the statute of 1 H. 4. and are neither within the words nor intent of that statute; for it is a prefaceumt by the most solemn grand inquest of the whole kingdom. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. 60.

5. If in a civil action in the King's Bench de muliere abducta cum bonis vitri, upon Not guilty pleaded, the defendant be convicted and found guilty of having carried away the woman and goods with force and fraciously, he may be put to answer the felony without further accusation; for such a charge, by the oath of twelve men, on their enquiry into the merits of a cause, in a court which has jurisdiction over the crime, is equivalent to an indictment; and the king being always, in judgment of law, present in court, may take advantage of any matter properly discovered for his benefit. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. 211, and several authorities there cited. 2 Hal. Hiff. cap. 20.

So if upon a special verdict, in a common action of trespass brought in the King's Bench, it be found that the defendant took them fraciously, this may serve for an indictment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 211. 2 Hal. Hiff. cap. 20.

So if in an action of slander, for calling a man a thief, the defendant justifies that he spoke goods, and disre thereupon taken, it be found for the defendant; if this be in the King's Bench, and for felony in the same county where the offender shall be afterwards arraigned, if any person, who have also a commission of good-delivery, he shall be forthwith arraigned upon this verdict, as an indictment; and the reason is, because here is a verdict of twelve men in such cases, and so the verdict, tho' in a civil action, serves the King's suit as an indictment, and the court shall have for merit of the matter, to be a verdict, as is necessary.

That same man shall be put to answer, &c. but by indictment or prefaceumt. 2 Hal. Hiff. cap. 20.

But such a finding, in a court which hath not juridiction, is of no force. 2 Hawk. P. C. 211.

Therefore for the word of a court, it is not an indictment against B. amount to an indictment against B. because the finding of one man guilty on the trial of another is extrajudicial, except only in the case of a co-accused inquest, should never be taken. But for the finding of a greater guilty, upon the acquittal of a defendant, on the trial of such an inquest, is not wholly extrajudicial, be-cause the jury acquitting the man, on such an inquest, must inquire what other person did the fact. 2 Hawk. P. C. 212.

Alfo if on a declaration in the King's Bench against A. for having been guilty of a misdemeanor famil cum B., the jury find B. guilty; it is said, that such a finding is equivalent to an indictment, because it is not wholly extrajudicial, and therefore is neither before nor after the time of the commission. But if an indictment be laid for the murder of B., and the accused murder be afterwards heard and determined, the finding of B. guilty is not an extrajudicial, but an extrajudicial fact, and therefore is of no force.

6. If the sheriff return a release of a prisoner taken for felony, or a breach of prifon by one arrested for felony, this is not sufficient to arraign the party, nor doth it countervail an indictment, for it is not by the oath of twelve men. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. cap. 20. 2 Hawk. P. C. 214.

And altho' informations are praetific solicentences in the Crown-office in cases criminal, and by many penal statutes, the prosecution upon them is by the acts themselves limited to be by bill, plain, information, or indictment, yet the method of prosecution of capital offences is still to be by indictment, except in the cases above mentioned. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. cap. 20. See 5 Med. 459, &c.

2. By whom an indictment is to be found; who may and ought to be indictors; and whether the indictors, or grand jury, may find part of a bill brought before them true, and part false.

Every indictment is to be found by twelve lawful free men of the county wherein the crime was committed, returned by the proper officer, without the nomination of an C. C. nor occasion of office. But for this fee head of 215. They must be twelve legal men; and therefore it is a good exception to one returned on a grand jury, that he is an alien or villain, attainted in a conspiracy, or detest tantum, or of perjury, or outlawed, or attainted of felony or poenatum. 2 Hale Hiff. P. C. 155.

It seems to be generally agreed, that a grand jury must find either bills vero, or ignoramus for the whole; and that if they take upon them to find it specially or conditionally, or to be true for one part only, and not for the rest, the whole is void, and the party cannot be tried upon it, but ought to be indicted anew. 2 Rep. Rep. 52. 3 Bully. 206. 1 Hal. Rep. 407. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

Hence it hath been held, that if a grand jury indorse a bill of murder billa vera se defendenda, or billa vera for manslaughter, and not for murder, the whole is void; and the reason hereof given is, that the grand jury are not to deliberate with the murderers and manslaughter, for it is only the circumstance of malice, that is to be dis-tinguished and that may be implied by the law without any fact at all; and so it lies not in the judgment of a jury, but of the judge; also the intention of their finding in- dicements is, that there may be no malicious prosecution; and therefore if the matter of the indictment be not framed of malice, but is verifirmi, tho' it be not vero, yet it answers their oaths to prefer it. 3 Bully. 206. 2 Rep. Rep. 52. 1 Sid. 23. 2 Rep. 150. Keil. 5.

But it seems to be now agreed, that the grand jury may, without subjeifying themselves to any punishment, find part of a bill true, and part false, and that against the direction of the court. See 2 Hal. 161, and see tit. Jurtris.

And it is said by Hale, that if a bill of indictment be for murder, and the grand jury return it billa vera quad manufaughter, and ignoramus quad murder, the usual course is, in the presence of the grand jury, to strike out malitis, and ex malitis fac protractum, and murder-exito, and leave in so much as makes the bill to be but bare manslaughter. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. 162.

But yet the false way is to deliver them a new bill for manslaughter, and they to indorse it generally billa vero, for the word of the indictment take not the different, but only evidence the affent or denial of the grand jury; it is the bill itself is the infringement, when af- fermed. 2 Hal. Hiff. P. C. 162.

But notwithstanding this diiferention power in the grand jury, yet by the same author, if A. be killed by B. so that it doth confarre de perfuna vivi & accidentis, and the bill bill of murder be presented to them, regularly, they ought to find the bill for murder, and not for manslaughter, or for defendends; because otherwife offences may be smothered without due trial, and when the party comes upon his trial, the whole fact will be examined before the court and the petty jury; and in many cases it is a great disadvantage to the party accused; for if a man kill B. in his own defence, or for justifiable cause, in executing the process of law, upon an assault made upon him, or in his own defence upon the highway, or in defence of his house against those who come to rob him, (in which three last cases it is neither felony nor forfeiture, but upon Not guilty pleaded, he ought to be acquitted,) yet if the grand inquest find ignamaus upon the bill, or find the special matter, whereby the prisoner is accused, and discharged, he may not be adjudged a felon and indicted for murder seven years after. 2 Hal. H. 158.

If the grand jury indorse an indictment on the facts of false news billa vera, but where ifa versa praeta fuerunt multis, falsitatis, vel contra, ignominias or if it indorse an indictment of forcible entry and forcible delanter, billa vera as to the forcible entry, and ignominias as to the forcible delanter; or if it indorse, that if the free hold were in J. S. or the possesstion were in J. S. then they find billa vera, the whole is void. 2d Houk. P. C. 210.

3. Within what place the offence inquired of or tried.

The grand jury are sworn ad inquirendum pro corpore cessitatus, and therefore by the Common law cannot regularly indict or present any offence which does not arise within the county or precinct for which they are returned. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 169. 3d Houk. P. C. 220. And therefore it is a good exception to an indictment, that it doth not appear that the offence arose within such county or precinct. 2 Houk. P. C. 220. and several authorities there cited.

Alfo it hath been holde, that the finding a collaterial matter, expressly alleged in the indictment, in a different county or precinct is void. 1 Houk. P. C. 220.

Alfo it hath been generally holde, that the want of an express allegation of the precinct where the offence happened, is not supplied by putting it in the margin of the indictment, unless it go farther, as by adding in eomitatis praefide, or, which seems to be sufficient, where in the indictment the mention of another county is named before. 2 Houk. P. C. 220.

Alfo if a fact be alleged in B. juus D. in eomitatu E. it is faid, that thereby it sufficiently appears that B. is in the county of E. Cris. 41. 41. and one be indicted for committing the said offence in B. and one be indicted for within the said county, he is tried in both places. 3 Houk. P. C. 220. and before. 2 Houk. P. C. 220.

Alfo if a fact be alleged in B. juus D. in eomitatu E. it is faid, that thereby it sufficiently appears that B. is in the county of E. Cris. 41. 41. and one be indicted for committing the said offence in B. and one be indicted for within the said county, he is tried in both places. 3 Houk. P. C. 220. and before. 2 Houk. P. C. 220.

It seems also, that by the Common law, if a fact done in one county prove a nuisance to another, it may be indicted in either. 2 Houk. P. C. 221.

So if B. by reafon of tenure of lands in the county of B. be bound to repair a bridge in the county of C. if the bridge be in decay, he may be indicted in the county of C. that he is bound reiurare tenure of lands in the county of B. to repair the bridge. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 164.

Alfo by the Common law, if one guilty of larceny in one county carry the goods stolen into another, he may be indicted in either. 2 Houk. P. C. 221.

If a man marry two wives, the first in a foreign country, and the second in England, he may be indicted and tried for it England upon the statute of 1 Jas. 1. cap. 9. 11. it is felony, because the second marriage alone was criminal, and the first had nothing unlawful in it, and was merely of a transitory nature; and by Hawkins, if the second marriage had been in a foreign country, the party might have been indicted here within the parcel of the said marriage 1 Jas. 1. 1 Houk. P. C. 221. 1 Houk. P. C. 111. But for this see 1 St. 171. 11d. 79.

Also if a woman be taken by force in one county, and carried into another, and there married, the offender may be indicted, &c. in the second county on the trial of this indictment. 2 Houk. P. C. 221. because the continuance of the force amounts to a forcible taking. 2 Houk. P. C. 221.

But if an offence in stealing a record, &c. contrary to 8 H. 6. be committed, partly in one county, and partly in another, so as not to amount to a complete offence within the statute in either, it is said, that the party cannot be indicted for a felony in either, but only for a misprision. 2 Houk. P. C. 221.

But notwithstanding the above inferences, it seems agreed as a general rule, that let the nature of the offence indicted be what it will, if it appear upon Not guilty, to be such things as are defined in the indictment, if in which the indictment was found, the party shall be acquitted. 2 Houk. P. C. 220.

And therefore at the Common law, if a man had died in one county of a stroke received in another, it was held, that the homicide was indictable in neither, because the offence was not complete in either; to remedy this inconvenience, it is enacted by 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 24. "That where any one shall be feloniously stricken or poisoned in one county, and die thereof in another, an indictment thereof found by the jurors of the county where the death shall happen, whether before the taking in view of the body, or after, shall be examined in the county where the death happened, and for the same, whether parties, or justices, &c. shall be as effectual, as if the stroke, &c. had been in the county where the party shall die, or where the indictment shall be found."

So if A. committed a felony in the county of D. and had been a secrerary before or after in the county of C. B. could not have been indicted as accersary in either county at Common law; but by the above statute he is indictible, and shall be tried in the county where he so became accersary. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 169. but for this see, tit. Accersary.

But for this witness it, Piracy, and 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 7.

By the 27 Henry 8. cap. 6, for the punishment and speedy trial, as well of the courtiers of any coin current within this realm, as of all felonies and accusa-

ries of the fame, and other offences feloniously done within any lords Marchers or others: the judgment of gaol-delivery and of the peace in the three counties of England, where the King's writ runneth next, adjoining to the lordship Marchers, or other place in Wales, where such counterfeiting, &c. shall be committed, shall have power at their feisions and gaol-delivery, to inquire by what verdict of the men of the place, &c. in England, there to cause such counterfeitters, &c. to be indicted, &c. in like manner as if the same petty treason, &c. had been done within any of the said feiles within the said realm; also such justices shall try all foreign pleas pleaded by such offenders; neither shall an indictment, &c. or fine-making in the lordship Marchers, be a bar to a perfon indicted in the said seile within two years after the feile.

By the 27 Eliz. cap. 2. Treasons by priets or juifets coming into England, and felonies in receiving them, are inquirable and determinable where the offender is apprehended. 2 Hal. Hyl. P. C. 161.

4. What ought to be the form of the body of an indictment at Common law, and it ought to set forth, 1. The substance and manner of the fact; 2dly, The perfect manner or manner in which the same was committed; and 3dly, The circumstances of time and place.

1. Substance and manner of the fact. An indictment, as defined by my Lord Hales, is nothing else but a plain brief and certain narrative of an offence committed by any perfon, and of those necessary circumstances that concur to ascertain the fact, and its nature, in which, in favour of life, great strictesses have at all times been required. 2 Hal. Hyl. 169.

And therefore it is laid down as a good general rule, that in indictments, as well as in appeals, the special manner of the fact ought to be set forth with such certainty, that it may judicially appear to the court that the Indictors have not gone upon insufficient premises. Cro. Eliz. 174, 201. 2 Hawk. P. C. 225.

Hence it hath been held, that no periphrasis, or circumlocution whatsoever, will supply those words of the indictment to show the fact on which the indictment was founded, and which was appropriated for the definition of the offence; as murdruavit in an indictment of murder, etipit in an indictment of larceny, mayhemavit in an indictment of mayhem, burglarizavit or burglarizavit, or elfe burglarizavit, in an indictment of burglary, felonizavit in an indictment of any felony whatsoever, produciravit in an indictment of treason, contra legislatum sine debito of treason against the King's person. 2 Hawk. P. C. 224, and several authorities there cited, 2 Hal. Hyl. P. C. 183, 184. accord.

But in an indictment, or appeal of rape, the same is sufficiently set forth by the words velini reapt, without adding carnalizavit, or set forth the special manner of the terror or violence, and then concluding that the defendant sit feloni reapt. 2 Hawk. P. C. 224.

And from this certainty required in indictments, it hath been held, that an indictment for a felonious breach of prion, without nowing the manner of the impollument, is not good. 2 Hawk. P. C. 225.

So of an indictment for refusing to serve the office of constable, being legitimi modo electi; without nowing the manner of the election. Allen 78. 1 Mod. 24. 5 Moth. 190. 128. 2 Hal. Hyl. P. C. 97.

Vol. II. No. 97.

So it hath been adjudged, that an indictment for burglary is insufficient, without saying that it was mutatis. Cro. Eliz. 299. 120.

Also it is agreed, that an indictment, charging a man with a nuance, in respect of a fact which is lawful in itself, as the erecting of an inn, &c. and only becomes unlawful from particular circumstances, is insufficient, unless it set forth some circumstances that make it unlawful. 2 Red. Ch. 345. Palm. 356. 374.

So it hath been adjudged, that an indictment for traitorously coming to Alkemy like to the King's money, without nowing what money, viz. whether gold, silver or copper, is insufficient; for if the latter of these, the offence could not amount to treason. 2 Hawk. P. C. 225.

So an indictment of perjury, not nowing in what manner, and in what court the false oath was taken, is insufficient; because, for ought appears, it might have been extrajudicial, Cro. Eliz. 137.

But an indictment of extortion charging J. S. with the taking of 50 l. as bullion of an hundred, value 20l., without nowing for what he took it, is good, at least after verdict; for perhaps he might claim it generally, as being due to him as bailiff, in which case the taking could not be otherwise express. 1 Sid. 91. 1 Hawk. P. C. 225.

An indictment charging a man disjunctively is void; as murdruavit, vel murdruarii convicti, or that A. verberavit B. vel verheravi convicti, or that A. fabricavit talen chartan, vel fabricariti convicti, for these are different offenses, and it appears not of which of them the party is accused. 2 Mod. 137. 138. Salik. 371. pl. 8. 2 Hawk. P. C. 226.

Also an indictment accusing a man in general terms, without ascertaining the particular fact laid to his charge, is insufficient; for no one can know what defence to make to a charge which is uncertain, nor can plead it in bar or abatement of a subsequent prosecution; neither can it appear, from the fact given in evidence, against a defendant on such a general accusation are the same of which the indictors have accused him; nor can it judicially appear to the court what punishment is proper for an offence so loosely express. 7 Lev. 203. 1 Kebr. 278. 1 Shaw. 389. 2 Hawk. P. C. 226.

As where the indictment charges the party with having spoken divers fals and scandalous words against J. S. being mayor of A. &c. or with being a common defamer, vexer and oppressor, &c. or with being a common disturber of the peace, and having stirred up divers quarrels amongst his neighbours, or with being a person of evil behaviour and a deceiver, or a common publisher of the King's secrets, &c. or with being a common forefeller, a common thief, a common champer, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 226, and several authorities there cited.

But barretry being an offence of a complicated nature, consisting in the repetition of frequent acts, all of which it would be too tedious to enumerate, experience has fêtted it to be sufficient to charge a man in general as a common barreter. 2 Hawk. P. C. 226. See Barretry.

And for the same reason an indictment against a common foold is sufficient, without nowing any particulars. 2 Hawk. P. C. 227.

Neither is it necessary, for an indictment of either of these two last mentioned offences, to conclude in sequentium omnium legisuum, &c. it appears from the nature of the thing, that it could not but be so. 2 Hawk. P. C. 227.

An indictment must lay the charge against the defendant positively, and not by way of recital, as with a, and b, and c, and d, and e, and it must expressly allege every thing material in the description of the subfiance, nature and manner of the crime; for no intendment shall be admitted to supply a defect of this kind. Salk. 371. Cro. Jac. 30. 4 Co. 42. 5 Co. 150. 2 Hawk. P. C. 227.

Therefore if an indictment of murder want the words ex multis praegravitatis, it is no answer that it has the words words felonious murther, which imply as much. 2 Hark. P. C. 227.

So if any indictment of death want an express allegation, that the party received the hurt laid as the cause of his death, and alfo that he died thereof, no implication will help it. 2 Hark. P. C. 227.

Alfo it is no fond of a feloniously breaking of private and commanding J. S. there imprison'd, &c. to ecape, do not expressly allege that J. S. did ecape, it is no answer that it is fully implied in calling the offence a

Yet frailed and over nice objections in this kind are not to be regarded; as that an indictment of death, laying the affault to have been with malice prepone, doth not expressly repeat it in the clause immediately following, and joined with a copulative flowing the giving of the wound at the fame time and place. 4 Co. 41. 2 Hark.
P. C. 227.

Or that an indictment, setting forth that J. S. was lawfully arrested by virtue of a plaint before such a sheriff, &c. doth not expressly shew that there was a good war-

Or that an indictment setting forth an arrest in such a parlif and ward in London, by virtue of the liberties of London, doth not expressly lay such parlif and ward within the liberties of London. 9 Co. 67. 5 Co. 150. 2 Hark. P. C. 227.

Or that an indictment finding that J. S. existens of such a trade, &c. as will bring it, does not shew in what manner he was committed such a fact, does not expressly alleging that he was of such trade, &c. at the time of the fact; for it fully appears from the natural construction of the participle existens going before the verb, to which it is the nominative case. Cro.
2 Lev. 229. 2 Lev. 378. 1 Rob. 832.

It is a good exception to an indictment of forcible entry, finding that A. diflfeid B. of such land existens liberam tenementum of B. that it is not expressed at what time it was his freehold; for it is fallly indifferen, according to the common rules of construction, whether it was his freehold at the time of the difflfe, or at the time of finding the indictment, the word existens being applied only to the thing which was the subject of the action, and not being the nominative case of the verb,
2 Lev. 229. 2 Mod. 129. 2 Hark. P. C. 228.

If one name or another of an indictment be repugnant to another, or if the fact as laid be impossible or absurd, the indictment is void; as where one is indicted for having forged a writing, in which A. was bound to B. which is impossible if the writing were forg'd; or for having diffeid J. S. of land; wherein it appears, by the indictment itself, that he has no freehold; or for having entered peaceably on J. S. and then and there forcibly diffeid him, or for having diffeid him of land then being, and for ever since continuing to be, his freehold, or for having murdered J. S. at B. where by the indictment it appears that J. S. was only wounded at B. and died at
C. or for felling iron with fafe weights and meafures, whereby A. is not indicted, as fuppofing that iron could be fold by meafure, but inconfiftent, in fuppofing that it was fo fold, and yet at the fame time fold by weight; or for being abfent from church fix months, between fuch and such a time, which appears to have contained only the space of eleven days; or for feloniously curving down trees, &c. yet where the ftreap is clear, a small impropriety may be dipofed with; as where one is indicted for having moved unam armam fami, which is faid to be fufficient, and yet that which was moved could not, at the fame time of the mowing, in fine, be called hay, but grafs only. 2 Hark. P. C. 228-9. and feveral authorities there cited.

Alfo a repugnancy in an indictment in fettling forth the offence of the accufcry, is as fatal as it is in fettling forth that of the principal; as where an indictment of death having laid the froke on one day, and the death at another, charges the accufcry with having abetted the principal at the time of the felony only. 2 Hark. P. C. 229.

But where feveral are prefent and fett a fact, and one only abftracts the murther, an indictment of the murther, the fame as an appeal, either lay is as done by the one, and abetted by the refl. 9 Co. 67. Plow. 57.

But if it barely charge a man with having been prefent, it is void; because a man may be prefent innocently. 2
Hark. P. C. 229.

An indictment of J. S. as accufcry to four, by the words, Scient ficeretur felonum praditci foretis ab felonia receptavit, without adding esse, is naft; for it appears not clearly how many of them he is charged to have received. 2 Hark. P. C. 229.

Alfo an indictment of a confable for having voluntarily and feloniously fcrved a perfon arrested by him upon procifion of felony to ecape, without fhewing what the felony was, and that it was actually committed, is faid to be void by the uncertainty: But an indictment for knowingly forfuring perfons convicted of felony to ecape, is faid to be good, without fhewing expressly what the felony was, or that it was committed, if the record of convifion be fet forth with convenient certainty; for the removes what the felony was, and that it was committed. 2 Hark. P. C. 229; and other authorities there cited.

It is holden by fome, that an indictment finding that
J. S. scienter receptavit J. D. being a felon, is not good, without expressly fhewing that he knew him to be a felon;
but this, it is no fendicmment is good, and the plain construction of the word scienter carries it thro' the whole sentence. 2 Hark. P. C. 230; and other authorities there cited.

285, The indictment muft fit forth with certainly the parties mentioned or referred to in it. The name and addition of the party indicted ought regularly to be inferted, and inferted truly, in every indictment; but if the party be indicted by a wrong Christian name, fnarnme, or addition, and he pleads to that indictment.
Not guilty, or answer to that indictment upon his arrafement by that name, he &hall not be received after to plead misnomer or falfity of his addition; for he is concluded and effoped by his plea by that name, and of that effope; the gaoler and fheriff that doth execution fhall have advantage. 2 Hal. Hifl. P. C. 175.

But it is faid, that an indictment that the King's highway in fuch a place is in decay, thro' the default of the inhabitants of fuch a town, is good without naming any perfon in certain. 2 Rol. Abr. 79. 2 Hark. P. C. 230.

Alfo it is faid, that no indictment can take any advantage of a miftaken furname in the indictment, either by plea in abatement, or otherwise, notwithstanding fuch furname have no manner of affinity with his true one, and he was never known by it. 2 Hark. P. C. 230.

And in this requift an indictment differs from an appeal, whereof it is certain that a misnomer of a furname may be pleaded in abatement as well as any other misnomer

Not only the misnomer of the name of baptism will abate an indictment, but also the naming the defendant Knight, &c. who is a baroner, and no knight, &c. or the omission of a name of dignity; as where Garter King at arms is not named Garter in the indictment; and for of any other name of dignity, if precepts of outlawry lies upon it. Hawk. P. C. 230; and several authorities there cited.

By the Common law, the party indicted could not take advantage of a misnomer or the want of addition,
when the furname is given aoliain against the party's prefent.
and appearing to their view, there could be no injury by the misnomer; alfo as felon generally go by no certain name, and have no fixed habitation, it was thought hard to find out their real names or proifions; but this was altered by the statute 1 Hen. 5. c. 9. 5. which requires that that in all indictments, &c. the party indicted ought to have the addition of his mystery, degree, place and county.

The additions required by the statute are, that of his degree, a gentleman, esquire; of his mystery, as husbandman, tailor, sufferer, &c. therefore if the addition be only general, as servant, farmer, citizen, &c. or of crimes and misdemeanors only, as extortioner, vagabond, heretic, &c. there are no good additions. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 176.

But if this fact be done, the addition ought to be to the substantive name, and not to that which comes after the alias dictus, because regularly the addition refers to the last antecedent.

If several persons be indicted for one offence; minusse, or want of addition of all, quasheth the indictment only against one, and the rest shall be put to answer; for they are in law as several indictments; and so in trespas. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 177.

But in 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 231, it is said that where several are indicted, and there is an omission of an addition as to one, it makes the indictment vicious as to all; for which is cited 10 Eliz. 18.

Not only the defendant, but regularly all other persons also mentioned in an indictment, must be described with convenient certainty; and therefore it seems to be generally agreed at this day, that an indictment for suffering divers persons, being agents of an affluence, or for dividing divers affluences without cause, or for taking divers sums of money of divers persons for such a toll, &c. without naming any bakers, &c. in particular, is sufficient.

But an indictment for murder evisfium igniti is good; and so for fleeling the goods evisfium igniti; so of an affluence in quominum, and if he be acquitted or convicted, and be afterwards indicted for an affluence of such a man by name, he may plead the former conviction or acquittal, and aver it to be the same person.

But an indictment quod invenit quondam hominem mortuem, as felonia furiarum of duas tunicas, without saying de bani & catalla evisfum igniti, is not good. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 181.

If the goods of a chapel be stolen, the indictment shall say bani & catalla evisfum in catalla profuprum; or if it be done in time of vacation, bani & catalla evisfum tempore vacatis; but if the goods of a parish church be stolen, as the bell, the books, &c. it shall run bani porcichianum de s. in catalla gaudianum ecclesiae, and shall not fuppothem bani evisfum. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 181.

The objection to an indictment for beftolen, the offender may be indicted quod bani tertiafus in catalla A. executoris ejusfum B. or it may be general bani ejusfus A. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 181.

If A. dying be buried, and B. opens the grave in the night-time, and flealeth the winding sheet, the indictment cannot fuppoth them the goods of the dead man, but of the executors, administrators, or ordinary, as the case falls out.

An indictment quod felonia, &c. evisfum quondam peciam pani evisfum f. s. without saying de bani & catalla evisfum f. s. was therefore qualified. Crw. Eliz. 490.

There is no need of an addition of the perfon robbed or murdered, &c. unless there be a plurality of perons of the same name; neither then is it effential to the indictment, tho' sometimes it may be convenient, for diftribution take, to add it; for it is sufficient if the indictment be thus laid down, as that one was killed or stolen, and there be among the many of the same name.

And it hath been adjudged, that an indictment of an affluence on Jahu, parrifh-quiet of D. in the county of C. is good without mentioning his surname; for the certainty of the perfon sufficiently appears. Keizat. 25. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 182.

But it seems that if such indictment had only described him by his name of baptizm without any farther addition, it had been too uncertain; yet the contrary feems to be held in Mun. ; however, it seems agreed, that a repugnancy or ambiguity in the defcription of the perfon injured will vitiate an indictment; as where one is indicted for fleeling kena, T. and no T. was mentioned before. 2 Hawk. P. C. 232-3.

Mun. 466. pl. 662.

It is not necessary to allege in an indictment of death, that the percy was killed in the peace of God. 2 Hawk. P. C. 233.

An indictment must set forth the thing wherein the offence is committed. An indictment which doth not with sufficient certainty set forth the thing wherein the offence was committed, is insufficient; as where one is indicted for having forged a leaf of certain hands, without mentioning them any certain parcel, or for having stolen bona & catta f. s. without describing them, or for having trespassed on two clofs of meadow or pasture, or for having diverted quandam partem aquae running from such a place to such a place, without any farther description, or for having ingoffed magnum quantitatum firminis & fami, or diversa cumula triuiti, without shewing how much of each, or for having carried away duas centenas cafii, without adding libras or uncias, &c. or for having erected several cottages contra fermam flatui, without shewing how many.

It is said to be most proper, in indictments of larceny and trespas on a living thing, to shew to whom the property of it belonged, by calling it the ex or horae, &c. of f. s. without using the words bani & catta; yet there are many precedents in books of good authority wherein this nicety is not observed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 234.

If the thing be movable, as a horse, cow, &c. it is said to be most proper to shew its worth by the word pretium; but if the thing be immovable, and consists of dead things, it ought to be ad valorem; yet this nicety is not necessary; neither is it clear that the worth of the thing stolen is required to be set forth in an indictment of larceny for any other purpose, than to shew that the crime amounts to grand larceny, and the better to ascertain the crime, in order for a reftitution, or in an indictment of trespas, for any other purpose, than to aggravate the crime. 2 Hawk. P. C. 235.

An indictment quod plurium evisfium 20 evisfus, matrizes & agnos, or matrizes & worveres, is not good, because it doth not appear how many of one sort, and how many of another; but 20 evisfus generally might have been good without the addition of things done or done, as in case of realevin or trespass.

But an indictment de quattuor rigidis & ciftis, Anglica cheffes and coffers, is good, because synonymous.

46th, Indictment must set forth circumstances of time and place. It is laid down as an undoubted principle in all the books that treat of this matter, that no indictment whatsoever can be good without precisely shewing a certain year and day of the material facts alleged in it.

2 Hawk. P. C. 235. and several authorities there cited.

As an indictment of death laying the affluence at a certain time, &c. do not appear in the clause of the stroke, or if it do not set forth the time of the death as well as of the stroke. 2 Hawk. P. C. 235. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 178.

So if any indictment lay the offence on an impossible day, or on a day that makes the indictment repugnant to itself, or if it lay done and the same day on different days, it is sufficient. 2 Hawk. P. C. 235.

As if A. be indicted quod priva die Maii & secunda die Maii appud D. he made an affluence upon B. & quandam peciam f. s. ad tare & hemin invent felonia evisfus, &c. and it is uncorrected and is f. s. It is an indictment good, because there are several days mentioned before, and it is uncertain it is clear that f. s. follow.
If it be indicted that he hya Sainth Petri anno 20
Car. killed Y. S. this is not good, because there are two faijrs, S. Petar, and neither without addition, viz.
St. Peter ad viva>i, and St. Peter in cathedra. 2 Hal.
Hift. P. C. 178.

The words adunh & ilkium in the subfquent part of an indictment, are as effciucl as if the year and day mentioned in the former part had been expressly repeated.
2 Hal. P. C. 5-9

Also if it lay the faft on the Thursday after the faft of Pentecost in such a year, or on the atas of Easter, &c.
(which sfall be taken for the eighth day after the faft) or on the tenth of March last, (being afercarned by the file of the forfams, &c.) it is as good as if it had expressly named the day of the month, &c. 2 Hal. P. C. 236.

Also if an indictment charge a man with an omission;
&c. as not fcoining such a diet, it needs not fio-any time. 2 Hal. P. C. 236.

So if an indictment charge a man with having done such a miftake such a day and year, and on divers other days, it is void only as to the facts alleged on the days unceraitly set forth; but if it charge a man generally with feveril offences at feveril times between such a day and such a day, without laying any one at a certain day, it hath been adjudged to be wholly void. 2 Hal. P. C.
236.

Yet it hath been folemly adjudged, that a convidion of deer-flealing, fettting forth the offence between the 8th and 12th of July, &c. is fufficient. 2 Hal. P. C.
236.

And in thefe cases it is laid to be moft regular to set forth the year, by flying the year of the King; yet this may be difpenfed with, for special reafons, if the very year be otherwise sufficiently effcated for, that only in material. 2 Hal. P. C. 236.

Every indictment at Common law muft expressly fioe fome place wherein the offence was committed, which muft appear to have been within the jurifduction of the court in which the indictment was taken, and muft be alleged without any fpecifical phrase; for if one and the fame offence be alleged at two different places, or at B. aforefaid, where B. was not before mentioned, or if the froke be alleged at A. and the death at B. and the indictment conclude that the defendant fec felance carnivorii the defeated at A. the indictment is void. 2 Hal. P. C.
236.

So it is alfo, if it lay not both a place of the froke and defh, or if any place fo alleged be not fuch from whence a vifor may come; as to which it hath been adjudged, that if a fact be alleged in a parish in London, with fome other addition which sufficiently affures it, or in the parish of St. Lawrence Jewry, it needs not fioe the ward.
2 Hal. P. C. 236. 9 Cc. 66.

Also in fome crimes no vill need be named, as upon an indictment of barrely, because he is a barreter very where, and it shall be tried de corpo comitatis. 2 Hal.

Subf in the margin, the indictment supposing a fact done opus in com' pradiis, is good, for it refers to the

But if there be two counties named, one in the margin, another in the addition of any part, or in the recital of an act of parliament recited in the premises of the indictment, the fact laid opus in com' pradiis vitiated the indictment; because two counties are named before, and it is uncertain to which it refers. C.s. Elia. 739. 2

Indictment again A. B. that he opus N. in com' pradiis' made an affiftit upon C. D. of F. in com' pradiis
C. D. is general, and fuch a thing to do a fuch thing, need not fioe where the facts happened which bring the defendant within the prohibition; as where it is enacted, that it fiall be treason for a person born within the realm, and in pofhif orders to remain here, &c.
in which case it is laid, that the indictment needs not be fioed for the birth or ordination. 2 Hal. P. C.
237.

Also a mistake in evidence of the place laid in is no cafe material, on Not guilty pleaded, if the faft be proved in don other place in the county; but if there be no such place in a county, as that wherein an offence is laid in an appeal or indictment, all proceeds thereon is void, by the fatutes of 6 Hen. 6, cap. 1. and 18 Hen. 6, cap.

5. Where the offences indicted may be laid jointly, and where severally, and wherein both jointly and severally;
and where the offences of several persons may be laid in one indictment.

Although the offences of severil persons cannot be but feveral, because one man's offence cannot be another's, but every man must answer for himself; yet if it wholly arife from a joint act, which is in itself criminal, as where feveral join in keeping a gaining-houfe, or in deerflealing, or maintenance, &c. the defendants may be indicted jointly and severally; as, thus, Quod cytiverunt & utere quorum cytivdum, or jointly only; for it fufficiently appears, that if all are joined in fuch act, they ought and therefore fome of them may each be convicted, and fome acquitted. 2 Hal. P. C. 240.

But where the offences arise from a joint act, which in itelf is not criminal, but may be fo by reafon of some personal defect peculiar to each defendant, as where divers follow a joint trade, for which the law requires a feveril years apprenticeship, in which cafe each trader's particular defect, if in the joint act makes him guilty, it fceems moft proper to indict them severally, and not jointly, because each man's offence is grounded on a defeat peculiar to himself. 2 Hal. P. C. 240-1. 2 Hal.

This reafon indictions have been qualified for jointly charging severil defendants for not repairing the fieets before their houses, or for taking inmates, or for neglecting a day of fattiing appointed by proclamation; and this is agreeable to the rule of law as to bringing actions on penal ftutes, wherein severil defendants shall not be joined, except it be in refept of fome one thing in which they are jointly concerned; as where feveral join in a fuit in the Admiralty on a covenant on land, or in procuring or giving an untrnce verdict, &c. 2 Hal. P. C.
241. and several authorities there cited.

But yet where A. B. and D. were indicted for erealing four feveril imps ad communa numentum, it was adjudged, that two and fome offences of the fame nature severil perfons may be indicted in the fame indictment, but then others for want of the words ad inspirand. pro Domino Regis & pro corporis comitatus; yet of late years exceptions of this kind have not been much favoured, especially if the indictment was in the inferior courts, and that which is omitted be, in common understanding, implied in what is expressed. 2. Hawk. P. C. 254.

Every such indictment must also be such as where the indictment was found, that it may appear to have been at a place within the jurisdiction of the court; and therefore if it be false, that the indictment was taken at a seifions of the peace, holden for such a county at B. without swearing in what county B. lies, otherwise than by putting in the county in the indictment; or if the whole be false, and held not to lie, the judgment was arrested.

6. What ought to be the form of a caption of an indictment, and where an indictment may be quashed.

The caption of the indictment is not part of the indictment itself, but it is the title or preamble, or return, that it is made from an inferior court to a superior, from whence a certiorari issues to remove it, or where the whole record is made up in form; whereas for the record of the indictment itself, the jurisdiction of the court wherein it is taken, is only thus: 'Juratores pro Domino Regis super inquisitione suam presentes, wherein this to be returned upon a certiorari, is more full and explicit. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 145.

Every caption of an indictment must flow that it was taken before a court which has a proper jurisdiction; and therefore if it flow only that it was taken before J. S. steward, without swearing to whom or in what court; or if the caption of an indictment flow, super eftamum curiam ; or if it were such for the diocese in which the indictment was taken, it is insufficient; but if it flow that he was a coroner in the county, it sufficiently flows that he was a coroner for the county; and if the caption of an indictment flow, that it was taken at the seifions of the peace of such a county, it sufficiently flows that such seifions was holden for the county; but if it only flow that it was holden in the county, it is false to be insufficient; so it is also if it omit the clause nec non ad diversa felantia, &c. or if it barely flow that the indictment was taken at a seifions of the peace, without swearing before whom, or without naming of the justices for what place their were justices; or if in describing them as justices ad pecem, &c. consenervat. omit the word officiant, and if it sufficiently flows that some of them were of the quorum, by flowing that the indictment was taken at a general seifions, and if it call them justices of peace, it needs not any farther to flow that they were justices of the King's peace. 2 Hawk. P. C. 254.

The caption of an indictment ad magnam curiam cum leva tent. is insufficient; but if it be ad magnam curiam & ad leman, or ad uif. franci pleg. cum cur. baren tent. perhaps it is sufficient; for since the court-baron has no jurisdiction over criminal matters, and the caption in these last cases is not expresses, that the indictment was taken at it, as it is in the first case, the court will in- tend that it was at the leet, which alone had power to take it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 254.

The not flowing in the caption of an indictment at a general seifions, without being holden by charter or pre- scription, is helped by the multitude of precedents. 2 Hawk. P. C. 254.

Every caption of an indictment ought to flow that the indictors were of the precinct for which the court was holden, and that they were twelve in number, and that they were of the justices, or naming for what place their indictments have been quashed for an omission of the names of the jurors; and others for want of the words pro & legitimum hominem; and others for want of the words advate & ibidem before jurat & onerat; and others for want of the words ad inspirand. pro Domino Regis & pro corporis comitatus.
bills vera. But this indentor not being figned, but being taken by the judges of the peace for a full indentor in both points, they allowed the same, but upon the condition, that in B. R. by certiorari, and the indentor returned as above, they award re-refilition. It was moved, that they ought not to regard the indentor, for the court did not fend for that, but only for the indentor; and this indentor makes it appear, that the indentor at the time of the indentor of the peace has done more than he was commanded to do. But per cur. The indentor is parcel of the indentor, and the perfection of it, and the court fent for the indentor, num disputis id tanger, and the indentor touches it principally; for it is the life of it. After this, the court is not the profes- sor ought to have preferred a new indentor for the forcible detainer only; for now, being made one entire indentor, and the jury finding only the laft, it is no indentor at all. The defendant, upon the 29th of September, deliver'd him over to the new mayor, and traverfeth the imprisonmen in London; and adjudged upon demurrer, that the indentor to the traverse was not good; for a justice of peace cannot detain in prifon a person fufpicious, but during a convenient time of the examining of the party. He delivered him to the plain- tiff after three days, and within that time to take his examination, and fend him to prifon, and ought not to detain him as long as he pleads, as here he did 18 days; neither ought he to detain him in prifon in his own house, but to commit him to the gaol of the county; for other- wise, when the justice comes to detain him, the justice is not in the gaol, and may not be delivered, and so fould lie longer than is reafonable. Infant, (Infans,) Before the age of one and twenty years, a man or woman is called an infant in the law.

infant of eight years of age or above, may commit bimicide, and be hanged for it, viz. if it may appear by hiding the offence whereof he was capable. This is by the law to the age of twelve years. Yet Co. an Litt. fett. 405, fays, That an infant fhall not be punished till the age of fourteen, which faies he, is the age of defcription. Canovil. edit. 1727.

5. The feral ages and periods diftinguished by the law

From the obervations made on the daily afftions of infants, as to their arriving to defcription, the laws and custums of every country have fixed upon particular periods on which they are presumed capable of acting with reason and defcription; in our law the full age of man or woman is twenty-one years. 3 Boc. Abr. 118.

Therefore if one under the age of twenty-one years makes his will, and thereby devises his lands, and after attains the age of twenty-one years, and dies, without making a new will, or confirming thereof, this devise is void.
Dyer 143. Rym. 84. 1 Sid. 162.

But tho' a perfon under the age of twenty-one cannot deipofe of his lands, yet it is faid, that one under that age may, pursuant to the statute of 12 Car. 2, cap. 24, deipofe of the body of his infant child, and that fuch deipofition draws after his land, &c. as incident to the the cuftody. Fargh. 178.

Alo it feem, it was agreed, that an infant male at fourteen, and female at twelve, may deipofe of their perfional estate at thofe ages: For herein the Common law has appointed no time, being a matter cognizable in the spiritual court, which herein proceeds according to the Civil law, by which law infants at thofe ages are premned to have fufficient defcription to make fuch di-posifion; and as to their marriage, they are not to be fett aside, or controlled in Chancery or the temporal courts. 2 Med. 315. 2 Jones 210. Comb. 50.

The age of conflent to a marriage in an infant male is fourteen, and in a female twelve; but they may marry before, and if they agree therein, their marriage is not be to be fett aside, or controlled in Chancery or the temporal courts. 2 Med. 315. 2 Jones 210. Comb. 50.

But tho' the party above age may as well defcribe as the other, yet it is faid that the party cannot do it before the other arrives at the proper age: Alto it is faid to have been adjudged, that if a man marries a woman that is within the age of twelve years, and the woman at eleven years of age defcribes to the marriage, and after the husband takes another wife, and hath issue by her, that this is a bastard; for the firft marriage continues not withstanding the defcription of the woman; for tho' the defcription at falling within the age of twelve years, and so her defcription is void. Co. Lit. 79, 1 Roll. Abr. 341.

If a man marries a woman that is within the age of twelve years, and after the feme covert within the age of conflent defcribes to the marriage, and after the age of twelve years marries another, now the firft marriage is absolutely dillolved, fo that he may take an another wife; for tho' the defcription within the age of confent was not fufficient, yet her taking another husband after the age of confent affirms the defcription, and fo the marriage avoided ob iniur. 1 Rol. Abr. 341.

But for the better explanation hereof it may not be proper to infer a cafe determined before the delegates, which was thus:

Mrs. K. Fertrcrrar was married to my Lord Decius, the being of the age of twelve years and a half, and he
of the age of eight; afterwards, the being thirteen years old, did free from the marriage, and married Mr. Fillers;
and upon fuit in the Spiritual court the second marriage was afirmed: The Lord Decius appealed to the delegates, and it was argued by Civilians and Common lawyers before the bishop of Llandan and Racheft, North Ch. J.
Littleton Baron, Jones and Atkins Jullices, and several Doctors of the Civil Law: The Chancery of the Civil Laws could not contraft matrimony, but only supofitia futuris, and therefore tho' they bind themselves per verba de pra-fenti tempore, yet the law, by reason of the incapacity of the parties, would make fuch a conftitution that it fiall only be a contraft de futuro. In this cafe indeed, one of the parties is of age of confent, but that makes no difverity; for a contraft of matrimony is utroque obligatorius, and reciprocal in its nature. On the other fide it was faid, that fuch a contraft as this betwixt perfonli of unequal ages might as well caducate as other contracts, which are also utroque obligatorius; they faid, that a con-traft of marriage carries a relation in itself, and is reciprocal, but that in some cufes this may fail, by reason of an accident or commonifcence in the perfon, notwithstanding which the nature of the thing will remain to be utro obligatorius, as we fee in other contracts; but argments from the definition of civil affairs are not cogent;
for no law can give birth to a new commonifcence and circiim-cstances, but ought to be differently applied ac-conaring the particular circumstances the require. The law does not make contrats per verba de praefenti tempore to be contras de futuro, but in cufes of minors, and they cannot thrive in the law that contracts per verba de praefenti by majors, fhall be by conftruction made contracts de futuro. The laws of God and nature require performance of promifles and agreements; and the woman, in the present cafe, cannot differ from the husband come to the age of content, because till then he cannot differ no more than he can affent. Servanteys Magnæa. In our law, marriage between minors has the effect of a marriage till it be annulled; if the wife, at the time of marriage, be the husband of what age forever, and dower can never be, but where there was a precedent marriage, poffit cæta puniri causa; such a wife shall have an appeal of the death of her husband, and the husband in such a case shall have a right de morti abulae cum boni viri. If kept by him his heir under the age of content, and married, the lord cannot tender him to marriage, upon a difagreement, he being within age. Lit. and Afton, 5 Jac. 1. Where two within age had contracted matrimony, and the parent of one was bound to give so much at their age of content, if they would agree to this marriage: A fact cited in a recent work brought for that marriage, and it was found that within age they disfagreed, but at their full age agreed; and judgment was for the plaintiff, because the disagreement was not material. 1 Inst, 79. Banifhers versus Offey. Our law calls it matrimonium, although the term of fojuslita is not unknown to us; we find it in Plow. L. 6. Littlefield, 81. The doctrine is thus: to those who regard our law to have such a marriage, he cited 1 Inst, 33. 1 Rol. Abr. 340. Dyer 369. To prove that before age of content no agreement or disfagreement can be, Mar 575. 1 Rol. Abr. 341. 1 Inst, 79, and in the pleadings in 7 Co. Rep's cafe, and 6 Co. Abr. 102, and in the same to show how the law gives such credit to this inchoate marriage, that if the parties die but before it be avoided, the law will not say that it was null and void; and upon this ground the actes of dower and appeal which have been cited. The cafe in Dyer 369. is for the decree; for there, by the opinion of many doctors, quamvis sita fojuslita de fatis, tamen in causa adiat extenuand a al verum matrimonium rotione privileg. He cited 7 H. 6, 11. 6 Co. 22. And the sentence given in the spiritual court was affirmed. 3 Bro. Abr. 119, 120.

And as the age of fourteen is the age of content to a marriage in an infant male; so by law hath he several other ages affigled him to several purposes, viz. at the age of twelve, to take the oath of allegiance in the town or leet; at fourteen to be out of ward of guardian in focage, to chufe a guardian, and this is also accounted his age of dition; fifteen to have had aid per fair Finz Chevalier. Co. Lit, 98 b. Hob. 225. The principal guardian in every eyry did not determine till the heir, if a male, came to the age of twenty-one years; because it was presumed that till that age he was not capable of doing knight's service, and attending the lord in his wars. The guardianship of an heir female determined at fourteen at Common law, but by Stat, Woffinch the fifh, the lord had the wardship till the heir attained the age of sixteen, to tender her convenable marriage; but the authority of a guardian in focage, as has been faid, ceases at the age of fourteen, at which age the infant may call his guardian to an account, and may chufe a new guardian. Lit. fet. 103. Co. Lit, 75. 2 Inst, 358.

One within the age of twenty-one years may do bamage, but cannot do fealty; because in doing of fealty he ought to be sworn, which an infant cannot be. Co. Lit, 65 b. 2 Inst, 11.

An infant at the age of seventeen may be a procurator or executor; and in this both the Civil and Common laws agree. 5 Co. 29 b. Giff. Ex. 307. 1 Hal. Hift. P. C. 17.

Infancy is a good cause of refual of a clerk; also by the statutes 13 Eliz. cap. 12, and '13 & 14 Car. 2, none is to be admitted a deacon unless he be twenty-three at least, and a priest he be twenty-four. Comp. Inst, 142, 241, 254, Giff. Cod, 168, 3 Med, 67.

By the custom of Gavel-kind an infant at the age of fifteen is reckoned at full age to sell his lands; and this seems to have been taken from the Civil law, which reckons fourteen the ætus puberty; for they reckoned that though the infant had ended his two years of guardian-ship at fourteen, yet he might not have completed his account with his guardian till the age of fifteen, and that was esteemed to be the age when he was completely out of guardianship; and therefore at this age he was allowed to sell the lands dedicated to him. But in the civil law, when an infant was nineteen years of age, the Civil law does not allow of his ditions till the age of twenty-five; therefore this must have been allowed by the old Saxan law, because they thought that a great deal of time was lost, if the infant could only use his own without being able to dispose of it in a way of traf- ffs, and may be by law with a infant, twenty-five, and therefore they allowed the infant to sell, but under great limitations and restrictions, that he might not be defrauded; and by this means they thought there was sufficient prov- ision made for the necessity of commerce, in which the small divided flares was absolutely necessary. Lamb. 524.

Also by custom in some places, an infant freed of lands in focage may at the age of fifteen years make a lease for years, which shall bind him after he comes of age; for the custom makes fifteen his full age to that purpose. Co. Lit, 45 b.

Of the common law of London, an infant unmarried, and above the age of fourteen, though under twenty-one, may bind himself apprentice to a freewoman of London by indenture, with proper covenants; which covenants, by the custom of London, shall be as binding as if he were of full age. Mar 134. 2 Busl, 132. 2 Rep. 307.

As to capital offences, in which the law is the same with regard to the male and female sex, the age of fourteen is the common standard, at which both males and females are, by our law, obnoxious to capital punishments; for this being the ætus puberty, or of age of discretion, the law presumes them at those years to be dis- crete, and capable of disarming between good and evil; and therefore subjects them to capital punishments as much as if they were of full age. F. N. B. 202. Co. Lit, 247 b. Dali, cap. 95, and 104. 1 Hal. Hilt. P. C. 25. 1 Hook. P. C. 2.

But though the age of fourteen be the ætus puberty, before which our laws do not presume the party to be dolis capita, and therefore that a party indicted for a capital offence commited before those years is to be found Not guilty, yet hath this general rule the following tem- peraments. 1 Hal. Hilt. P. C. 26.

1. That if the party be above twelve, tho' under 14, and charged to be dolis capita, and could discern between good and evil at the time of the offence committed, he may be convicted, and undergo judgment and execution of death, tho' he hath not attained the age of fourteen; but herein, according to the nature of the offence and circumstances of the cafe, the judge may or may not in discretion relieve him, before or after judgment, in or- der to the obtaining the King's pardon. 1 Hal. Hilt. P. C. 26.

2. If an infant be above seven, and under twelve years, and commit a capital offence, prima facie he is to be judged Not guilty, and to be found so; but because he is sup- posed as of discretion to judge between good and evil: But yet if it appear, by strong and pregnat evidence and circumstances, that he had discretion to judge between good and evil, judgment of death may be given against him; for malitia fojuslita atata; but herein the circum- stances must be inquired of by the jury, and the infant is not to be convicted upon his confession: Also herein, my Lord Hale fays, that it is prudent after conviction to repite judgment, or at least execution; but he fays that if he be convicted the judge cannot discharge, but only reprimse him from judgment, and leave him it custody till the King's pleasure be known. 1 Hal. Hilt. P. C. 26.

3. At Bury summer assizes 1748, William Lord, a boy of ten years of age, was convicted before the coroner of murder of a girl of about five years of age; and received sentence of death. But the Chief Justice, out of regard to the tender years of the prisoner, reprieved execution, till he should have an opportunity of taking the opinion of the rest of the judges; whether it was proper that he should be punished in the severest manner. There being great vacuity in the presence of the court, he was able to procure the attendance of the judges, and from the bench he was told that the question of his sentence would be considered as a matter of great delicacy. He spoke of the delicacy with which he was to be treated, and of the considerate conduct of his father, who was highly commended for his moderation and kindness. He was not, however, to be reprieved, but received sentence of death, and was ordered to appear before the court on the following day. The case was tried at Bury summer assizes 1748.

2. Who are to be considered as minors, and law for the rights and regards and takes notice of infants in ventures a mere.

The privilege of infancy does not extend to the King; for the political rules of government have thought it necessary, that he who is to govern and manage the whole kingdom, should never be considered as a minor, incapable of governing himself and his own affairs. Ca. Lit. 43. Dyer 209. b.

Therefore if the King within age make any leaf or grant, he is bound presently, and cannot avoid them, either during his minority, or when he comes of full age. Plow. 213. a. 5 Co. 27. 7 Co. 12.

Of the King consent to an act of parliament during his minority, yet he cannot act without the advice and consent of the King, as King, cannot be a minor; for as King he is a body politic. Ca. Lit. 43. 1 Roll. Abr. 728.

Alfo the acts of a mayor and commonly shall not be avoided, by reason of the nonage of the mayor. Cr. Car. 557. 10 H. 2.

Although a Duke, Earl, or the like, be but a minor, or not above ten years of age, in the custody and in the family of another nobleman, who may and doth retain chaplains, yet he may qualify chaplains to be dispensed withal to hold two benefices with cure, in like form as if he was of full age. 4 Co. 119. Comp. Incumb. 22.

An infant in general shall have no copyright, and all other privileges of the infant at Common law; because though he hath the privilege of alienation at fifteen, yet that doth not take from him any privilege he had before at Common law. 1 Roll. Abr. 144.

A bastard being implied he have his age; for the dilatory plea must be determined before the plea in chief can come on; so that the plea of infancy will play the fury, before it can be inquired whether he is or is not a bastard. Ca. Lit. 244. b.

A child in ventre a mere may be appointed executor, though it may take a legacy; also if there are two or more at a birth, they shall be joint executors on the interest of the thing bequeathed; for the Civil law, for the benefit of the infant, repuets a child in his mother's womb in the same condition as if it were born. Gedolph. Obsc. Leg. 102. Y y y

If with impunity. There are many crimes of the most heinous nature, such as in the present cafe the murder of young children, and the like; which, children are very capable of committing, and which they may in some circumstances be under strong temptations to commit; and therefore, tho' the taking away the life of a boy of ten years old may appear on the face of it, yet as the example of this boy's punishment may be a means of deterreing others from the like offences, and as the sparing this boy merely on account of his age will probably have a quite contrary tendency, in justice to the publick, the law ought to take its course, unless there remaineth any doubt touching his guilt. In this general principle all the judges concurred. But two or three of them, out of great tenderness and caution, advised the Ch. Juft. to send another reprov for the prisoner; suggesting, that it might possibly appear on further inquiry, that the boy had taken this matter upon himself, at the instigation of some person or other, who hoped by this artifice to screen the real offender from justice. Accordingly, the Chief Justice did grant one or two more reprievs; and defined the judge who took the boy's examination, and also some other persons in whom prudence he could, to make the first inquiry they might into the affair, and make report to him. And he again underwrote, that if anything like, determined to fend no more reprievs, and to leave the prisoner to the justice of the law at the expiration of the lat. But before the expiration of that reprov, execution was refipted till further order, by warrant from one of the Secretaries of State. And at the summer assizes 1757, he was benefited of his Majesty's pardon, upon condition of his entering immediately into the sea-service. Potter's Crown Law 70.
If there be bastard issue by either party, and the bastard enters, and dies before, the issue shall inherit the land, and exclude the mother for ever; but in such case if the bastard had died leaving issue in ventre sa mère, and the mother had entered, and then is born, yet cannot be entered upon the mother: And hereunto a father's issue by a freehold estate requires an immediate defect, which cannot be before the person is in esse; also by our law the freehold cannot be in abeyance. *Co. Litt. 244.

It appears to have been a matter of much controversy, whether a devise of lands to an infant in ventre sa mère be good, for it is not in being to take at the time of the death of the devise; and since, as some say, by the devise the person is to take immediately after the death of the devise, the freehold cannot be put in abeyance by the gift of the parties; but others hold, that such devise is good, that the infant be not in esse at the death of the devise, and that the freehold shall not be in abeyance, but shall descend to the heir at law in the mean time. *Hun. 6. 13. Bro. Deuey 32. Mar. 177, 637. *2 Bull. 273. *Cra. E. 423. *1 Lew. 135. *1 Sid. 153. Raym. 163. *1 Ker. 85. *1 Sid. 231. *2 Mod. 9.

But however all the books agree in this, that a devise to an infant when he shall be born, or when God shall give him birth, is good as an executory devise, and that the freehold shall descend to the heir at law in the mean time. *1 Sid. 153. *1 Lew. 135. Raym. 163. S. C. Snow and Cutler.

So it is clear, that if land be devised for life, the remainder is to be taken by a meddlesome child, that this is a good contingent remainder; because there is a person in being to take the particular estate; and if the contingent remainder vests during the continuance of the particular estate, or of infant that it determines, it is sufficient. *Mar. 657. Church and Wat. *3 Lew. 458. *4 Mod. 359. *1 Sid. 233. 27. 9, 10, 11. Rule 5 W. C. 3. 16. and Reimbursements.

Also it seems agreed, that a man may surrender copyhold lands immediately to the use of an infant in ventre sa mère; for a surrender is a thing executory, and nothing vests before admittance; and therefore if there be a person to take at the time of the admittance, it is sufficient, and not like a grant at Common law, which putting the estate out of the grantor must be void, if there be no-body to take. *1 Roll. Rep. 100, 138. *2 Bull. 273. *Cra. Cyth. 9, and see *F. Car. 637.

If an usufruition be had on one in ventre sa mère; at the next term after his birth, he shall be relieved on the statute of *W. Hil. 2. c. 5. *Hib. 240.

3. How infancy is to be tried, of what public offices and rights an infant is capable; and of what things he is capable for his own advantage.

Infancy is to be tried by inspection of the court, or by jury: And herein it is laid down as a rule in some books, that wherefoever it is alleged upon the pleading, that the party was and yet is under age, there it shall be tried by inspection; but where the infant is of full age at the time of the plea, there it shall be tried per *patiam. 1 Lew. 142. *1 Sid. 321. *1 Ker. 709. *Cra. Jac. 59, 581.

But here we must observe, that as to judicial acts, he either is an infant by the court of record, and which he is allowed to avoid, the trial thereof must be by inspection; and therefore if an infant leaves a fine, he must reverse it by writ of error; and this must be brought during his minority, that the court may by inspection determine the age of the infant; but the judges, as by *advocata, may in such cases inform themselves by wit- nesses, church books, &c. *Cra. Lit. 386. *Mar. 76, b. 12. *Abir. 15, *2 Abir. 483, *Bull. 320. *2 Co. 122. 1441.

If an infant brings a writ of error to reverse a fine for his non-age, and, after inspection and proof of infancy by witnesses, dies before the fine is reversed, his heir may reverse it; because the court having recorded the non-age of the coowner, ought to vacate his contract when he appeared to be under a disability at the time he entered into it. *Cra. Lit. 385. *Mar. 884. *Kekuit's cafe.

An infant acknowledged a fine, and the conuizes omitting to have the fine ingrossed till he came of age, and the infant from bringing a writ of error; yet the court upon view produced by the infant, and upon his prayer to be inspected, and his age examined, recorded his non-age, to give him the benefit of his writ of error, which he must otherwise lose, his non-age determining before the next term. *Abir. 12. *Cra. Lit. 230, 231.

So if an infant suffer a common recovery by appearing in person, this must be reversed during his minority by inspection of judges.

But it is said, that if an infant suffers a recovery, in which he appears by attorney, he may reverse it after his full age, as it may be discovered whether he was of age when the recovery was suffered; because it may be tried per *patiam whether the warrant of attorney was made by him when he was an infant. *1 Sid. 321. *1 Lew. 142.

It is said, that in all causes where the party pleads that he was within age at his, and alleges a place, that there the trial may be well enough where it is alleged; where no place is alleged, there in personal actions where the writ is brought, and in real actions where the right of the land depends upon infancy, there the trial is to be where the land lies, and if not, where the action is brought. *Sed. 10, 11. *Cra. E. 88 & 89. *8 P. *D.

For an infant enters into a recognizance of 100l. as bail to *J. S. which became forfeited, and he taken in execution, his age, and that he was bound, and thereupon he brought an auditia querela, fortifying his infancy, and the writ being brought into court, he appeared in persona per persona; and it was moved, that he might be inspected, and his witnesses examined, and therefore his mother presumptuously depose, that at that very time he was twenty years old, and no more, and a maid servant gave circumstantial evidence to the same purpose; and it was moved, that he might be bailed: But per *curiam, it is a matter of discretion either to admit him to bail, or to refuse it, he being in execution; but if he had brought his auditia querela before it had been taken in execution, he must have had a superfluous course, and the court would not bail him, tho' the long vacation was near, but required the evidence to be strengthened by a copy of the register where he was born, which being in *Torbright, he appeared again in *Adolphus temeris in custodia, and a copy of register was produced, and sworn to be a true copy, and the mother and the maid being again sworn, and all agreeing in the same thing, he was discharged by the court. *C. 279. *Trin. 5 W. 3. *Lloyd v. *Eagle.

As to what offices and trusts an infant is capable: he frequently acts in offices as do not concern the admin- istration of justice, but only require skill and diligence; and there it seems he may either exercise himself wholly of the age of discretion, or they may be exercised by deputy; such as the offices of park-keeper, forester, gosler, *Geland. 379, 381. *9 Co. 48, 97. See *Co. Litt. 231.

If an infant, being master of a ship at *St. Christopher's island, under another contract with another, undertakes to carry certain goods from *St. Christopher's to *England, and there to deliver them; but does not afterwards deliver them according to agreement, but waives and con- fuses them, he may be sued for the goods in the court of Admiralty, though he be an infant; for this suit is but in nature of a detinue, or trover and conversion of the the Common law. 1 Rol. Atr. 530. Forester and Smith, and a prohibition denied to the court of Admiralty.

If an keeper keeps an common, an action on the cause upon the custom of inn will not lie against him. 1 Rol. Atr. 2. Carth. 161. cited.

So if an infant draws a bill of exchange, yet he shall not enter, and not make bond, what he has or does, but he may plead infancy in the same manner that he may plead any other contract of his. Carth. 160, Williams v. Harrifin. adjudged on demurrer.

An infant cannot be a juror; and it is said by Hibbard, that this the will of the common law a person under age could not be on a trial for false pretences, because he then tried a matter which might have happened before he was twenty-one. Hcb. 325.

An infant, or one under the age of twenty-one years, cannot be elected a member of the house of commons; nor any of lord of parliament sit there until he be of the full age of twenty-one years. 2 Ind. 47.

An infant is capable of inheriting, for the law presumes him capable of property; also an infant may purchase, because it is intended for his benefit, and the freehold is in him till he discharge thereof, because an agreement is presumpted, it being for his benefit, and because the freehold cannot be in the grantee, contrary to his own act, nor can be in abeyance, then for a stranger would not know against whom to demand his right; and if at his full age the infant agrees to the purchase, he cannot afterwards avoid it; but if he dies during his minority, his heirs may avoid it; for they shall not be bound by the contract of a person who wanted capacity to contract. 2 Cr. Lit. 2. 8. 2 Inst. 203.

If an infant take a lease for years rendering rent, if he enter upon the land he shall be charged with an action during his minority, because the purchase is intended for his benefit; but he may wave the term, and if more rent be referred upon the lease than the land is worth, he may avoid it. 2 Busb. 69.

If an infant be a lord of copyhold manor, he may grant copyholds notwithstanding his non-age; for these effects do not take their perfection from the interest or ability of the lord to grant, but from the custom of the manor, by which they have been demised, and are demesne time out of mind. 4 Cr. 23. b. Co. Copyholder 79, 107. Noy 41. 8 Co. Ds.

An infant may preent to a church; and here it is said, that this must be done by himself, of whatsoever age he is, he cannot be done by another, for the guardian can make no advantage thereof, and consequently has nothing therein whereby he can give an account, and therefore the infant himself shall present. Co. Lit. 17. b. 89. a. 29 Ed. 3. 5. 3 Inst. 156.

Of the act of infants as they are good, void or voidable, viz. contracts for necessaries, judicial acts, and acts in pais.

Contrasts for necessaries. Here we must observe, that, strictly speaking, all contracts made by infants are either void or voidable, because a contract is the act of the understanding, which during their state of infancy they are presumed to want; yet civil societies have so far supplied that defect, and taken care of them, as to allow them to contract for their benefit and advantage, with power, in most cases, to rescind and vacate it when it may prove prejudicial to them; but in this contract for necessaries they are absolutely bound, and this likewise is in bellignity to infants, for if they were not allowed to bind themselves for necessaries, nobody would trust them, in which case they would be in worse circumstances than persons of full age. 10 H. 6. 14. 18 Ed. 4. 2. 1 Rol. Atr. 729.

Therefore it is clearly agreed by all the books that speak of this matter, that an infant may bind himself to pay for his necessary meat, drink, apparel, necessaries, and such other necessaries, and likewise for his good teaching and instruction, whereby he may profit himself afterwards. Co. Lit. 172. a. 57.

If an infant leaves a fine, and the conveyance renders to him either for life or in tail, it is said that he shall have no writ of error to affect this fine; because the reversal of this fine being only to restore him to the land upon which it was made, with the fine, it would be fruitless to give him a writ of error, since he could not thereby be restored to the land which the fine itself, which he would endeavour to revere, had before given him. Mol. 74.—But quae.

As to remonstrant is by infant, when there were imposed into a common way of conveyance, it is thought reasonable that thole, whom the law had judged incapable to act for their own interest, should not be bound by the judgment given in recoveries, tho' it was the solemn act of the court, for where the defendant gave a promise he judged that it was as much as himself act and conveyance, as if he had transferred the land given or any other act in pais; and therefore if an infant suffers a recovery, he may reverse it as he may a fine, by writ of error, during his minority: And this was formerly taken to be law, as well where the infant appeared by guardian as by his attorney, or in peril: But now the infant, having been made capable by the court, and appearing in a cause, shall have the advantage, as if he had appeared by guardian, and to suffer a recovery, or come in as a vouchse; but this too is seldom allowed by the court, unless it be upon emergencies, when it tends to the improvement of the infant's affairs, or when lands of equal value have been settled on him, and when he has had the King's Peace Seal for issuing to him the land, the conveyances have been allowed and supported by the judges, and the infant could not set them aside or vacate them; besides, if such recoveries be to the prejudice of the infant, he has his remedy for it against his guardian, and may reimburse himself out of his pocket to whom the law had committed the care of him. Rell. Ab. 735.

A partition by deed De partitions faciendo binds infant, because the infant is a judge in a court of law, to which no nullity can be imputed. C. Lit. 171.

If an infant acknowledge a recognizance or statute, it is only voidable; and the infant at his peril must avoid them by audita querela, as he must a fine or recovery by writ of error during his minority; for such conveyances or other acts of record become obligatory and unavoidable, if they be not set aside before the infant comes of age; the reason is, because these contracts being entered into under the inspection of the judge, who is supposed to do right, the infant cannot against them aver his disability; but must reverse them by a judgment of a superior court, and the inspection has the same means to declare whether the inferior jurisdiction did not in such contracts that first received the contract. Reg. pl. 206.

If an infant bargain and sell his land by deed indented and sealed, yet he may plead non-age; for notwithstanding the 27 Hen. 8, c. 46, makes the indulgence in a court of record necessary to complete the conveyance; yet the bargainee claims by the deed as at Common law, which was, and therefore is still defeasible by non-age. 2 H. 7.

After mutatis mutandis, the infant is regularly allowed to refund and break through all contracts in pais made during minority, except only for schooling and necessaries, be they ever so much to their advantage; and the reason hereof is, the indulgence the law has thought fit to give infants, who are supposed to want judgment and discretion.
all face benefit or semblance of benefit to the infant; but as to those from which the infant may receive benefit, and which were entered into with more solemnity, they are only voidable; that is, the law allows them when they come of age, and are capable of considering over again what they have entered into, to consent to continue, or to break through and avoid them. Co. Cas. 502.

Afo the feoffment of an infant is not void, but only voidable, not only because he is allowed to contract for his benefit, but because that ought to be some act of notoriety to restore the possession to him, equal to that which he contracted from him. Co. Litt. 330.

Therefore if an infant make a feoffment and livery in person, he shall have no assise, &c. but must avoid it by entry; for it is to be preferred in favour of such solemnity, that the assembly of the part then present would have proceeded it, if they had perceived his non-age, and therefore the feoffment shall continue till defeased by entry, which is an act of equal notoriety. 8 Co. 42. Brul. tit. Diffinit. 63.

But if the infant had made a letter of attorney to deliver feoffin, he might have an assise, &c. because the letter of attorney, like all other acts or agreements made by an infant, he must be void; and therefore whoever claims under it, or by virtue of its authority, must be a wrong-doer. 2 Rot. Abr. 2. No 130.

Palm. 237.

Also as to the acts of infants being void or voidable, there is a diversity between an actual delivery of the thing contracted for, and a bare agreement to deliver it only; that the first is voidable, but the last absolutely void; as if an infant deliver a horse or a sum of money with his own hands, this is only voidable, and to be recovered back in an action of account. Perk. &c. 12. 19. 1 Rot. Abr. 173. 2 Rot. Abr. 408.

Late it is said, that if an infant agrees to give a horse, and does not deliver the horse with his hand, and the donee take the horse by force of the gift, the infant shall have an action of trepass; for the grant was merely void. Perk. &c. 12. 19. 1 Med. 137.

In trepassos quos vic et amas in infinitum facis, & tenuam crimin amovitis, the defendant duos ulterius dictus Annam defendere & defendendi; and upon the demurrer to this plea the court directed judgment for the infant, and in consequence the tenant unlawful, and gave judgment accordingly for the plaintiff. Mich. 26 Car. 2. Anna Sr.

And as an infant is not bound by his contract to deliver a thing; so if one deliver goods to an infant upon a contract, &c. knowing him to be an infant, he shall not be chargeable in trover and conversion, or any other action for them; for the infant is not capable of any contract, but for necessaries; therefore such delivery is a gift to the infant: but if an infant without any contract willfully take the goods of another, trover lies against him; also it is said, that if the infant be under pretence that he is of full age, trover lies; because it is a willful and fraudulent trover. 1 Ed. 129. 1 Lev. 169. 1 Keb. 905. 913.

Also it seems that if an infant, being above the age of discretion, be guilty of any fraud in affirming himself to be of full age, or if by combination with his guardian, &c. be made any contract or agreement with an intent afterwards to elude it, by reason of his privilege of infancy, that a court of equity will decree is good against him according to the circumstances of the fraud; but in what cases in particular a court of equity will thus exert itself is not easy to determine. Vide 1 Vern. 132. 2 Vern. 4235.

Alfo notwithstanding the disability of an infant to contract, by the 7 Ann. cap. 19, it is enacted, 'That it shall and may be lawful for any person under the age of twenty years, by the direction of the High court of Chancery, or the court of Exchequers, signified by an order made upon behalf of the parties concerned, on the petition of the person or persons for whom such infant or infants shall be seised or possessed in trust, or of the mortgagor or mortgagees, or guardian or guardians of such infant or infants, or person or persons intituled to the monies secured by or upon any lands, tenements or hereditaments, whereby any infant or infants are or shall be seised or possessed by way of mortgage, or of the person or persons intituled to the redemption thereof, to convey and assure any such lands, tenements or hereditaments in such manner as the said court of Chancery, or the court of Exchequer, shall by such order so to be obtained direct, to make such conveyance or conveyances, assurance or assurances as afoforefaid, in like manner as trustees or mortgagees of full age are compellable to convey or assign their trust estates or mortgages.'

Infinity of actions. The lord of the fole may have a special jurisdiction against him who Shall dig coal in the King's highway. But one subject cannot have his action against another for common nuisances; for if he might, then every man would have it, and so the actions would be infinite.

4thly, informations in the nature of informations may be instituted by any person, by leave of the court, for suppressing priv ligies, franchises, &c. which in some respects is a civil suit, as it is used as a proper means to try a right, tho' it punishes the misdemeanor, such as the

Here we shall lay down what has been collected by seargent Haukins, and is, as he says, every day's practice, agreeable to numberless precedents, viz. either in the name of the King's Attorney general, or of the Master of the Crown-office, to exhibit informations for baterties, cheats, seducing a young man or woman in order to marry them against their consent, or for any other wicked purpose, stirring up a child to the plants, recepting perfons from legal arrefts, perjuries, and subornations thereof, forgeries, conspiracies, (whether to accufe an innocent person, or to improve a certain fact of lawful traders, &c. on or to secure a verdict to be unlawful given, by causing perfons bribed for that purpose to be sworn on a talius, and other such like crimes, done principally to a private person, as well as for offences done principally to the King, as for libels, fraudulent words, riots, false news, or disturbing or suborning any officers in the King's service, as in not repairing highways, or obstructing same, or fopping a common wort, &c.) contempt, as in departing from the parliament without the King's licence, disobeying his writs, uttering money without his authority, escaping from legal imprisonment on a prosecution for a contempt, neglecting to keep watch and ward, abusing the King's commimion to the opposition of the subject, making a return to a mandamus of matters known to be false, and in general any other offences against the public good, or against the first and obvious principles of justice and common honesty.

thorities were cited.
An information was exhibited against D. an attorney of C. for speaking scandalous and reproachful words of Sir John Kay, knight of the shire for the county of York, and a justice of peace, &e. concerning his said office of justice of the peace, and the excercising thereof; and upon demurrer to this information it was argued, that it would not lie for scandalous words spoken only of a particular perfon, because he might have an action on the cafe recompense him in damages; tho' it was admitted, that such a proceeding might be warranted for libels, or for dispering defamatory letters, because by such means the public peace might be disturbed, and disorders fostered among neighbours, which might at last be a public injury, but that there was no such mischief in the present case. On the other side it was insisted, that this information was founded on sufficient matter, because this prosecution is not only as it respects the person of Sir John Kay, but it as such a public right, and one who is subordinate to the government, and therefore such defamatory words are a reproach to the supreme government, by whom magistrates are intrusted, and from whom they derive their authority, and it will not be de-ned but that words reflecting on the public government or this house is a proper libel by information; and for this reason the court held that an information would lie, and thereupon gave judgment against the defendant, and fined him an hundred marks. Carth. 14, 15. The King v. Darby.
An information was exhibited by the Attorney general for conspiring to destroy the King's revenue of the excise;
An information was filed against a poacher for suffring one taken upon an exom. and tried to go at large. 12 Med. 634; Med. 12 Ed. 3, 2 Ann.

An information was filed against certain perons for that, as enemies, &c. to the government; hired a boat during a war with France, in order to go thither, intending to aid and assist the King's enemies, though they did not pretend to the defendant's that his sld servant was fauey and gavc him (the master's) horfix too much corn; but the course holding this not a sufficient cause for sending a man to the house of correction, leave was given to file an information. 8 Med. 45; P. 7 Geo. An information was filed against one for killing a noblemam's dog, deting forth, that Lord S. was riding in the vill of D. in com. Information for a scandalous narrative licensed by the defendant, speaker of the house of commons, being Damgerfield's narrative, reflecting on a nobleman, (the E. of Peterborough;) the defendant pleaded, that he did in order of the house of commons, and demanded judgment if this court will take cognizance of it. The Attorney general demurred, and after the defendant pleaded the common plea, quad non vult contendere cum Dominum Rex, and was fined 1000l. Comb. 18. P. 22 Ed. 2 B. R. The King v. William.

The defendant was one of the diffenters who was charged with acts of London and Middlesex, and refused to take up the office: for which an information was moved for against him, as it is an office in which the publick are interested, and therefore not to be compensated by a pecuniary satisfaction to the city. But upon viewing the cause, the court directed the protest to be opened, and the court in the case of Shkleton of York in Lord Hardwick's time. However they declared, that if after the point was determined against the diffenters, others should refuse, it might be a foundation to act for an information.

Str. 1193. Trin. 16 Geo. 2. Rex v. Groynour.

2. Of filing an information; how it is to be laid; the proceedings thereon, and the proviso made relative thereto by statute. It seems to be the established practice at this day, not to admit of the filing of an information except what is exhibited in the name of his Majesty's Attorney General, without first making a rule on the perons complained of to shew cause to the contrary; which rule is never granted but upon motion made in open court, and grounded upon affidavit of some telenachor, which, if the affidavit is not perfectly true, or other such like circumstances, seem proper for the publick prosecution; and if the peron, on whom such rule is made, having been personally served with it, do not at the day given him for that purpose, give the court good satisfaction by affidavit, that there is reasonable cause for the prosecution, the court generally grants the information; and sometimes, upon special circumstances, will grant it against those who cannot be personally served with such rule; as if they purposely absented themselves, &c. 2 Haw. P. C. 262.

But if he shew good cause to the contrary, as he his oath, that he has no more for the same cause, and acquitted, or that the intent is to try a civil right which has not been yet determined, or that the complaint is trivial or vexatious, &c. or where the motion is for an information in the nature of a quo warranto, if he can shew that his right has been already determined before the common council, or by the court of his own country, or that it depends upon the right of his voters, which hath not been tried, or that it do not concern the publick, but is wholly of a private nature, the court will not grant the information without some particular circumstances, the judgment whereof lies in discretion. 2 Haw. P. C. 262-3.

Regularity, the same certainty that is required in an indictment, is in like manner required in an information; but it has been held not to be necessary to repeat the words dixit in hac intelligo &c. in the beginning of every difnation, if the want of them may be sup- posed by a natural and easy construction. See 1 Stat. 375. Roy. 34. 2 Haw. P. C. 261.

In an information against Roberts the ferryman over the river Mersey, which parts Anglesea from Carnarvonshire in Wales, it was laid generally, utique. That this was an ancient ferry time out of mind, and that the d. was to procure a man and boat to d. for 20 cattle, d. for 20 sheep, &c. that Roberts being the common ferryman, between the 7th September Ann. 2, and the day of exhibiting this information, injurio, op- presseio, &c. et ceteris de diversi digiter &c. the said informer or informers shall not, within three months after the said cotts taxed, and demand made thereof, pay to the said defendant or defendants the said cotts, then the said defendant and defendants shall have the said benefit of the said recognizance to compel them thereunto.'

"Provided, That nothing herein shall extend or be con"nued to extend to any other information than such as shall be exhibited in the name of their Majesties coroner, or attorney in the court of King's Bench for the time being, commonly called the Muster of the Crown's office."

In the construction hereof it hath been holden, 1. That if procs be illused on such information before such recognizance is given as the statute directs, the same may be for slide and discharged on motion. 2 Hauk. P. C. 263.

2. That this statute extends to all informations, except those exhibited in the name of his Majesty's Attorney general, fo that an information in nature of a quo warranto, tho' a proper remedy to try a right, in respect of which it may not in fact come within the words trespass, &c., yet being also intended to punish a mis"n demeanor, and also as the proceedings therein may be as vexatious as in any other, the same is within the pur-view of the statute, which being a remedial law, shall receive as large a construction as the words will bear. Gach. 503. The King v. The town of Tiverton. 1 Sa!t. 370. 3 & 4, C. C. 115. Adjourned. 3. That no cotts can be had on this statute on an ac"quittal at a trial at bar, not only because the clause that gives cotts, unless the judge certify a reasonable caufe, seems only to have to trials at nisi prius, but also because a caufe, which is of such consequence as to be thought proper for a trial at bar, cannot well be thought within the pur-view of the statute, which was chiefly de"igned against trifling and vexatious prosecutions. 2 Hauk. P. C. 263.

4. That if there be several defendants, and some of them acquitted, and others convicted, none of them can have cotts. 1 & 2, 774.

5. That wherever a defendant's case is such as ar"thorizes the court to award him his cotts, he has a right to them ex debito justitiae; for it seems a general rule, that where judges are impoverished by statute to do a matter of justice, they ought to do it of course. 2 Cm. Cafes 191. 2 Hauk. P. C. 263.

By the 9 Ann. cep. 20. it is enacted, "That in case any person or persons shall usurp, intrude into, or un"lawfully hold and execute the office or franchise of mayor, bailiff, portreeve or other office within a city, town corpora"te, borough or place in England or Wales, it shall and may be lawful, for the proper officers of the county or Queen's Bench, the court of feftions of counties palat"ate, or the court of grand seftions in Wales, with the leave of the said courts respectively, to exhibit one or more information or informations in the nature of a quo warranto, at the relation of any person or persons de"fining to be or professing to be the same, and who shall be mentioned in such information or informations to be the relator or relat"ors against such person or persons for usurp"ing, intruding into, or unlawfully holding and executing any of the said offices or franchises, and to proceed therein in such manner as is usual in cases of informations in the nature of a quo warranto; and if it shall appear to the said re"fpective courts, that the several rights of divers per"sons to the said offices or franchises may properly be de"termined on information, it shall and may be lawful" for the said respective courts, to give leave to exhibit one such information against several persons, in order to try their several rights to such offices or franchises; and such person or persons, against which it should be"exhibited, to plead; and such person or persons, who shall sue or prosecute such information or informations in the nature of a quo warranto, shall proceed therewith with the most convenient speed that may be.

And it is further enacted, That in case any person or persons, against whom any informations, or informations in the nature of a quo warranto shall in any of the said cotts be exhibited in any of the said courts, shall be found or adjudged guilty of any usurpation or intrusion into, or unlawfully holding and executing of the said offices or franchises, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said courts respectively, as well to give judgment of ouster against such person or persons of and from any of the said offices or franchises, as to fine such person or persons respectively for his or their usurping, &c., and also to give judgment that the relator or relators in such suit shall recover his or their costs of such prosecution; and if judgment shall be given for the defendant or defendants in such information, he or they, for whom such judgment shall be given, shall recover his or their costs therein expended, against such relator or relators; such cotts to be levied by capias ad satisfaciend"um, fori factis et aliquis.

"And it is further enacted, That the statute for the amendement of the law, and all the statutes of Justice," shall be extended to informations in nature of a quo warranto, and informations thereof, for any matters in the said act mentioned."

An information was moved against a clerk for perjury and his admission to a living, upon an affidavit that the pretentation was sinniaenal. But the court re"fused to grant it, till he had been convicted of the offence. "Sm. Min. 4 Ge. 1. Rex v. Lewis."

Defendant came up on a habeas corpus from the Savoy, to which it was returned, that for several years last past the Afnien company had been a body corporate, and retained the defendant in their service, and sent him to the Savoy to be provided with necessaries, till he should embark for Africa, &c. On a motion for an information for a libel, in adversing that one Mädke an apothecary had perfornated Dr. Graw a physician, and wrote and took his fee (which the apothecary did not pretend to deny), the Chief Juflice de"clared, that though truth be no justification for libel, as it is for defamatory words, yet it will be sufficient cause to prevent the interpolation of the court in this extraordi"nary manner, and induce them to leave it to the ordi"nary courfe of justice before a grand jury. Whereupon the information was discharges. Sm. 498. Hil. 8 Ge. Rex v. Bickerton. See 14 Vin. Ad. tit. Informations; and for informations on penal statutes, see Acton.

Informatums non sum, or more properly, non sum informatus, is a formal answer made of course by an attorney that is summoned by the court to say what he thinketh good cause of his client, who being not instructed to say any thing material, says, He is not in"formed; by which he is deemed to leave his client un"der"tended, and so judgment passeth for the adverse party. Ingulfler. (Ingulflator), from the FrenchIngulfler, that is, follicitatis venderet, is one that buys corn growing, or dead victual to fall again, except barley for malt, for the oats, or victuals to retail, by bidding by licence, buying of oats and victuals, other than five or ten, &c. see An. 5 Ed. 6, cap. 14. 5 Eliz., 147. But Whyn, Symbol. part. 2. tit. Indinitals, fect. 94, says, This definition rather doth belong to unlawful ingraining, than to the word in general. See 3 par. Litt. fol. 175. Ingravor is also a clerk that writes records or instruments of law in deeds of partition: As in Henry the Sixth's time, he who is now called the Clerk of the Pipes, was called Ingravor magni retulit; and the Commissioner of the Pipes, was called Duplex ingravor, Speiman. See Ferfailing.

Ingriffit, Is a writ of entry, whereby a man fecketh entry into lands or tenements: It lies in many cafes, and hath many forms. See Cafrp. This writ is also called in particular, pricest quoq reddat; because those are formal words in writs of entry. The writs, as they lie in divers cafes, are these, set down in the Old Nat. Breu. viz. Inheritance, (Haravit.) Is a perpetuity in lands or tenements to a man and his heirs: For Littleton, h. 1.
cap. 1. hath these words: This word inheritance is not only understood where a man hath inheritance of lands and tenements by descent of heritage, but also very fæcum or the like, when a man by his purchase, may be fæcal or fætale to the same man that by his purchase, can be fætale to inherit, for that his heirs may inherit after him. Several inheritance is that which two or more hold severally; as if two men had land given them to,

Injunction, (injunt.) Is a writ to inhibit or forbid a judge from further proceedings in the cause depending before him. See P. N. B. fol. 39. where he putth prohibition and injunction together. Inhibition is most com-mmonly a writ issuing out of a higher court to a lower and inferior, upon an appeal. Stat. 3 Hen. 8.
cap. 12. and 15 Car. 2. cap. 5. and injunction out of the King to a court of Chriftian, or to an inferior temporal court. Cowel.

An injunction is either bomin or juris; 'tis an infra visitationem facit, vel aliquam jurisdictionem ecclesiasticam tenentiam vel voluntariam iacetis. Thus, when an archbishop virit, he inhibits the bishop, when a bishop virit, he inhibits the archdeacon; and the reason is to prevent scandal and detraction; and this continues till the relaxation of the inhibition, which is not till the laft parish is visited, and then it is entered nulla pariachia requijit vita, for he may hear of no faults till he come to the

Now after such an inhibition upon a political viification, if a lape happen, the bishop cannot interfere, because his power is suspended, and therefore the archbishop is to inhibit; for it is not only penal in the bishop do to do, but the inhibition itself is void, because it is an act of jurisdiction from which he was suspended. 3
Sal. 201. pl. 2.

But it may be a question, in the cause of collation, whether, if a lape happen, the bishop may collate? Because it is a kind of title; but the better opinion is, he cannot, because it is not by way of interdict, but by way of prohibition, to prevent the losse of the properties, that being the negligence of the patrons; this appears, because the patron may present at any time of a lape, and before collation. 3
Sal. 201. pl. 3.

Injor. This word was neither interpreted nor mentioned in any Glossary before the publication of Kenneth's Parochial Antiquities. It very frequently signifies any corner or out-part of a common field ploughed up and foured commonly with oats or tares, and sometimes fenced off with a dry foot hedge, within that yard wherein the reit of the farm field lies fallow and common. It is now called in the North an intack, and in Oxfordshire a Kickhins, or Hitching. It has sometimes its root derived from the Saxon injor, a child or meadow, or rather Ivan, within, and kake, a corner or nook. The making of such intaks, or separato inclosure by any one lord or tenant, was a prudence to all who had a right of it.—Prater

it was alleged, found his horses, and then mage, that the defendant came into possession by course of law, and the baileys were legal officers, who, if they did any thing amiss, the party ought to take his remedy at law against them, and the defendant ought not to be answerable for their misdeeds. But if the defendant held the order to be right, and he thought it an idle practice in the court to put a thief to his oath to accuse himself; for he that has stolen will not flink to forswear it; and therefore in adlum spelatioris the oath of the party injured should be a good charge upon him that has done the wrong. Vern. 257. Child. v. Sardy.

As concerning the breach of injunctioins, it hath been of late practised to commit the party on affidavit of the breach, and personal notice given to him, but never on notice and the order made thereon, the plaintiff's clerk in court files out an attachment against him of course; he is arrested thereon, gives bail to the sheriff, enters his appearance with the registar; so the court has hold of him; the plaintiff files interrogatories in the Examiner's office to examine him; the interrogatories are verbatim according to the affidavit; and if the party does neglect to attend be examined, it is a motion of course to examine him in four days, or stand committed; if he confesses the contempt, he must submit, own his fault, beg pardon, and pay costs; but if he denies it by his examination, the plaintiff defends to prove it upon him; then the affidavit must be referred to a matter, to see whether the party is guilty of the contempt laid to his charge or not; here again he hath liberty to be heard, and may except to the reports, and bring on it for the judgment of the court; and if the court is of opinion that he is guilty of the contempt, he must stand committed, and pay his costs; but if the court is of a contrary opinion, (as it sometimes happens) he is acquitted with costs. 3 Bac. Abr. 176, 177. Gilb. Hift. Ch. 198, 199.

3. Also an injunction shall be dissolved.

The methods of dissolving injunctions are various; when the answer comes in, and the party hath cleared his contempt by paying the costs of the attachment, (if there is one,) he obtains an order to dissolve n/s, and enters it on the plaintiff's clerk in court; this order takes notice of the defendant's having fully answered the bill, and by his affidavit, the whole equity thereof, and being regularly served, the plaintiff must give cause at the day, or the defendant's counsel, where there is no probability of flying cause, may move to make the order absolute, unless cause, fitting the court. 3 Bac. Abr. 177, 178, Gilb. Hift. Ch. 196.

If the plaintiff gives cause either on the merits, or upon filing exceptions; if upon the merits, the court may put what terms they please on him; as bringing in the money, or paying it to the parties, subject to the order of the court, or giving judgment with a reliefe of errors, and confenting to bring no writ of error, or to give executory to abide the order on hearing, or the like; and to this order is generally added a clause, that the plaintiff shall speed his cause to a hearing. 3 Bac. Abr. 177. Gilb. Hift. Ch. 196.

If the plaintiff shall give cause upon exceptions filed, he must procure the report in four days of the insufficiency of the answer; and if the motion is made at either of the last sealed after Hillary or Trinity term, the court sometimes puts the plaintiff upon opening the exceptions, and they judge whether they are material, or not; the reason of this is, because the defendant, if the motion should be reported sufficient, hath no opportunity to move the court till the order thereon, and thereby we think the motion is greatly delayed; if the court think the exceptions material and necessary, they will grant the motion; if otherwise, they will deny it, as the cafe appears; and to this is sometimes added a clause to the order, especially when the motion is made at the last seal, and the plaintiff shall procure the report in four days before, not to stand dissolved without further motion; whereas it is not so in open term, or at any of the seals save the last; and this clause being added, the court needs not to hear the exceptions opened, which oftentimes took up too much time. 3 Bac. Abr. 177. Gilb. Hift. Ch. 196, 197.

If the party report and Carter, and Kerry, being a motion of course to dissolve the injunction on the answer's being reported sufficient; but yet the plaintiff may move cause on the merits; for there are many instances where the plaintiff's counsel may think the answer not full, and yet may be mistaken, and notwithstanding this the plaintiff may have good cause on the merits for continuation of his injunction; and it seems reasonable that he have liberty to do it; but this must be done on notice given to the other side; he cannot do it when the defendant's counsel come to move to dissolve the injunction, on the answer's being reported sufficient; because, as this is a motion of course, the party takes out execution before the merits, but he may have liberty on notice given. 3 Bac. Abr. 177, Gilb. Hift. Ch. 197.

If the plaintiff who hath an injunction dies pending the faite, in strictin: the whole proceedings are abated, and the injunction with them; but even in this case the party shall not take out execution without special leave of the court; he must move the court for the plaintiff to revive his suit within a time limited, or the injunction to stand dissolved; and as this is never denied, so if the suit is not revived, the party takes out execution. There are some instances where a plaintiff may move to revive his suit to the plaintiff's use, and the court has thereby been dissolved; but where a bill is dissolved, the injunction and every thing else is gone, and execution may be taken out the next day. 3 Bac. Abr. 177, 178. Gilb. Hift. Ch. 198.

1. If a may set up an inn, who deemed a common innkeeper, and the privileges allowed him by law.

It seems to be agreed at this day, that any person may set up a new inn, unless it be inconvenient to the public, in respect of its situation, or to its increasing the number of inns, not only to the prejudice of the public, but also to the hinderance and prejudice of other ancient and well-established inns: for the keeping of an inn is no franchise, but a lawful trade, open to every body, and therefore there is no need of any licence from the King for that purpose. 2 Roll. Abr. 84. Palm. 367. 1 Balf. 109. Godh. 345. 2 Roll. Rep. 345. 2 Keb. 560. Salt. 45.

But as inns from their number and situation may become nuisances, they may be suppressed, and the parties keeping them may at Common law be indicted and fined, as being guilty of a public nuisance; and in like manner may they be dealt with, if they usually harbour thieves, or persons of scandalous reputation, or suffer frequent disorders in their houses. 2 Cor. 549. Dall. Jaffier, cap. 7.

He who has an inn by preceptio may lawfully enlarge it upon the same land which has been used with it, either by erecting new buildings thereon, or turning stables into chambers for entertainment; and he shall have the same privilege in such new part, as in any other part of his house. 2 Roll. Abr. 84.

Alfo it is alleged, that the statute of 5 & 6 Ed. cap. 25, and other statutes concerning the licensing of alehouses, &c. do not extend to inns, unless an inn degenerate into an alehouse: by suffering disorderly tilting, &c. in which case it shall be deemed as such. Hutton 99. 1 Salt. 45.

A person who makes his business to entertain travellers and passengers, and provide lodging and necessaries for them and their horses and attendants, is a common inn-keeper; and it is no way material, whether he have any sign before his door, or not. Palm. 374. 2 Roll. Rep. 345.

But though it be the entertaining of passengers that makes a man an inn-keeper, yet it is said, that if a person having put up a sign before his door, afterwards pull it down, he thereby discharges himself of the burden of an inn-keeper, but if after the taking down his sign he uses to harbour men, it is as much a common inn as if he had a sign. Palm. 374. Godh. 346.

It hath been adjudged, that a person living at Epsom, and lodging strangers for drinking the waters in the fea-son, and selling them wine and beer, and to no other persons except such lodgers, is not an inn-keeper, so as to have soldiers quartered on him, pursuant to the statute 4 & 5 W. 3. cap. 13, for he is not such an hospitator against whom an action lies for refusing to entertain a guest; also in this case lodgers have such an interest in their rooms that they may maintain an action of trespass against any one who should enter into them against their will. Carth. 417. 1 Salt. 387. 5 Mod. 427. S. C. Parkhurst and Jaffier, adjudged.

A person who receives cattle to agist, on an agreement to pay so much a week for them, cannot retain them for payment, as an inn-keeper may the horse of his guest, unless there be a special agreement to that purpose. 2 Cor. 271. Chapman v. Allen.

An inn-keeper is distinguished from other traders, in that he cannot be a bankrupt; for though he buys provisions to be spent in his house, yet he does not properly sell them, but utter them at such rates as he thinks reasonable, and the attendance of his servants, furniture, and his house, &c. are to be considered; and the statutes of bankruptcy only mention merchants that use to buy and sell in goods, or by retail, and such as get their living by buying and selling; but the contracts with inn-keepers are not for any commodities in general, but they are contracts for house-room, trouble, attendance, lodging, and necessaries, and therefore cannot come within the design of such words, since there is no trade carried on by buying...
But where an inn-keeper is a chapman alt, and buys and sells, he may on that account be a bankrupt, tho' not being only an inn-keeper, and this has been frequently done.

For the security and protection of travellers, inns are allowed certain privileges, such as that the horse and goods of a guest cannot be distrained, &c. 3 Dall. 270. C. Lit. 57. 2 Vern. 129.

Also the law takes care of the reputation of an inn keeper; and therefore where in cafe for words the plaintiff declared, that he was poisoned of certain billies in qualum loci vocat Bell-Savage Inn, that he had accommodation for travellers, and that he got his living by the exercising of that faculty; that the defendant was poison'd of another inn, and that a perfon not known inquiring for the Bell-Savage Inn, (whither he was directed to set up his horse,) he said these words, This is Bell-Savage Inn: And at another time he said to another person, You have nothing to do there, he is broke and run away, there is no entertainment for man or horse; by reason of which words he left his customers; and on Not guilty pleased, the jury having found for the defendant as to the first words, and as to the last for the plain-tiff, it was adjudged clearly for the plaintiff; and Hale Ch. J. held farther, that if a man keeps an inn, and another that lives just by him, designing to get away his customers, tells a person who inquireth for such inn, that if no one lives there, this is actionable; also it was said by Hale to have been adjudged actionable to disfigure a person from going to an inn, by telling him the small box was there. Till. 25 & 26 Car. 2. Southwell and Allen. Raym. 231. S. C.

2. Of the duties enjoined inn-keepers; and of offenses committed by them in selling corrupt commodities, or at exorbitant prices, and in refusing to harbour or entertain guests.

The duty of inn-keepers extends chiefly to the entertaining and harbouring of travellers, finding them victuals and lodgings, and securing the goods and effects of their guests; and therefore if one who keeps a common inn refuses either to receive a traveller as a guest into his house, or to find him victuals or lodging, upon his tendering him a reasonable price for the service, he is not only liable to render damages for the injury in an action on the case, at the suit of the party grieved, but also may be indicted and fined at the suit of the King. 9 C. 87. Dyer 158. Br. Allen for Caf. 79. 92.

For he who takes upon himself a publick employment, and assumes to be a publick as far as his employment goes; therefore an inn-keeper shall not only answer for his own neglects, but also for the neglects of those who act under him, though he should expressly caution against it. 1 Salk. 18.

But the duty of an inn-keeper does not extend to the finding of gueft with clothes or wearing apparel. 2 Rad. Rep. 79. Also if the gueft be assassined and beat within the inn, he shall have no action against his host; for the charge of the host extends to the movables only, and not the person of the guest. 8 Co. 32. In Cafe's cafe.

If a man comes to a common inn to harbour, and defires that his horse be put to graze, and the host put him to graze accordingly, and the horse be stole, the host shall not be charged; because by law the host is not bound to answer for any thing out of his inn, but only for those things that are infra hospitium. 8 Co. 32. 8 Co. Rep. 79. 8 East. 60. 2 Ken. 82. 2 S. P. adjourned. 2 Brown. 255. S. P. per curiam.

But if the owner does not require the host to put his horse to graze, but the host does it of his own head, if the horfe be stole, he hath answer for it. 8 Co. 32. 4 East. 79. 2 Brown. 255. S. P. per curiam.

Also if the host upon the coming of the guest puts the horse to graze, and by the voluntary and wilful negligence of the host the horse be stole, as the host voluntarily leaves open the gates of the clofe, by which means the horse strays out, and so is stole or lost; or an athen on the cafe lies against the host. 1 Rad. 4t. 4. Howley and Fyfher.

The horse and goods of a guest may be restrained from selling at exorbitant prices, and may be indicted if they extort any greater or larger sums than those rates and prices that arc imposed on their commodities. Carth. 150. Skin. 291.

And to this purpose it is enacted by 21 Jas. 1. cap. 2. that all hoftlers or inn-holders shall sell their horse-bread and their hay, oats, beans, pease, provisions, and all kind of victual both for man and beast for reasonable gain, having respect to the gain for which they shall be sold in the markets adjoining, without taking any thing for litter. And it is further enacted, by the said statute, That every hostler and inn-keeper dwelling in any town or village, being a thoroughfare, and any city town corporate or market town, wherein any certain baker, having been an apprentice to the trade for seven years, is dwelling, may make within his house horse-bread sufficient, lawful, and of due affile according to the price of grain and corn. And it is further enacted, That if the horse-bread which any of the said hostlers or inn holders shall make be not sufficient, lawful, and of due affile according to the price of grain and corn as above-said, or that if any of them shall offend in any thing contrary to this act, the justices of assize, justices of oyer and terminer, justices of peace in every free, liberty or franchise within this realm, shall forthwith in their care and orders, and wliereunto my may inquire, hear and determine the said offenses of the said hostlers and inn holders, who shall be fined for the fifth offence, according to the quantity of the offense: And for the second offense shall be imprisoned for one month, and for the third offense shall stand upon the pillory.

If an inn-keeper sells corrupt wine or victuals, an action lies against him, also if his servant fell such corrupt wine or victual, an action on the cause lies against the matter, though he did not order the service to be sold to any particular person. 9 Hn. 53. 1 Rad. 4t. 19.

It has been already observed, that if one who keeps a common inn refuse either to receive a traveller as a guest into his house, or to find him victuals or lodging, upon his tendering him a reasonable price for the service, he is not only liable to render damages for the injury in an action on the case, at the suit of the party grieved, but also may be indicted and fined at the suit of the King. Dyer 158. 2 Brown. 254. 2 Dall. Rep. 345. Kier. 50. Palm. 367. Godb. 346. 1 Salk. 328. Carth. 150. S. P. admitted.

Also it is said, that an innkeeper may be compelled by the power of the crown to receive and entertain a person as his guest. 5 Ed. 4. 2. Dal. cap. 7. 1 Show. 268.

Also an innkeeper, or a person keeping a lively-liable, is obliged to receive a horse, tho' the owner does not lodge in his house; for by taking upon him publick employment, he is obliged to serve the publick as far as his employment extends. Mair 867. pl. 1292.

Innkeepers are clearly chargeable for the goods of guests stolen or lost out of their inns, and this is without any contract or agreement for that purpose; for the law makes them liable in respect of the reward, as also in respect of their being places appointed and allowed of by law, for the benefit and security of traders and travellers. Dyer 268. Co. Rep. 374. their Pou/ 178. N. 75. 715. 727.

And this duty and burthen, enjoined innkeepers by law, they cannot discharge themselves of, under pretense of sickneph, want of understanding, absence from their houses, &c. Fins. Fyjfer 5. Brs. Action for ccf 41.

Also it is observed, that a man coming to an inn is not to be entertained by him, which the innkeeper refuses, because his house is already full; whereupon the party says, he will shift among the rest of his guests, and there he is robbed.
The writ need not mention that the defendant keeps a common inn, for it must be so intended, for the special of the writ is, Innkeepers take keep common inn, &c., and the latter words depend upon the former; but the plaintiff ought to count that he kept a common inn. 8 Cro. 32. a.

If in such an action brought by the master for goods stole from his faculty, the plaintiff intreats the defendant to keep the innkeepers ought safely to keep the goods of their guests, and all other goods into their inns brought; the custom is sufficiently alleged to maintain the action, notwithstanding it was objected, there was no such custom to keep the goods of others legally. Cro. Jac. 244, Bridle and Morris, adjourned, vol. 162. S. P.

If in his declaration the plaintiff lays the custom for common inns, and then lays that he was hospitatus in hospitio, &c. this is well enough; for it must be intended that it was common, else it is damnum & non jus bispitium. Hud. 245. and see Reg. Ent. 425. Rob. Ent. 221.

The declaration against an innkeeper was thus: Praed. D. com' hospitatus adunus & sibi adsit exspectat in stabulum deliberravit a certain gelding, to be by him safely kept, at a reasonable rate, and to be by him safely re-delivered to the plaintiff; and after verdict for the plaintiff, it was objected, that for again the hoarse was put into the defendant's stable, the innkeeper loses the detention which he is not bound to take any care of it; for the words being Praed. D. com' hospitatus exspectavit may as well be taken in an ablative as dative case: but the court held, that the words being indifferent to an ablative or dative case, they ought to be taken in that case which makes the declaration better, and therefore gave judgment for the plaintiff. 6 Med. 223, Stargys and Davis. 1 Salis. 404. S. C. but not S.P.

4. Of the innkeeper's remedies against his guests.

Innkeepers may detain the person of the guest who eats, or the horse which eats, till payment, and this he may do without any agreement for that purpose; for men, that get their livelihood by entertainment of others, cannot annex such disobliging conditions that they shall retain the party's property in case of non-payment, nor make such disadvantageous and impudent a supplication, that they shall not be paid; and therefore the law annexes such a condition without the express agreement of the parties. 30 H. 6. 18. 5 H. 7. 15. 2 Reg. Ent. 85. Cro. Car. 271. Cartb 150. 1 Salis. 388. May detain the person of his guest. 1 Shaw. 260.

If an injury be done and/error taken away the hoarse of B. and put him into an inn to be kept, and B. comes and demands him, he shall not have him until he satisfied for his meat for, if an innkeeper takes a horse into his keeping he is not bound to inquire who is the owner of the hoarse, which he is obliged to keep, let him belong to whom he will, and therefore no reason why the innkeeper should be obliged to deliver him till he is satisfied. Vol. 67. 3 Boll. 269. 270. 2 Reg. Ent. 85. Poph. 128. 175. 2.

If A. deliver a horse to an innkeeper, and B. promises that in consideration that the innkeeper will deliver over the hoarse to A. he will, viz. B. will satisfy him for his meat, this is a good promise; for here is a good consideration, insomuch that the hoarse is not the property of B., for B. is not the proper owner of the horse; A. desists his horse, that is a damage, and A. regains his horse, that is to his advantage. Hinton 101.

An innkeeper that retains a horse for his meat cannot sue him, because he detains him as in the custody of the law, and by consequent the detention must be in the nature of a deditus, which cannot be used by the dilator. Mor 877. 2 Roph. Reg. 458.

If a diftrefs be refcued, and the party upon fresh purfuit do not re- take it, the diftrefs is loft; for no man that has only a naked custody can make a reftraint, when the thing is out of his custody; for it is the privilege of an owner and proprietor, and of him only, to retake his property, wherever he finds it. 2 Roll. Rep. 438.

But if an horse be committed to a hofteller, and he detain him for his meat, and after the owner comes to an agreement that the hofteller fhall retain him till he is satisfied, here he hath not the custody of him as a diftress, but all the property in him as a pledge; and if the owner take it from him, he must not retain it, but deliver it up to his perfon, but where he meets it; because he had a property by such contrary, and a man that hath a property may retake his own where he meets with it. 2 Roll. Rep. 438.

Upon evidence the case was: A man had a horse in an inn, and came thither, and directed that the innkeeper should not give him any more food, for he would not be responsible for it; and the question was, whether for the food, after this direction given, by the innkeeper to the horse, he who brought the horse thither shall be charged, or not; and Holt Ch. J. at first inclined that this is a difcharge, and that the horse (the 'ho might be retained by the innkeeper), yet is but in the nature of a diftress, and it being in the custody of the innkeeper in this, this is a pound covert, and the horse afterwards ought to be found and maintained at the peril of the innkeeper; but after, mutata opinione, he directed, that this was not a difcharge; for then any innkeeper might be deceived, and it is the deftingue of the security of an innkeeper, who may detain, and, by the custom of London, fell the horse for his keeping. Skin. 648. Geder v. Berkeley. In trover for three horses the defendant pleaded, that he kept a publick inn at Glafenbury, and that the plain- tiff was a carrier, and used so to fup his horses there, and 96. biding him to him at any other time, for the keeping of the horses, which was more than they were worth, he detainted and sold them, proit ei bene licuit: And on demurrer judg- ment was given for the plaintiff; an innkeeper having no power to fell horses, except within the city of Lon- don, 2 Rel. Ab. 85. 1 Fern. 71. 616. 3rd 67. And besides, when the horses had been once out, the defendant could not leave them for what time he pleased before he did not fatisfy at their coming in again. Innuendo, (From invenio, to beckon or nod with the head) is a word frequently used in writs, declarations and pleadings, and the office of it is only to declare and inform the court concerning any perfon or thing which was named or left doubtful before; as to say, He (invenio) is a thief, where there was mention before of another perfon; but this inuendo must neither enlarge the fene of the words, nor make a supply, or alter the media where the words are defective. See Hutton's Rep. fol. 44.

Innuendo can't reduce to a particular, that which be- fore would bear a more large construction. Per Holt, Comb. 460. The King v. Grey. In every inuendo, there must be something precedent to induce it, something whereby it may be applied, that the man meant fo as the inuendo would have him. Per Holt. Comb. 460. The King v. Grey cites Hob. 6. Midd. 257.

Innuendo may serve for an explanation, where there is precedent matter, but never for a new charge; it may apply what is already expressed, but cannot add or en-large the importance of it. 2 Salt. 513. Mich. 9 W. 3. B. R. The King v. Grey. See 1 Vin. Abr. p. 524.

Inquutis, (Inquutis) is an inquut sailed by jurors, or a jury, which is the moft usual trial of all causes both ci- vil and criminal within this realm; for causes civil, af- ter proof is made on either fide, of so much as each party thinketh good for himself; if the doubt be in fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, unimpeached by the flerry for that purpose, and as they bring in their verdict, so judgment paffeth; for the judge faith, the jury findeth the fafaft, and the law is thus: For the inquut in criminal causes, see 3dury, and Smith in Reg. Abr. Lib. 2. cap. 19. An inquut is either extoffices, or of office, and at the like of the party. Snapper. in cli. Inquisition,

Inquisition, is a manner of proceeding by way of arrest or examination, and used in the King's behalf in capturing, inquests, and process; in which sense it is conceived with office. Stow. Praegeg. 51. This inquision is upon an outlawry found, in case of treason and felony committed; upon a felo de fes, &c. to intitle the King to a forfeiture of lands and goods: And there is none other inquest than this inquisition, as in the cause an inquisition is only to inform the court how proceed shall be for the King, whose title accrues by the attainer, and not by the inquisition; and yet in the acts of the King and a common person, inquisitions have even been void for insolvency. Lane 59.

If it be found there are two or more inquisitions, one to inform the King, the other to vell an interest in him;
the one need not be certain, but the other must; and where an inquisition finds some parts well, and nothing as to thers, it may be helped by melius inquirendum. 2 Saik.

An
An indenture of bargain and sale was involved in Chancery, exemplified under seal, and at the end was a memorandum, viz., that the plea was inquired, but no time mention’d when the same was done, but plaintiff offered to prove by circumstances, that it was inquired within the six months; upon which great debates arose; but a clerk before the court of B. R. to the inquisition-office to know their usage and custom, as to the inquiring the time of the inrolment, he certified the court upon his oath, that they inform’d him, that before the 16 Eth., at which time the inrolment-office was erected, they did not use to infer the time, but they use to do otherwise now. 2 B. R. 119, 120. Mich. 17 B. R. 632 p. 572.

In 2 L. P. R. Involment 68. it is said, that, before the 20th year of Queen Elizabeth it was not used to infer the inrolments of deeds upon the back of them, as it is now used to be done. Cites Mich. 23 of Car. 1. B. R. but adds, that now it is constantly used, and to good purpose, in respect of the more easy and readiness of the proof of the inrolment upon any occasion; for credit is given to that inrolment without any further proof, as being made by a known officer, and intrusted for that purpose. In the case of an inrolment for safe custody, the deed may be said to be recorded; but where a bargain and sale is inquired pursuant to the statute, the inrolment is a record, so that the copy of it may be read in evidence, for Matter of the Rolls. Note: Afterwards upon a rehearing, an inrolment was in the way was directed whether such deed of uses was executed, and upon the trial the copy of the deed was allowed to be read as evidence on the trial. A. in consideration of blood, covenants to land feised to the use of B. his son, and the heirs of his body, and in default of such inrolment, then to the use of J. S. in consideration of one, B. died without issue. The deed was not inrol’d; quære if the uses arise partly by covenant to land feised, and partly by bargain and sale, or whether it must arise wholly one, or wholly the other, and not by fractions? Bridgman Ch. J. said, in this case, that there was a mix confusion, and there needed no inrolment. See C. 144. Trin. a 2 W. & M. B. R. Carris v. Wentworth.

If land be convey’d in a deed for money only, then the deed must be inrol’d, else, the land will not pass by the deed. But if land be convey’d in consideration of money paid, and also in consideration of natural love and affection, or child, or relation, then it is not necessary to inrol the deed, but the lands will pass, tho’ the deed be not inrol’d; for in the former it is a mere deed of bargain and sale, which passeth nothing without inrolment; but in the latter case, the land will pass by way of use. 2 L. Inspection. See Infantry and age, Estral. Inscriptor, Letters patent so called, and is the same with exemplification, which begins thus, Rex numus, &c. Inscriptus irrationatae quœrandi, literaturam patent. It is called Inscriptus, because it begins after the King’s time, in that case, severally into his name, and is much confounded in law; and though it cannot be actually divided, yet in conception it may, and applied to several purposes, as if they were several times. Whereof is fee in Pevsneri Commentariorum, Fullerston and Stawards case, where the statute of 31 Hen. 8. is explained concerning an abbot’s letting of lands, &c. and there it is, say, that in the term time of the second lease, he surrenders his former term; and so if the same be faint of taking the second lease, the former is expired. And in the case between Petit and Hales, who kills himself commits not felony till he be dead, and when dead he is not in being, so as to be termed a felon; but Cowell is adjudged in law as infracte, at the very instant of the fact, and thar there are many other cases in law where the instant time, that is not deifiable in nature, in the consideration of the mind is divided. Cowell.

An infant is not to be considered in law as in lag as a point of time, and no parcel of time; but in our law things which are to be done in an infant, have a priority of time in them; as lessees for life makes a lease for years, they both surrender to him in reverson, though ‘tis made in an infant, yet it shall be understood to have degrees, filiety, the

We think of the surrender of the llef for years to tenant for life, and then the surrender of tenant for life. Arg. Meth. 32 E. it has been for many years acknowledged, that a devise by one joint tenant of part; for no devise can take effect but by the death of the devisor, and by his death all the land comes immediately to his companion; and there takes notice, that Lection by the words p. 18 mortem & per mortem (f. 297) though they junct two infant, yet alloweth priority of time in the infant, which he distinguishes by per & post, and says, that the reason of the priority is, because this survivor claims by the first feoffor. And in several cases a difference is allowed in our law in an infant, as per mortem & mortem post mortem, but such is the case of The King v. Dr. Birch and the Bishop of London.

So, devise of a term to his son, and that his wife shall have it during the minority of his son; this shall be continued still a devise to the wife, and after to the son when he comes of age. Finn. Law 18. 5.

And with that proceed to the West Indies or other ports, and back again to Cadiz, and from thence to London; this policy being general and dangerous, feldom procures subscriptions, or at least very chargeable ones.

As goods and merchandise are commonly injured, so likewise are the ship's tackle and furniture; but in regard there seldom happens a voyage but somewhat is missing or lost, the premium commonly runs higher than for merchandise.

Affurances may be made on goods sent by land, so likewise on boats and the like, and may be made on the backs of men; as if a man is going for the Spanish, and perhaps if of some fear that he may be taken by the Moors or Turkizh pirates, and so make a flave, for the redemption of whom a random must be paid, he may advance a premium accordingly upon a policy of assurance; and if there be a capti6n, the affuer must answer the random that is fetched or rate upon goods out and in, with liberty to touch at all ports that are mentioned in the policy.

So likewise on ships that go trading voyages, as round to Cadiz; and that it shall be lawful, after the ship's voyage, to deliver in London, for goods taken in any place, and in that place, and there to charge the goods, and take out again in London, to the same place; this is so in the Act for the West Indies, and the Act for the Red Sea Trade.

The shares in the capital stock shall be transferable and devisible; and their bonds shall be assignable and recoverable as his Majesty by the charters shall prescribe; and the capital stock shall be adjudged a personal and not a real estate, and shall go to the executors, and not to the heirs of the bondors. The stock shall be exempted from taxes; and no governor, director or other officer of the corporations, shall for that cause be disabled from being a member of parliament, nor in respect of such share be liable to be a bankrupt; and no stock in the corporations shall be subject to foreign attachment by the writ of

Sec. 11. His Majesty by the said charters may grant to each of the corporations power to make by-laws, and such further powers relating to the affurance of ships, &c. or lending money upon bottomy, as to him shall seem meet.

Sec. 12. All other corporations, and all partnerships for affuring ships or merchandizes at sea, or for lending money upon bottomy, shall be restrained from writing any policies, or making any contracts for assurance of ships or merchandizes at sea, or going to sea, or for lending money by way of bottomy. And if any corporation, or persons acting in their own names (other than one of the two corporations to be estabhshed) shall underwrite any such policy, or make such contract for assurance of ships, &c. or agree to take any premium for such policies, every such policy shall be void, and every policy so underwritten shall be forfeited, and may be recovered at the suit of the corporation, or to the person who shall sue for the fame in any court of record at Wasmington; and if any corporation, or persons acting in such partnership, agree to lend money by way of bottomy contrary to this act, the security shall be void, and such agreement shall be adjudged an unjuft contract; Nevertheless any particular person shall be at liberty to underwrite policies, or may lend money by way of bottomy, so as the fame be not on the account or right of a corporation, or of persons acting in partnership.

Sec. 13. If any person shall forge the common seal of either of the corporations, or counterfeit or alter any policy or obligation under the common seal, or shall offer to dispofe of or pay away any such counterfeit or altered policy, &c. knowing the fame to be such; or shall demand the money therein contained of either of the corporations, knowing such policy, &c. to be counterfeit, &c. with intent to retain the said corporation, or any other person; such officer being convicted shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

Sec. 14. No person shall be capable of being elected governor, sub-governor, deputy governor or director, of either of the said corporations, during the time he shall be governor, &c. of the other corporation; and if any governor, &c. or member of either of the said corporations, having any share in the capital stock of that corporation, shall in his own name, or in the name of any other, purchase any share in the stock of the other corporation, the share so purchased shall be forfeited, one moiety of the price of his share, the other to the procurer, to be recovered as before mentioned.

Sec. 15. Upon three years notice to be printed in the Gazette, and affixed upon the Royal Exchange, by authority of parliament, at any time within 31 years, to be reckoned from the dates of the two charters, and upon payment by parliament to the corporations of the sum of 300,000l. which the corporations were to pay to his Majesty without interest, the corporations shall cease; and any vote of the house of commons, signified by the speaker in writing, to be inferted in the Gazette, and affixed on the Royal Exchange, shall be deemed sufficient notice.

Sec. 16. If after the expiration of 31 years, his Majesty shall judge the farther continuance of the said corporations to be hurtful to the publick, it shall be lawful, by letters patent under the Great seal, to make void the fame corporations; and the same shall become void accordingly, without any inquisition, fine, farch, &c.

Sec. 17. In case the corporations shall be redeemed within 31 years, or be revoked by letters patent after 31 years, the same corporations, or any corporation with like powers, &c. shall not be granted again.

Sec. 26. It shall be lawful for the South Sea company, and the East-India company, to stand on the bottom of any flag, to transport goods on board ship, in the service of the said companies respectively, to any captains or other persons employed in the service of the companies, any money by way of bottomy, this act notwithstanding.

Sec. 29. If any governor or member of either of the corporations shall, on account of the said corporations, lend to his Majesty money by way of loan or anticipation, on any part of the revenues, other than such funds on which a credit of loan shall be granted by parliament, the said governors, &c. or other members confenting to such loan, being convicted thereof, shall forfeit twice the value of the sums lent; one fifth part to the informer, to be recovered in any court of record at Wasmington by action of debt, &c. and the residue to be disposed of to public use, as shall be directed by parliament.

Stat. 7 Geo. 1. cap. 27. sect. 26. The corporation called The London assurance having paid into the Exchequer all the sums and proceeds of the said company (other than the said sums and proceeds of the company to be paid by 28,750l. farther part thereof in three months; and the corporation called The Royal Exchange assurance of houses and goods from fire, having done the like, the residue of the said sums amounting together to 300,000l. shall be released. Stat. 3 Geo. 1. cap. 15. sect. 25. Where the Royal Exchange assurance, and the London assurance, are subject to pay double damages besides costs, the plaintiff shall recover against them only single damages and costs.
Stat. 11 Geo. 1. cap. 30. sect. 43. On all actions of debt against either of the corporations called The Royal Exchange assurance, and the London assurance, upon any policies under the common seal for the assuring of any ship or merchandizes at sea, or going to sea, it shall be lawful for the said corporations to plead generally, that they have not broken the covenant in such policy contained; and if thereupon issue be joined, it shall be lawful for the jury to give such part only of the sum demanded, if be an action of debt, or so much in damage, if it be an action of covenant, as it shall appear upon the evidence that the plaintiff ought in justice to have.

Section 44. When a ship shall be insured, a policy duly stamped shall be issued or made out within three days at least; and the insurer neglecting to make out such policy shall forfeit 100L to be recovered and divided as other penalties may be by the laws relating to the stamp duties, and all promissory notes for assurances of ships or merchandizes at sea, are declared void.

Stat. 19 Geo. 2. cap. 37. sect. 1. No assurance shall be made by any person or bodies corporate on any ship belonging to his Majesty or any of his subjects, or on any goods on board any such ship, interest or no interest, or without further proof of interest than the policy, or by the way of wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the assured; and every such assurance shall be void.

Section 2. Assurance on private ships of war, fitted out by his Majesty's subjects solely to crush against his enemies, may be made by or for the owners, interest or no interest, free of average, and without benefit of salvage to the assured.

Section 3. Any merchandizes or effects from any ports in Europe or America, in the possession of the Crown of Spain or Portugal, may be assurred in such manner as this act had not been made.

Section 4. It shall not be lawful to make re-assurance, unless the assured be insolvent, become bankrupt, or die; in either of which cases such assured, his executors, administrators or assigns, may make re-assurance, to the amount of the sum before by him assured; provided it be expedient in the policy to be a re-assurance.

Section 5. In all assurances brought upon any policy of assurance, the plaintiff or his agent shall, within fifteen days after he is required to do in writing by the defendant or his agent, declare in writing what sum he hath assured in the whole, and what sums he hath borrowed, for the voyage or any part of the voyage in which that ship hath been assured.

Section 6. It shall be lawful for any person or body corporate, sued upon any policy of assurance, to bring into court any sum of money; and if any such plaintiff refuse to accept such sum with costs to be taxed in discharge of such action, and afterwards proceed to trial, and the jury shall not damage to the plaintiff and in all actions in which such plaintiff shall pay to such defendant costs to be taxed. See Blettempy.

2. What shall be deemed baratry and devastation; and of charging and disharging the injured thereon.

Baratry is when the master of a ship, or the mariners cheat the owners or infringers, whether by running away with the ship, bunking her, defecting her, or imbedgling the cargo. Dict. Tr. and Com. 214.

Baratry of the mariners is a disease to epidemic on shipboard vessels. It is very prevalent for a master, he is industrious never to great, to prevent it; a span of villainy on shipboard soon spreads out to a cloud, for no other cause but that of the circular encouragement that one knavish mariner gives another. However the law does in such cases impose offences and faults committed by them to the negligence of the master, and were it otherwise, the merchant would be in a very dangerous condition. The the defendant under-wrote a policy from Falmouth (where the goods were taken in) to Marfelles. Before the ship departed from the port of London, the defendant advertised her to carry private goods to Genoa, Leghorn and Naples: and the plaintiff's agent was told, it was intended to go to those ports first, and then to come back to Marfelles: But he inferred that his bargain was to go first, or directly to Marfelles, and he would not consent to let her pass by Marfelles, or take any other port: The ship however did pass by Marfelles, and after delivering her cargo at the other ports, set out on her return for Marfelles with the plaintiff's goods; but in her voyage thither, was blown up in an engagement with a Spanish ship. And in an action upon the policy, the breach was allowed of a loss by the baratry of the master. And the plaintiff's counsel insisted, that any fraud or malversation of the master was within the meaning of the word baratry. Du Praye terms it abus qui fit in contradistinctio; and so do all the dictionaries, as Floris's Italian Dictionary verbo Baratrya; Miftus, Partiet, &c. And that in the cases of Knight and Cambridge (the preceding cases) and Knight and Brand, would the loss be laid to be per fraudem of the master, the court held it a good assignment of a breach, there being the word baratry in the policy. The defendant's counsel insisted, this was no more than a deviation, in which case the insurer was discharged, and the plaintiff's remedy is against the master, or master's agent. The jury laid it down a crime of the master, when he is acting all the while for the benefit of his owners. The Chief Justice in his direction to the jury told them, that this being against the express agreement to go first to Marfelles, seemed to be more than a common deviation, being a formed design to deceive the contrac- to; and compared it to the case of falling out of port without paying duties, whereby the ship was subjected to forfeiture, and which has been held to be baratry. The jury found the same time, and, upon their return, asked the Chief Justice, whether the master was to have no benefit to himself by passing by Marfelles, and went only for the duty, that he paid a baratry. And the Chief Justice answering, no, they found for the defendant. And now a new trial being moved for, the case was argued; and all the court was of opinion that the verdict was right. For the master has acted con- fidently with his duty to his owners, and the plaintiff's agent knew that he had intended alteration of the goods would put on board, and might have refused to ship them, or have altered the insurance. To make it ba- ratry, there must be something of a criminal nature, as well as a breach of contract; and that here the breach being assigned only on the baratry, was not supported by the evidence. So the defendant had judgment. Law. 11 Ed. 4. 166. 20. Stamma v. Brown. The insurance was from Carolina to Lybun, and at and thence to Brijfif; It appeared the captain had taken in salt, which he was to deliver at Falmouth before he went to Brijfif; but the ship was taken in the direct road to both, and the salt came to the point where this cannot be shipped off to Falmouth. And it was held the insurer was liable; for it is but an intention to deviate, and that was held not sufficient to discharge the under-writer. In the case of Carter v. The Royal Ex- change Assurance Company, where insurance was from Honduras to London, and a consignment to Amsterdam; a goods happened before the came to the dividing point be- tween the two voyages, which the insurers was held to pay for. Stran. 1249. 19 Gez. 2; Fijfer v. Wilmor. The ship Mediterranean went out in the merchants service with a letter of marque, and being bound from Brijfif to Newfoundland was infurred by the defendant. In the voyage, a prize, and Brijfif, and received back a proportional part of the premium. Then another policy was made, and the ship set out with express orders from the owners, that if they took another prize they should put some hands on board such prize, and send her to Brijfif; but the ship in question should proceed with the merchants goods. Another prize was taken in the due course of the voyage, and the captain gave orders to some of the crew to carry the prize to Brijfif, and designed to go on to Newfound- land; but the crew opposed him, and infurred he should go back. He abundantly acquainted them with the orders upon which he was forced to submit, and in his return his ship was taken, but the prize got in safe. And now in an action against the insurers it was infurred, that this was such a deviation as discharged them. But the court and jury held, that this was excused by the force upon them, and they were not entitled to have made it within the excuse of necessity, which had always been allowed. The plaintiff's counsel would have made ba- ratry of it, but the Chief J. thought it did not amount to that, as the ship was not run away with in order to defraud the owners. So the plaintiff had a verdict for the sum infurred. Stran. 1264. 2 Gez. 2, Etten v. Bridgen. Cafe upon a policy which was to infure the William Galley in a voyage from Bremen to the port of London, warranted to depart with convoy: The cafe was, the galley set fail from Bremen under convoy of a Dutch man of war to the Elb, where they were joined with two other Dutch men of war, and several Dutch and English merchant-ships: whence they failed to the Texel, where they found a squad of English men of war and an admiral: After a stay of nine weeks they set out from the Texel, and the galley was reaper in a gale, by a Dutch privateer, and paid 80 f. salvage. And it was ruled by Hol Ch. J. that the voyage ought to be according to usage, and that their going to the Elb, though in fact out of the way, was no deviation; for till the year 1703, there was no convoy for ships di- rectly from Bremen to London: And the plaintiff had ver-dict. 2 Salk. 445. Feb. 14, 1704. Bond v. Genfalt. If after a policy of infurance a damage happens, and afterwards in the same voyage a deviation, yet the assured shall recover for what happened before the deviation; for the policy is discharged from the time of the deviation only. Vid. Shaver 129. Kemp and Andrews. 2 Salk. 444. 3. Of the conclusion of policies, having the words warr- anted to depart with convoy. The plaintiff infurred in goods in the John and Jane from Gottingham to London with a warranty to depart with convoy from Flockery. In July 1744, the ship failed from Gottingham to Flockery, and there the waited for convoy two months. On the 21st of September at nine in the morning three men of war, who had an hundred ships in convoy, filed off Flockery and made a signal for the others to there go out, and likewise gave them a pass to order them out. There were fourteen ships waiting, and the John and Jane got out by twelve o'clock, and one of the first, the convoy having failed gently on, and being two leagues a-head. It was a hard gale, and by fix in the afternoon came up with the fleet, but could not get to either of the men of war for failing orders, on ac- count of the gale of wind. It was stormy all night, and at day-break the ship in question was in the midst of the fleet, but the weather was so bad that no boat could be sent for failing orders. A French privateer had failed amongst them all night, and the 22d, it being foggy, at- tended the ship's company about two leagues back, in a yawl to order them out. So that the ship recovered. Stran. 1250, 19 Gez. 2, Vichte v. Cleve. On an infurance from London to Giverton, warranted to depart with convoy, it appeared there was a convoy appointed of the words warranted to depart with convoy, Salk. 443. 445. And if the parties meant to vary the insurance from what is commonly understood, they should have particular’d their departure with convoy from the Downs. Admon on a policy of insurance: the defendant pleaded non assumpsit, and the jury found the policy, by which the insurers undertook against the perils of the sea, pirates, enemies, &c. from London to Fenvier, warranted to depart with convoy. Et per cur. The words warranted to depart with convoy, mean only that: he will leave the port, and fail with the convoy without any willful default in the matter; therefore, if by default of the matter, the ship is separated and parted from the convoy, and if there be no default, the matter having done all that could be done, and the ship is taken, they are liable: So if the ship be left by force of weather; for they refuse against these by their own agreement. Salk. 443. Hill. 2 W. & M. in B. R. Jeffries v. Legrandia, S. C. 3 Lev. 320. 4 Mid. 58. 1 Shaw. 320. Cather. 216. Holt. Dep. 147.

Admon on a policy of insurance by the defendant at London, infuring a ship from thence to the East-Indies, warranted to convoy; and it was shown the ship went from London to the Downs, and thence to convoy, and was lost. After a frivolous plea of good will, it was objected, that there was a departure without convoy. Et per cur. The clause warranted to depart with convoy, must be construed according to the usage among merchants, i.e. from such place, where convoys are to be had, as the Downs, &c. Holt Chief Justice contra 3. We take notice of the laws of merchants that are general, not of those that are particular usages. It is no part of the law of merchants to take convoy in the Downs. Salk. 443. Mich. 4 W. & M. in B. R. Lethulier’s case.

The words warranted to depart with convoy have been referred to import, by the insurers’ policy, a conveyance with that convoy as long as may be. Lax. Rep. 257. The plaintiff being sued at law upon a policy of insurance of a ship, and against the baratry of the master, which was assigned in the declaration, brought his bill in Chancery to be relieved, and moved for an injunction; charging that one Matthevs, the master, and also owner of the ship, had, before the voyage, entered into a bottomry bond to the defendant for 200l. and that after, by bill of sale, he assigned over his interest in the ship to the defendant as a security for this 200l. and infilit that Matthevs was not entitled to be considered as the owner of the thing in law the ownership and property would be looked upon to be in the defendant, and inmitted, that the owner of a ship could not, either in law or equity, be guilty of a baratry concerning the ship, and therefore prayed an injunction, and that the policy might be ordered up. The voyage infurred was from London to Marcellis, with a declaration to some port in Holland. The case was, that the master failed with the ship to Marcellis, and then, instead of pursuing the voyage, sailed to the West-Indies, and there sold the ship, and died insolvent. These matters being confessed by the answver, it was considered of merchants, and that a mortgagee is to be considered in equity as owner of the thing mortgaged, and that Matthevs, the master, being owner, could not be guilty of baratry. To which new, Vol. II. No. 95. a cafe was cited of Hanna and Brown, where it was determined the preceding term in the King’s Bench. Lord Hardwicke, the jurer, Baratry was shown to have been done by the master against the ship and goods; and this being in the cafe of a ship, the question will be, who is to be considered as the owner? There are several cafes that might be put where baratry may be aliigned as the breach of an assurance, and baratry or not, is a question properly determined by law; but it appears, for the courts of law will not consider a mortgagee as having any right or interest in the thing mortgaged; and there are many cafes where a man may come into a court of equity for relief, in respect of a part only of his case. It might indeed be considered at law, whether what the master hath done, in disposing his own cargo or not, was not a breach of the contract, as master of the ship, and a baratry; and this may be considered likewise in this court. But at law a defendant cannot read part of the plaintiff’s answer to a bill brought against him here; the whole answer must be read, which hath been often a reason for this court interposing by injunction upon a plaint at law; and considering the mixed nature of this cafe, I think; an injunction ought to be granted. Ordered accordingly. Dict. Tr. and Cam. 147. 16 Geo. 2. Lenon v. Swaffs.

The plaintiffs being merchants residing at Gibraltar, and one of their ships, called The London, was found to be fit for the place, bought to return the value of 300l. and in order to forward them to the aforesaid place, he took freight on the ship Ranger, Captain Taylor, which he law put up, as usual, at the Royal Exchange and Portugal coffee-house, with a declaration infurred in the said advertisement, that the ship was to fail with the first convoy; and in consequence thereof he shipped his merchandise and made insurance thereon to the amount of 20,00l. and infurred in the policy the words warranted to depart with convoy, in conformity with the said declaration. The ship when loaded failed from Gravesend the 4th of May 1704, and arrived at Spithead, and was then in the 7th, where they continued till the 21st, in consequence of the Otter convoy, and some English merchant ships, and three Dutch East-Indi ship, Captain Twillah, whilst he lay in the Downs, having received intelligence that the convoy at Spithead was ready to fail, went on board the Otter etc., to take the Ranger under convoy. On the 12th of May, the Otter etc., the Dutch, and the three East-Indianch, as did also some English ships for the benefit of the convoy; and a few hours after they were under sail, the Otter etc. parted from them on her cruize, and the Ranger kept company with the three Dutch ships, till between four and five o’clock the next afternoon, climbing that one Matthevs, the master, and also owner of the ship, had, before the voyage, entered into a bottomry bond to the defendant for 200l. and that after, by bill of sale, he assigned over his interest in the ship to the defendant as a security for this 200l. and infilit that Matthevs was not entitled to be considered as the owner of the thing in law the ownership and property would be looked upon to be in the defendant, and inmitted, that the owner of a ship could not, either in law or equity, be guilty of a baratry concerning the ship, and therefore prayed an injunction, and that the policy might be ordered up. The voyage infurred was from London to Marcellis, with a declaration to some port in Holland. The case was, that the master failed with the ship to Marcellis, and then, instead of pursuing the voyage, sailed to the West-Indies, and there sold the ship, and died insolvent. These matters being confessed by the answver, it was considered of merchants, and that a mortgagee is to be considered in equity as owner of the thing mortgaged, and that Matthevs, the master, being owner, could not be guilty of baratry. To which new, Vol. II. No. 95. words words warranted is depart with convoy, as they did not imply that they ought to have departed with convoy from any part of London; as the rendezvous for the fleet bound to Gibiltera and the Straitst, is generally at Spithead, where they join the convoy; and although pofitibly there may be an instance or two of a convoy falling from the Nore and the Downs to Gibiltera, yet this is an uncommon, and no man thinks, and would not have been expected on this occasion; on the contrary, it was then known, that the convoy for those parts was to be Spith-ead, and many ships went there from London to take the benefit of it, so that the warranty could only be un-derstood from Spithend, as it was from the convoy there the Captain was to receive his falling orders; besides, as it was unsafe to lie in the Downs without a man of war, the plaintiff conceives the Ranger would have run a much greater risk, in continuing after the Outer’s departure, than did in falling with her and the Dutch ships, tho’ they were no regular convoy; and the plaintiff paid the same premium for his insurance as was given on several ships at the same time, with a warranty to depart from any port of the channel; and it was the opinion of several merchants, that ships falling with convoy are to make the best of their way to the convoy, and not stay for an immediate one. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

At Guildhall: In ejectionment for a messuage in London, it was objected against the title of the plaintiff, that this was a messuage above 40 l. per annum, and that the curfew of the city, is that there ought to be warning given for the fourteenth of the month of August, in which, there is the Feast of St. John, and by the space of a quarter of a year, where it is under such a rent; the question was, if this curfew gave the party an interest; or only intituled him to an action if he be ousted within the time, as in the common cases of leases for years, or at will, with agreement of quarter's warning; though Hol Ch. J. said, that he had heard that North Ch. J. ruled upon evidence, that the curfew gave a certain term; and though it was objected, that if it did not give an interest, it was not of any benefit to a citizen, who ought to have a reasonable time to remove his effects; yet the Ch. J. inclined to the contrary, and referred for his opinion.

A mortgage is an interest on land, and on non-pay-ment, the estate is absolute in law, and his interest is good in equity to intitle him to receive and enjoy the profits till redemption or satisfaction, and, on a fore-closure, has the absolute estate both in law and equity.

Lands by deed or will subjected to the payment of debts; if there be a bond debt, and the interest has out-run the penalty, it shall not carry interest beyond the penalty; for the design of the settlement was not to increase the debt with what is due, but to give a further security: However if device or truce neglects to pay in a reasonable time, he shall after such neglect pay interest beyond the penalty; per Lord C. Cretor 1707. 1 Salk. 154. Ams.

A term was vested in trustees for payment for all debts; he did owe at his death, without preferring one before another, there were owing debts by order and by simple contract. Lord C. Harcourt declared, that this term, the simple contract debts became, as debts due by mortgage, and consequently should carry interest, as well as the debts secured by bond.

By where a general and national calamity, nothing is made out of lands which are assigned for payment of interest, it ought not to run on during the time of such calamity. MS. Tab. cites 25 June 1715. Bajif v. Ashley.

A recompense was entered into to pay 1000l. a year annuity to a third perfon. The same was not to be paid for several years. Decreed per Lord Caugher, that the re- cognizance being in nature of a bond, the annuaries were a debt secured thereby, and so must carry interest from the time they became respectively due. No interest to be allowed for colts. MS. Tab. cites 6 Feb. 1719. Butler v. Barc.

By marriage-articles the lady's father was to pay fe- veral sums at several times for discharging the husband's incumbrances; he advances money to the son-in-law, and maintains the wife and child for two years; such money and advances for maintenance, shall be paid, to the foot of the account, and not carry interest. MS. Tab. cites 1721. Kirkman v. Blake.

Where excessive rates are allowed for work in respect of flow payment, there should be no interest allowed; for interest is only allowed to supply the want of prompt payment. MS. Tab. cites 27 Feb. 1723. Duckstof. vs Marlborough v. Strange.

An annuity of 200l. a year was devolved by A. to J. out of A.'s personal estate, payable quarterly, and the same being three years in arrear, it was instilled that it should have interest. But the court said, that this is only done where there are great debts; but it is not usual to compute interest for so small a sum. Trin. 1723. at the Rolls. 2 Wint's Rep. 167. Batten v. Earnly.

The areas of annuity, or rent-charge, are never de- creed to be paid with interest, but where the sum is cer- tain and fixed, and also where there is either a clause of carry, or annuitate, or some penalty upon the grantor, which he must undergo if the grantee sued at law, and which would oblige him to come into this court for relief, which the courts will not grant but upon equal terms, and can be no other, but decreeing the arrears in Hills. 4th. 27. Interior, (Interior) Is that which decides not the cause, but only settles some interesting matter; the cause is left to the courts; as when an order is made, by motion in Chancery, for the plaintiff to have an injunction to quiet his possession, till the hearing of the cause. This, or any such order, not being final, is interlocutory. Cowell, edit. 1727.

In Mem. Soc. de anno 22 Edw. 3 Trin. rot. 3. The word Jorlius is derived from the Lat. jucul, joculis, and jocula, which seems to comprehend everything that delights us; but in a more refined sense, in those things which are ornament to women, which in France they call their own, as ear-rings, bracelets, &c. But Du Frieze tells us, that at Arragon in Spain, the question was, whether a woman's closetts would pass by the device of her husbands? And that the judge upon great deliberation, and consulting with others, was of opinion they did not pass. In England, a wife shall not be intituled to jewels, diamonds, &c. on the death of her husband, unless they are suitably to him. If the husband leaves after to pay debts. &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 911

Due bond upon the defendant pleaded a release, which was in those words, viz. The oblige confesseth himself to be discharged of all bonds, &c. and that he will deliver up all, except one, which is not yet forfear, in which the defendant, and two others, fund bond to the plaintiff; and thereupon the plaintiff in his replication avered, that this was the bond upon which the action was brought; and upon demurrer it was ad-joined against him, because the action was brought against the defendant alone, when by the plaintiff's own con-fession it appeared, that the bond, was made by him and two others, who ought to be joined in the action. 9 Rep. 52. Hitchins's cafe.

The lefier being feised in fee of one house, and being pollarded of a term of years in another, made a lease of both for ten years, and the lefier covenant'd to repair, &c. During the poffeion of the landlord, and the reversion in fee to the plaintiff, by one deed, and the reversion for years by another, deed; and for not repairing he brought an action of covenant against the lefier; and upon demurrer to the declaration, the plaintiff had judgment; and upon error brought, it was allowed for error, that he having two revolutions, the one in fee, and the other for years, and that by several deeds, he ought to have brought feveral actions; but adjudged, that the action was well brought. 3 Bros. 329. Pyll v. Lady St. John.

Two lefiers for years, rendering rent; one of them afterwards was given to the other of the defendants, and the tenant made his will, and appointed an executor, and died; the rent was behind after the assignment made by one, and after the death of the other lefier, and an action was brought against the defendant in the debt and determin; it was objected, that a joint action would not lie against him, in two actions, but the court decreed, that the terret was divided; one by assignment, and the other as executor; but adjudged, that the severance of the land shall not make any severance of the action. 3 Bul. 211. Ipworth Bailiffs v. Martin and Parkcr.

In trespass, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant was guilty of trespass on his lands. Upon jury, the plaintiff pleased, it was found for the plaintiff; but the judgment was reversed upon a writ of error, because it appears upon the plaintiff's own shewing, that the action ought to be brought against two; but if trespasses had been brought against one, who pleaded, that it was done by him, and by his order, the plaintiff had no right. The plaintiff traverse the release in such case, because the matter doth not appear upon the plaintiff's shewing, but comes in on the part of the defendant, the declaration is good. 1 Leon. 41. Henley v. Breed.

Two cannot join in an action of slander, because the defendants are not the defamation of the other. Tom. 28 H. 8. Dyer 15.

Two brought trespass against the defendant for breaking their clofe; upon Not guilty pleaded, the jury found that one of them was sole feied of the lands, and that he ex professo ad cultum to the other to plough and sow by. But the defendant might have refayed all the cufoms, and the words, but that he was full feied sole, and by confef- sion they could not join in this action. 1 Leon. 315. Harv v. Oakley, Giffins, 77. S. C.

In replevin, the defendant made conuance as bailiff of G. D. for damage featant, setting forth, that W. R. was feied of the lands, and devised them to G. D.; but because it appeared in the pleading, that the said G. D. was tenant in common with the heir at law, exception was taken to the conuance, for that tenants in common ought to join in an awovy; and the conuance must be in both their names; but adjudged, that a tenant in his own right has no such cause of action, without the aid of his partner, and he alone may disconfirm the taking, the his awovy be by way of action. Gra. Eliz. 530. Willks v. Fischer.

When it appears by the count, that the several coventancies have, or to have, several interests or effects, as to their several parts, particularly, as to such, of vom quilibet erum, these words make the covenant several, in respect of their several interests. 5 Rep. 19. Misch. 29 & 30 Eliz. Slingsby's cafe.

There is a difference between a power given to two, and an interest given to two, a lease for years is made to two, & quilibet erum, this is a joint lease, and the words (quilibet erum) are void; this is to maintain quiet and avoid contention. So of an obligation made to two quilibet erum, or a grant of the next avoidance to two quilibet erum. But a power to fell, lett, or make livery to two common, is void, if it be not joint. Joint inditments. May be sometimes had: If ofices of several persons arise from a joint criminal a&;; without any regard to any particular personal default or defect of either of the defendants; as the joint keeping a gaming house; or unlawful hunting, and carrying away deer; or maintenance, extortion, &c. an indictment or information may charge the defendants jointly.

Joint lives. A bond was made to a woman dam, to pay her so much yearly as long as the and the binder should live together, &c. afterwards the woman married, and debt being brought on this bond by husband and wife, the defendant pleaded, that he and the husband's wife did not live together; but it was added, that the money should be paid during their joint yes, so long as they were living at the same time, &c. Lucio. 555. And a perfon in consideration of receiving the profits of the wife's lands on marriage, during her joint lives, was to pay a sum of money yearly in full for the wife, though it was not paid every year during the. &c. It was held, that the payment shall be intended to continue every year also during their joint yes. 1 Lucio. 459. Lease for years to husband and wife, if they or any issue of their bodies should live so long as that has been adjudged to so long as either the husband's wife or any of their issue should live; and not only for so long as the husband and wife, &c. Joint-tenants, (Joint tenentes, ou qui conjunctim tenentes, hab. Intronation, tit. Pernoon in heres, 3.) Are those that have joint title and are not by the title pro indivis, or without partition. Ca. on Litt. 1. c. 3. f. 177. These are distinguished from sole or several tenants, from parners, and from tenants in common; and ancienly they were called particeps, and not barteres: And here must jointly impede, and jointly be impeded by others, which properly is common between them and co- parceners; but joint-tenants have a fole quality of survivourship, which co-parceners have not; or for if there be two or three joint-tenants, and one hath issue, and dies, then he or those joint-tenants that survive, shall have the whole by survivourship. Cenoll. edit. 1777.

Where a feestifon is made to two or more, and their heirs, or a lease is made to them for term of their lives, they are joint-tenants; for being made for a bare perpetuation of the title, they shall jointly hold per mile et per rate, and shall jointly impede, which property is common between them and co-parceners; but joint-tenants have a fole quality of survivourship, which neither co-parceners nor tenants in common have, Lit. let. 277.

Tenants in common are those that come to the land by several titles, or by one title and several rights; as if there be three joint-tenants, and one alien his part, the other two are joint-tenants of their parts that remain, and hold them in common with the alien; so if joint-tenants make several feestifions or gifts in tail, or leases for life, the foees, ducens or leaffes are tenants in common, Lit. sefl. 292. Co. Lit. 190. a.

And as the effential difference between joint-tenants and tenants in common is, that joint-tenants have the lands by one joint title, and in one right, and tenants in common have the lands by several titles, or by one title and by several rights; this is one of the cases, why may be said, that joint-tenants have one joint freehold, and tenants in common have several freeholds, though this property is common to them both, viz. that their occupation is individuate, and neither of them knoweth his part in several. Co. Lit. 190. a.

Hence it appears, that the wife of a joint-tenant cannot be endowed; as if lands are given to two men and their heirs; or the heirs of their two bodies, and one of them dies, his wife shall not be endowed, but it shall go to the survivor, who then is in from the first feuor or donor, and may plead it as an original feestifon or gift to himself, and fo is paramount her title of dowry, which is not complete till her husband's death: and one book says, it was the ancient course in mortgages to make the estates to two, in order to prevent the mortgagee's wife of dower, Co. Lit. 30. a. 31. b. 37. &. 3 Co. 27. Bre. tit. Dower 4. 84. Co. Eas. 503. Perk. deel. 374.

But the wife of a tenant in common shall be endowed; for there is no survivourship takes place, but each moiety defends to the respective heirs of the respective tenant in common, and in such case the dower shall be assigned in common too, for the cannot have it otherwise than her husband had, Lit. sec. 44, 45. Co. Lit. 34. b. 37. &.

Also if there be two joint-tenants, and one relieves the other in this, he shall be a fee without the word heirs, because if refers to the whole fee, which they jointly took, and are possesse of by force of the first conveyance; but the tenants in common cannot release to each other for a release afoope the party to have the thing in demand; but tenants in common have several distinct freeholds, which they cannot transfer otherwise than as persons who are feol feied. Co. Lit. 9. 200. b.

If lands be given to A. and B. and the heirs of A. B. who is only joint-tenant for life, cannot forsurdien his estate to A. for to make it freehold with him per mile et per stat. 29 H. 6. 51. 2 Rel. Abr. 896.

If land be given jointly to two, upon condition that they shall not alien, and one of them releaf the other, it is no breach of the condition. Wibb. 3. Reym. 413.

If there be two joint-tenants of land holden by heriot service, and one dies, the other shall not pay heriot service; for there is no charge of the tenant, the survivor continuing tenant of the whole land. Owen 152. Butler and Archer.

And although tenants in common have several freeholds, yet one tenant in common cannot disfife the other, no more the husband than the individual diffant, as turning him out, and hindering him to enter, but it shall be held as a breach of the profits is not enough. 1 Selc. 392, Reading's case.

An alien and subject may be joint-tenant, &c. unless the temporal estate, therefore if an alien and subject born purchase lands to their heirs, the survivorship shall take place till office found; but the office found intitles the king, and seversthe joint-tenancy. Co. Lit. 180. 6.

Bodies politic or corporate cannot be joint-tenants with men; others, neither can a corporation, whether sole or aggregate, be joint-tenant with a natural person; and therefore if land be given to two bishops, or abbots, or parsons, and their successors, they are tenants in common at first, and have no joint estate for life; for they take in their politic capacities in eight of their churches or other benefices, as joint-tenants, or if lands be given to a layman and a parson, and to the heirs of one, and successor of the other, they are tenants in common; for the fee, vests in them in several capacities. Co. Lit. 189. 6. 190. a. Mar. 222. 2 Samb. 3. 9.

But if a lease for years or other personal thing be given to a layman and a bishop, &c. they are not tenants in common, but joint-tenants, for, as no chattels personal can go in succession, they must both take in their natural capacities. Co. Lit. 190. a.

Diffidors may be joint-tenants, and upon the death of one of them the survivor shall have the whole; for the right, such as it was, continued jointly in them. 21 Ed. 3. 50. b. 1 Rol. Abr. 87.

Infants may be joint-tenants, and if there be two infants joint-tenants, who alien in fee, and one of them dies, the survivor shall have the whole; for notwithstanding the alienation the joint-tenancy is not severed, by reason of the possibility of defeating it by writ dam fas in astrotem. 21 Ed. 3. 5. c. 2 Rol. Abr. 57.

Baron and feme may be joint-tenants; but herein it is to be observed, that husband and wife, being considered but as one person in law, if an estate be made to husband and wife, and a third person and their heirs, the husband and wife take but one moiety, the third person the other. Lit. 302. 291.

Also baron and feme being one person in law, there can be no moieties between them of an estate given to them jointly during coverture; and therefore if lands be given to husband and wife, and their heirs, the husband cannot during the wife's life dispose of any part of it, but he the whole must go to the survivor of them. Co. Lit. 187. a.

If there be baron and feeme joint-tenants for life, and the baron fows the land, and dies before severance, his executor fhall have the emblems, and not the feme; and it is said, there is no diversity between this and where the baron is feised in right of the feme. 1 Rol. 2. Of what things there may be a joint-tenancy or tenancy in common; and of the right of survivorship, and what things shall survive.

There may be a joint-tenancy not only of lands and tenements, but also of chattels personal, as well as real, such as leaves for years, a horfe, &c. for where two come to thfe by joint gift or purchase, they fhall survive, and not go to the executors of the party deceased. Co. Lit. 181, b. 2 Rol. Abr. 57.

But an exception is to be made of two joint merchants; for the wares, merchandizes, debts or duties that they have as joint merchants or partners shall not survive, but fhall go to the executors of the deceafed; and this per legem mercatorum, which is part of the laws of this realm, for the advancement and continuance of trade and commerce; which being pro bono publico, the rule is, that 'Jus a Scribendi inter mercatores pro beneficio commercii lucem non habet. Co. Lit. 182. a.

But tho' there is no survivorship between merchants, yet if there are two joint merchants, or two who are jointly podifefled of goods in the way of trade, who caufally leave them, and afterwards one of them dies, the survivor alone may, it feems, bring trove for them; for the action must necessarily survive, though the interrell doth not, otherwise there would be a failure of justice; because the survivor and the executor of him who is dead cannot in the ſeim, for that their rights are of feveral natures, and there must be feveral judgments; but it is being held clearly, that if this was any plea, it must have been in abatement, for which reafon the books fays the principal point was not determined. Carp. 170. Kemp v. Andrews. 1 Steev. 188. Comb. 474. 3 Lev. 204. 8 G.

Also there may be tenants in common of chattels real or personal, intire or feveral, as leaves for years, wards, horfes, &c. as when any of thofe who were joint-tenants of them grant over their interrell to a stranger, the grantee and the other are tenants in common. Co. Lit. 199. a. 3 Co. Lit. 1720. b. 4 Co. Lit. 1710.

Also if there be two tenants in common of a feignory, and a ward fable, they are tenants in common of the wardship, as well of the body as land; and fo if it is the land leftehen to them, they fhall be tenants in common thereof. Co. Lit. 199. a.

If a corrodory be granted to two men and their heirs, in this cafe, because the corody is uncertain, and cannot befeved, it fhall amount to a feignory, to each of them one corody; for the perons be feveral, and the corody is personal. Co. Lit. 199. a.

If two take a leafe jointly of a farm, the leafe shall survive; but if of the lands, the property of the lands shall not survive, neither shall a ftole fuccefl in a joint undertaking in the way of trade survive; and there-fore it is laid not to be necessary in articles of copartnership to provide against it. 1 Vern. 217.

The jus accessorendi, or right of survivorship, takes place only between joint-tenants; as where lands are given to two men and their heirs, the furvivour fhall have the whole; for being limited to them and their heirs, the feefor or donor hath thereby transferred the absolute property to them; but how the word heirs came to signify the heirs of one of them, so as to exclude the heirs of him who died first, is not easy to be determined, and can be accounted for no otherwise than that both joint-tenants being limited to the whole during their respective lives, the furvivour having continued longer in possession was therefore presumed to have done more service to the feud, and upon that account was allowed to transmit it to his heirs; also, fays my Lord Chief Juf- ticiary Hol, the Common law does not have to multiply tenures. Co. Lit. 181. 3 Salk. 392.

So if lands be given to two men for life or years, they are joint-tenants, and the furvivour fhall hold the whole for his life, or according to the number of years limited in the conveyance. Co. Lit. 181. b.

But if a man leteeth lands to A. and B. during the life of A. if B. die, A. fhall have all by survivorship; but if A. die, B. fhall have nothing. Co. Lit. 181. b, 3.

A naked trust or authority cannot survive; but a trust coupled with an interrell fhall survive together with it. Co. Lit. 181. b. but for this, see ETTR.

If a leafe be granted to A. and B. for their lives, and the life of the longest living of them together, and they make partition, and then A. dies, the leffer fhall enter into his part; for B. has no title to it, because the right of survivorship was left by the partition, which destroyed the joint-tenancy; nor will the words to the longest living be of any use to B., because they were void at first, being no more than the law implied in the joint effect. Co. Lit. 191. a. 2 Rol. Abr. 150. 3

Two joint-tenants of a rent-charge or rent-service, and one of them dies, the furvivour fhall recover all the arrears which incurred and became due in the lifetime of his companion. 33 H. 6. 20. b. 15 Ed. 3. Aff. 18. 3 Rol. Abr. 86.

Two joint-tenants fow their land with corn, and one of them dies, the corn fown fhall go to the furvivour, and the moiety fhall not be to the executor of the perfon defeafed; for they are fuppofed to carry on the cultivation of the foid by a joint flock. 2 Rol. Abr. 86. 1 Rol. Abr. 727.

But if husband and wife are joint-tenants, and the husband fows the land with corn, and dies, the crop fhall go to the executors of the husband as it feems; for this land is not cultivated by a joint flock, but is totally the corn of the husband, and the property of the perfon, and not to be left by committing it to the joint possession, no more than if it had been fown in the land of the wife only. 1 Rol. Abr. 727.

So if there be two tenants in common, and one of them fow the land, and die, his executors fhall have the corn; because they have different interrells, and are fuppofed to cultivate by different flocks, and not by a joint one. Perk. feb. 523.

3. At what time the right of survivorship is to take place; and what disposifition or conveyance will work a feverance, and defeat the right of survivorship.

This right is to take place immediately upon the death of the joint-tenant, whether it be a natural or civil death; as if there be two joint-tenants, and one of them enters into fequestration, the furvivour fhall have the whole. Co. Lit. 181. b.

Also it is laid down as a rule, that there fhall be no right of survivorship, unless the thing be in jointure at the instant of the death of him who firft dies; nihil de confessu fiat nihil in re quando jus accessorit habit. Co. Lit. 188. b.

Therefore

Vol. II. N°. 96.
Therefore if there be two joint-tenants of a rent, and one of them die, the tenant of the land, this is a fevenance of the jointure for a time; for the moiety of the rent is suspened by unity of possession, and therefore cannot stand in jointure with the other moiety in poffes-sion, so that if during such suspension one joint-tenant dies, there can be no survivorship.
Two tenants of a lease for years, one of them taking husband and dieth, yet the term shall fur-vive; for though all chattels real are given to the husband, if be survive, yet the survivor between the joint-tenants is the elder title, and after the marriage the rente continued sole poffe{ion; for the term is inrolled, ye{t, the rente shall have it, and not the executors of the husband;
but otherwise it is of personal goods. Co. Lit. 185. a.

Although joint-tenants are feied per miss & per tant, yet to divers purposes each of them hath a right to a moiety;
as to enfeoff, give, or demife, or to forfeit or lose by default in a pra{eps; and therefore where there are two or more joint-tenants, and they all join in a feoffment, each of them in judgment of law gives but his part. Co.

dies before the deed is inrolled, yet the deed being afterwards inrolled shall work by seve{iance of rents, and support in relation the inte{est of the burdens. Co. Lit.

But if one joint-tenant bargains and sells his moiety, and dies before the inrolle{ent of the other, his part shall fur-vive; for the freehold not being out of him, the jointure remains; and the other afterwards the deed is inrolled, yet only a moiety shall pass; for the inrollement by relation cannot make the grant of any better effect than it would have been if it had taken effect immediately. Co. Jec. 53.

defired him to prepare an in{trument for that purpofe;
the fchoolmafter made a kind of deed of gift of the leafe

One joint-tenant or tenant in common may let his part for years or at will to his companion; for this only gives him a right to the rents of the lands during life; for he had but a right to the moiety thereof, and he may contract with his companion for that purpofe, as well as he may with any other. Carb. 186. a. Owen 102.

A proper conveyance between joint-tenants of a freedum must be by deed, because by the notoriety of in{tirut they take it jointly; and to alter that, a mas-that is only a feting out by metes and bounds, according to the inftru{ment, which gave each of them diffcult possession, and which was by love and confiance.

Regularely every disposition by one joint-tenant to his companion must be an immediate disposition; for the surviving joint-tenant claiming the whole by the origins

1 Roll. All. 501.
If two joint-tenants for life are, and one of them makes a lease for years of his moiety, either to begin pre ponderantly, or after his death, and dies, this lease is good and binding against the survivor; the reason whereof is, that notwithstanding the lease for years, the joint-tenants have the freehold still continued, and in that case they have a mutual interest in each other's life, so that the estate in the whole, or any part, is not to determine or revert to the lessor till both are dead; for the life of the one, as well as of the other, was at first made the means of continuance, and in that case it could only hold as joint-tenants or tenants in common, by writ de partitionibus facienda, in that case to be devised in the King our Sovereign Lord's court of Chancery, in like manner and form as coparceners by the common laws of this realm have been, and are compelled to do, and the same writ to be purveyed at the Common Law.

Provided, That every of the joint-tenants or tenants in common, and their heirs, after such partition made, shall and may have aid of the other, or of their heirs, to the intent to derraign the warranty paramount, and to have on the rate as is usual between coparceners after partition made by the order of the Common Law.

Before these flates the writ of partition was confined to coparceners; also it lay against the alience of a co parcer, for a coparcener cannot by her alienation devest the right of her fitter to divide the estate, nor can the devisee of the future estate or part which he had no such writ of partition, because such alience took an undivided moiety; nor was the alience under the reasons on which the law had founded such right of division, which was that the inheritance might be separable after marriage into different families; and for the same reasons the tenants by the moiety, though not joint, and neither by the gift of law, could not have this writ, though it lay against him by the surviving coparceners. Co. Lit. 175. a. 167. a. Dyer 98. b.

But now by force of these flates, the alience of one parcer may have a writ of partition against the other person, because they are tenants in common. Co. Lit. 175. a.

So tenant by curtesy shall have a writ of partition upon the flate 32 H. 8. cap. 32. for though he is neither joint-tenant, nor tenant in common, yet being in equal division to his deceased, he thereby had no such writ of partition, because such alience took an undivided moiety; nor was the alience under the reasons on which the law had founded such right of division, which was that the inheritance might be separable after marriage into different families; and for the same reasons the tenants by the moiety, though not joint, and neither by the gift of law, could not have this writ, though it lay against him by the surviving coparceners. Co. Lit. 175. a.

But if three coparceners are, and a stranger purchaser the part of one of them, he cannot join with either of the two coparceners in a writ of partition, either at Common Law, or by force of the flate; for the words of the preamble to the writ of partition, "of the land so held or may know their several parts, &c." and cannot by the laws of this realm make partition without their mutual assents": Now in this case one of them, viz. the parcer may have a writ of partition at Common Law, and therefore cannot come within the preamble and intent of the act, and cannot join with him in the suit of a writ of partition brought upon it. 1 And. 30. 72. It hath been holden, that a general writ by joint-te nants, or tenants in common grounded on this flate, and concluding contra fornam flatus, is sufficient, without ou restic the cause particularly, so as to bring it within the flate; for the framing of the writ is left to the clerks in Chancery, and must be according to the form which they have devised. Co. Eliz. 759. Sir George Aislar and Brason v. Onslow.

In this action there are two judgments; the first is, quod parsis fuerit inter partes praedictas de tenementis praedita, com partem. And upon this there goes out a judi- cial writ to the sheriff to make partition, which recites, first the writ of partition and judgment, and then commands the sheriff, together with twelve men of the seisin, &c. to go in person to the tenements to be di-

Jac. 218. *Bedfolk v. Clark.

By the 1st. 8 & 9 W'. 3. *cop. 31. intended, An act for giving a power of obtaining a judgment in coparcenary, joint-tenancy and tenancy in common, by which proceedings are omitted, and whereas the proceedings upon writs of partition between coparceners by the Common law or custom, joint-tenants and tenants in common are found by experience to be tedious, chargeable, and oftentimes inefficacious, by reason of the difficulty of discovering the persons and estates of the tenants of the manors, meannings, lands, tenements and hereditaments to be divided, and the defective or dilatory executing and return of the processes of summons, attachment and distresses, and other impediments in making and establishing of partitions, by reason whereof the parties or a part of them, or the parts of their lands, and their particular hereditaments are greatly oppressed and prejudiced, and the premises are frequently wasted and destroyed, or lie uncultivated and unmanured, so that the profits of the farm are totally or in a great measure lost; for remedy whereof it is enacted, That after procels of *pore or attachment returned upon a writ of partition, affidavit being made by any credible person of due notice given of the said writ of partition to the tenant or tenants to the action, and a copy thereof left with the occupier, or tenant or tenants, or, if they cannot be found, to the wife, fons or daughter, (being of the age of 21 years or upwards,) of the tenant or tenants, and to the tenants of the actual possession by virtue of any eftate of freehold or for term for years, or uncertain interest, or at will, of the manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments whereof the partition is demanded, (unless the said tenant in actual possession be demandant in the action,) at least forty day before the day of return of the said *pore or attachment, if the tenant or tenants to such writ, or any of them, or the true tenant to the meannings, lands, tenements and hereditaments as aforesaid, shall not in such case, within fifteen days after return of such writ of *pore or attachment, cause an appearance to be entered in such court where such writ of *pore or attachment shall be made; then in default of such appearance, the deman- vant having entered his declaration, the court may proceed to examine the demandant's title, and quantity of his part and purport, and accordingly as they shall find his right, part and purport to be, they shall for his costs make partition, whereby such proportion, part and purport may be set out severally; which writ being executed after eight days notice given to the occupier, or tenant or tenants of the premises, and returned, and thereupon final judgment entered, the face shall be good, and can elude or prevent the proceeding of the defendants on whatever right or title they have, or may at any time claim to have in any of the manors, meannings, lands, tenements and hereditaments mentioned in the said judgment and writ of partition, although all persons concerned are not named in any of the proceedings, nor the title of the tenants truly set forth.

Provided always, That if such tenant or person concern'd, or either of them, against whom or their right or title, such judgment by default is given, shall within the space of one year after the final judgment enter'd or in case of infancy, coverture, non *fama memoriae, absence out of the kingdom, within one year after their death, or their return, or the determination of the disability, apply themselves to the court by motion where such judgment is entered, and shall give a good and probable reason for such partition, or that the demandant hath no title to so much as he hath recovered; then in such case the court shall for their costs make partition as aforesaid or such other order as shall be just and convenient, and shall proceed by due course of law, as no such judgment had been given; and if the court, upon hearing thereof, shall adjudge for the final demand then the said final judgment shall stand confirmed and be of good effect as aforesaid, whatever judgment any such person as aforesaid or his assigns or the persons, if any, to whom or for whom such person as aforesaid or his assigns shall be or may be adjudged to belong or belong, may or may not be admitted; and if the writ or any order or process shall be or be made by any person, whom or for whom such writ or process shall belong, or its assignment, to be void, or disallowed, or shall be otherwise than for the use of such person, whom or for whom such writ or process shall belong, or its assignment, the court shall seal their judgments in every case so proceeding of due course of law, as no such judgment had been given; and if the court, upon hearing thereof, shall adjudge for the final demand then the said final judgment shall stand confirmed and be of good effect as aforesaid, whatever judgment any such person as aforesaid or his assigns or the persons, if any, to whom or for whom such person as aforesaid or his assigns shall be or may be adjudged to belong or belong, may or may not be admitted; and if the writ or any order or process shall be or be made by any person, whom or for whom such writ or process shall belong, or its assignment, to be void, or disallowed, or shall be otherwise than for the use of such person, whom or for whom such writ or process shall belong, or its assignment, the court shall seal their judgments in every case so proceeding.
to pay costs; or if within such time or times aforesaid the tenants or persons concerned, admitting the demandant's title, parts and purparts, shall fly to the court any inequality in the partition, the court may grant a new partition made in presence of all parties concerned, payable in the course of four years (if they will appear), notwithstanding the return and filing upon record the former, which said second partition returned and filed shall be good and firm for ever against all persons whatsoever, except as before excepted.

And it is further enacted, That no such statement shall be admitted to receive in any suit for partition, nor shall the same be abated by reason of the death of any tenant.

And it is further enacted, That when the high sheriff by reason of distress, infancy, or any other hinderance, cannot conveniently be present at the business of the under-sheriff, in presence of two justices of the peace of the county where the lands, tenements or hereditaments, or any part or purpart thereof, are sold, the demandant or tenants for such part set out severally to the respective landlords or owners thereof by and under the same conditions, rents, covenants and reservations where they are or shall be so divided; and the landlords and owners of the several parts and purparts so divided and allotted as aforesaid, shall warrant and make good unto their respective tenants the said several parts severally after such partition, as they are or were bound to do by any copy, leases, or grants of their respective parts before any partition made; and in case any demandant be tenant in actual possession to the tenant in the action for his part and proportion, or any part or purpart thereof, the said tenant or tenants, or his or their respective conveyances, to be divided by virtue of a writ of partition as aforesaid, for any term of life, lives or years, or uncertain interest, the said tenant shall stand and be poised of the said purparts and proportion for the like term, and under the same conditions and covenants when it is set out severally in pursuance of this, or any other act, statute, or law to that purpose.

And it is further enacted, That the respective sheriffs, their under-sheriffs and deputies, and in case of sickness or disability in the high sheriff, all justices of the peace, within their respective divisions, shall give due attendance and assist the sheriff in his said business; and where it shall be impossible for him to perform the same, or shall be unable to come to the court upon oath, and there allowed of, or otherwise liable every of them to pay unto the demandant such costs and damages as shall be awarded by the court, not exceeding five pounds, for which the demandant or plaintiff may bring his action in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Hildingfer, Before no affinns, protection, privilege or wager of law shall be allowed, nor any more than one imparlance; and in case the demandant doth not agree to pay to the sheriffs or under-sheriffs, justices, and jurors such fees as they shall respectively demand for their pains and attendance in the execution of the forementioned business, then the court shall award what each person shall receive, having respect to the distance of the place from their respective habitations, and the time they must necessarily spend about the same, for which they may severally bring their actions.

4. &c. cap. 18. It is enacted, 4 That any coventurers, or joint-tenants or tenants in common be fled of any aetue of inheritance in the advoxion of any church or vicarage, or other ecclesiastical promotion, and a partition is or shall be made between them to prevent by turas, that thereupon every one shall be taken and adjudged by the judgment of his or her separate parts of the advoxion to present in his or her name, if there be two, and they make such partition, each shall be said to be seised, the one of the one moiety to present in the first turn, the other of the other moiety to present in the second turn, in like manner if there be three, four or more, every one shall be said to be seised of his or her part, and to present in his or her turn."

5. How joint-tenants and tenants in common are to sue and be sued of summens and journours, and the remedies they have against each other.

Joint-tenants being seised per mix & per ten, and deriving by one and the same title, must jointly implead and be jointly impleaded with others.

So the one joint-tenant may disfrain for rent, yet he cannot bring an action of debt, nor avow for rent arrear without making himself bailiff to his companions, that they may be privy to the suit, and be intitled to their share or portion thereof in the under-sheriff, in presence of two justices of the peace of the county where the lands, tenements or hereditaments, or any part or purpart thereof, are sold, the demandant or tenants for such part set out severally to the respective landlords or owners thereof by and under the same conditions, rents, covenants and reservations where they are or shall be so divided; and the landlords and owners of the several parts and purparts so divided and allotted as aforesaid, shall warrant and make good unto their respective tenants the said several parts severally after such partition, as they are or were bound to do by any copy, leases, or grants of their respective parts before any partition made; and in case any demandant be tenant in actual possession to the tenant in the action for his part and proportion, or any part or purpart thereof, the said tenant or tenants, or his or their respective conveyances, to be divided by virtue of a writ of partition as aforesaid, for any term of life, lives or years, or uncertain interest, the said tenant shall stand and be poised of the said purparts and proportion for the like term, and under the same conditions and covenants when it is set out severally in pursuance of this, or any other act, statute, or law to that purpose.

And it is further enacted, That the respective sheriffs, their under-sheriffs and deputies, and in case of sickness or disability in the high sheriff, all justices of the peace, within their respective divisions, shall give due attendance and assist the sheriff in his said business; and where it shall be impossible for him to perform the same, or shall be unable to come to the court upon oath, and there allowed of, or otherwise liable every of them to pay unto the demandant such costs and damages as shall be awarded by the court, not exceeding five pounds, for which the demandant or plaintiff may bring his action in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Hildingfer, Before no affinns, protection, privilege or wager of law shall be allowed, nor any more than one imparlance; and in case the demandant doth not agree to pay to the sheriffs or under-sheriffs, justices, and jurors such fees as they shall respectively demand for their pains and attendance in the execution of the forementioned business, then the court shall award what each person shall receive, having respect to the distance of the place from their respective habitations, and the time they must necessarily spend about the same, for which they may severally bring their actions.
So if there be two tenants in common of a mansion, and they make a bailiff thereof, and one of them die, the survivor shall have an actIon of account, for the adtion given unto them for the arrearages upon the account was joint, Ca. Lit. 198. a.

So if two tenants in common sow their land, and a stranger catch the corn with his cattle, tho' that tenant and the heir of the tenant for them the trees is joint, and shall survive. Ca. Lit. 198. a.

Tenants in common may join or confer in debt or co venant for rent; but if they fever, the demand must be de una mediata of the whole rent, and not of a certain sum, which amounts to a moiety. Carib. 269. Muddy and Gooi. 10. and Lovelace. But in an avowry they ought to sever. Ca. Lit. 198. b.

And as in treasfus tenants in common shall join, so they shall for a nuisance done to their land, for it is personal, and concerns the profits of the land; but for foring of false deeds they shall sever, for that concerns the inheritance of the land; and if the nuisance be continued after the death of one of the tenants in common, his devisee shall join in action with the survivor, for the continuance thereof is as the new-crediting of such a nuisance.

A. makes a lease, in which the lessee covenants with the leffer, 'tis to remain; leffer grants him a recovery by a forfeiture, to several persons, and leesse affinns to J. S. in an action of covenant by the grantee of the reversion for no repairing; the question was, If in two common of a reversion could join in bringing an action of covenant against the assignee; and it was held, that they could and ought to join in this case, being a moening personal action, according to Libertys rule, which was held to be general, without any relation to any privity of contract; and that the covenant being indivisible, the wrong and damages could not be distributed because un

Two-tenants and tenants in common are to join in quare impetis, the first, because they are jointly seised, and claim by a joint title; the latter out of necessity, because the thing is intire. Ca. Lit. 197. b. 2 Mod. 23, 63. Comp. Incumb. 253. and wide fup. 7 Ann. cap. 18.

If joint-tenants or tenants in common refuse to set out their titles, the action must be brought against them both; but if one of them only occupy the land, the action is to be brought against him; or if one joint-tenant or tenant in common sets out the titles, and the other takes them away, the action must be brought against the wrong-doer.

The action is to be made to R. and G. rendering rent, and C. affinns his moiety to D. and after the rent is cleared, the leffer may bring an action of debt for the rent against B. and D. for the reversion remains intire. Palm. 283.

If two joint-tenants bring treasfus, and pending the action one of them dies, the writ shall not abate; for there brought against them, for in the latter case the action is both joint and several. Ca. Jat. 19. 4 Mod. 249, S. P.

Also where a quare impetis is brought by two joint-tenants, and pending the action one of them dies, the writ shall not abate; and this out of necessity, left the six months should elapse, and thereby the action be lost, Ca. Jat. 19.

If one joint-tenant refuses to join in action, he may be summoned and severed; but herein it is to be ob served, that if the person severed dies the writ abates, because the furvivor then goes for the whole, which he cannot do on that writ, where on the monuments and several for a moiety before the writ cannot have a double effect, to wit, for a moiety in case of summons and severance, and for the whole in case of furvivorship; and the law is the same if such joint-tenants proceed without summons and severance, for since both by the writ might by possibility recover their moiecties, they shall have for the whole in case of furvivorship, because the words and effect of the writ at the time of its first purchasing was that each might recover his moiety, and therefore a new writ must be purchased to enable one to proceed for the whole. Ca. Lit. 188.

But in personal and mixt actions where there is summons and severance, and yet after such summons and severance the plaintiff goes on for the whole, there if one of them dies, yet the writ shall not abate, because they go on for the whole after summons and severance, and if they were to have a new writ, it would only go to the court authority to go on for the whole. Ca. Lit. 197.

So if two joint-tenants bring a writ of ward, and they are summoned and severed, and the severed person dies, the writ shall not abate, because after such severance the writ is to proceed for the whole; and so he dies in this case, after the death of his comanion. Ca. Lit.

So in quare impetis by two joint-tenants, and one is summoned and severed, and the severed person dies, the writ shall not abate, because the advowson is an intire thing; and he proceeded for the whole after the severance, and so he may after the death, Ca. Lit. 197. b. Drye 275.

If two joint-tenants bring an affize, and the one is severed, if it be found that the other had goods taken upon the land, he shall recover solely damage for them. 11 H. 4. 17. 1 Rad. Adr. 571.

If one joint-tenant is to have a bill of sale, and he in his plea ought to join in action, and one alone brings the action, the defendant ought to plead the tenancy in common in abatement, which is a defence the law allows him, that he may not be twice charged; but if he plead in chief, and it be found against him, the plaintiff shall have judgment, because he loses his own bill. If joint-tenancy be pleaded by one or deed in abate ment of the defendant's action, he cannot take a gene rall averment that the tenant is sole, for it is that were directly to contradict him, and set him aside by a mas ter of less force and solemnity than they are; but he may confede the joint-tenant which the tenant pleads after the fine levied, but that the joint-tenant not name released to the tenant before the writ brought, or the both the connexes enfeoffed one who enfeoffed the to nant; but at this day, if the tenant had been enfeoffed by deed, and had pleaded joint-tenancy to abate the de mandant's writ, the demandant might have averred ge erally, that the tenant is sole, for the statute 3 Ed. 4. de conjunitim seftissi extends to joint-tenanc y deed, though not by fine; but by the Common law the tenant in abatement is allowed that plea, where the te nant claimed under a deed, no more than when he claimed under a fine; but if the tenant claims by feoff

ment in pozi, and pleads that in abatement of the de mandant's action, the demandant may aver sole tenancy because the seoffment is to be proved with vero pro parte where credit is not more regarded by the court than the demandant's. 2 Leil. 523, 534.

By the Common law joint-tenants and tenants in common had no remedy against each other, where one alone received the whole profits of the estate, for he could not be charged as bailiff or receiver to his compa nions, unless he actually made him so; but now the 4 Ed. 5 Ann. cap. 16. it is provided, That they and their executors and administrators may have an account against the other as bailiffs, for receiving more than their pro portion, and against their executors and administrators Ca. Lit. 172. a. 186. a. 200. b. 3 Lew. 218. So if two had a ward in common, and one took all the pro

But if one joint-tenant or tenant in common has ejected or withheld the possession from his companion such joint-tenant or tenant in common so ejected might have maintained an ejectiwm fimul against such ejector.

Ca. Lit. 199. b.

In ejecting, a joint tenant or tenant in common may of fend against the statutes against forcible entries, either by the forcible ejecting, or forcibly holding out his comanion.

It having been determined that at Common law a woman could not be endowed of an use, and most lands before the 27 Hen. 8. being put in use, so that there was no confidence to be had in the dower at the Common law: this obliged the wife, or her friends, either before or after the marriage, to procure the husband to take the legal estate, and for that purpose either to settle it to the use of him and his wife for life, or in take some other way which considerers over he pleased: and this seems to have been the original of jointures. 3 Bac. Abr. 221. See Dowry, Curtice of England.

But this method was an effectual security to the wife, yet was no title to the husband, or his heirs, in barring her of dower before the 27 Hen. 8. for by the Common law a woman could not be barred of her dower by any affliction or assurance to her of other lands whereby she was not dowerable, (except in the case of dower ad extra terrae, or ex affectu patriarum, which were allowed to be dowers to jointures of themselves, and were a good bar of any other dower,) if such affliction, or assurance was made by the husband before marriage or after, or by the heir after his death; and tho' they were expressly said to be in full bar and recompence of her dower, yet might the receiver her dower notwithstanding. The having a right to the same by the third part of all her husband's lands, vested and fixed in her immediately upon the marriage and the husband's feisin thereof; and this right, like all others, could not be transferred or extinguished but by a release thereof; and if no such release were made, it might, as to such as were given by the husband, or the husband's heirs, for want of any proper means to destroy it; and if it still existed, her remarriage was open to the same entry into possession; and of this there can be no doubt as to any estate or purchase procured by the husband to be made to his wife after marriage, in lieu and satisfaction of her dower, for she is not at this day bound in such case; and if it were made before marriage, it was at Common law no bar, for two reasons; 1. Because at the time of marriage, she had no title, and therefore an estate made to her then could be no bar to a right which accrued to her after. 2. Because immediately upon the marriage the right first vested in her, and could not be extinguished or barred by a release thereof; so if such affliction or assurance were from the heir in pais, this was no bar neither; but if it were by indenture or fine, then it should seem an essopoll to her to demand any other dower, because her title to dower was then complete and certain; and the has by this acceptance concluded herself to demand same. 4 Co. 1. 1. Of jointure becoming a bar of dower by stat. 27 Hen. 8. and the rules to be observed in making a good jointure, and such a one as will be an effectual bar of dower.

2. How far the acts of a jointure, or her husband's acts may defeat her of this prebless; and how far she is intitled to the aid and assistance of a court of equity.

The maxims of the Common law, that no right could be barred before it accrued; and that a right or title to a freehold could not be barred by acceptance of a collateral satisfaction, and the reasons forefoold allowing the wife to claim her dower, and also the benefit of such settlement as was made in her, which being contrary to justice. Co. Lit. 36 b.

By the stat. 27 H. 8. cap. 1. sect. 6, it is enabled, "That whereas divers persons have purchased, or have eftates made and conveyed of and in divers lands, tenements and hereditaments unto them and their wives, and to the heirs of the husband, or to those heirs of the wife, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten, or to the husband and to the wife for term of their lives, or for term of the life of the said wife, or where any such eftate or purchase of any lands, tenements or hereditaments hath nine; for though the entry of such a tenant be lawful per warrior & per ten, so that he cannot in any case be punished in an action of trespass at the Common law; yet the lawfulness of his entry no way excuses the violence, or lessens the injury done to his companion, and consequently the legal redress of the trespass is a moiety of a party at law. 1 Co. 234. 1 Pae. 490.

But though joint-tenants and tenants in common being actually ejected, had these remedies at Common law, yet such remedies were only extended to things real; and there was no remedy where a horfe, hawk, &c. were ejected by one joint-tenant or tenant in common, but by refusing it again when a proper opportunity offered. Lit. sect. 373.

If there be two tenants in common of a manor to which wifey and stray belong, and a stray doth happen, they are tenants in common of the same; and if the one doth take the stray, the other hath no remedy by action but to take him again; but if by prescription the one shall have the first beast happening as a stray, and the other the second, there an action lieth, if the one takes that which pertains to the other. Jointure. (Jointure) Is a covenant whereby the husband or some other friend in his behalf, affueth unto his wife, in respect of marriage, lands or tenements for term of life, or otherwise. Wolf. Symbol. part. 2. lib. 2. tit. Covenants. sect. 128. 27 Hen. 8. cap. 10. It is so called, either because granted various jountures in matrimonio, or because the land in joint-marriage is given jointly to the husband and wife, and after to the heirs of their bodies, whereby the husband and wife are made joint-tenants during the coverture. Co. lib. 3. Butler and Baker's case, 27. See Frank-marriage. Jointure is also used as the abstrait of joint-tenants. Co. lib. 3. sect. 3. Marquis of Winchester's case. Jointure is also by Bractan and Fleta used for joining of one bargain to another. hath been or hereafter shall be made to any husband and to his wife in manner and form above expressed, or to any other person or persons, and to their heirs and assigns, to the use and behalf of the said husband and wife, or to the use of the wife, as is before rehearsed, for the jointure of the wife; that then in every such case, every woman marrying having such jointure made, or hereafter to be made, shall not claim, nor have title to any dowry of the residue of the lands, tenements or hereditaments, that at any time were her said husband's, by whom she hath any such jointure; nor shall demand nor claim her dowry of and against them that have the lands and inheritances of her husband; but if the woman have not such jointure, then she shall be admitted and enabled to purvey, have, and demand her dowry by writ of dower, after the due course and order of the Common law of this realm; this act or any law or provision made to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

Sec. 7. Provided, "That if any such woman be lawfully espoused or evidenced from her said jointure, or from any part thereof, without any fraud or covin, by lawful entry, actum, or by discontinuance of her husband, then every such woman shall be endeavored of as much of the residue of her husband's tenements or hereditaments whereof she was before dwelleth, as the same lands and tenements so evicted and espoused will amount or extend unto and into.

Sec. 8. Provided also, "That if any wife have, or hereafter shall have, any manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments unto her given or attorn'd after marriage for term of her life or otherwise, in jointure, except the same assurance be to her made by act of parliament, and the wife after that time to receive the same for her husband in whole the said jointure was made or attorn'd unto her; that then the same wife so overliving shall and may at her liberty at the death of her said husband refuse to have and take the lands and tenements to her given, appointed, or attorn'd during the coverture, for herself and her husband, in jointure, except the same assurance be to her made by act of parliament as is aforesaid, and thereupon to have, and take, demand, and take her dower by writ of dower or otherwise, according to the Common law, of all in such lands, tenements and hereditaments, as her husband was and good faled of any estate of inheritance at any time during the coverture; any thing, &c."

To make a good jointure within this statute, the following things are to be regarded:

1. The estate must take effect immediately upon the death of the husband. Therefore if an estate be made to the husband, for the remainder to J. S. for life, remainder to the wife for her jointure, this is no good jointure, for it is not within the words or intent of the statute; for the statute is designed, as a wife's dower for dowager, but that which came in the same place, and is of the same use to the wife, and though J. S. dies during the life of the husband, yet this is not good; for every interregnum not equivalent to dower being not within the statute, is a void limitation to deprive the wife of her dower. 4 Co. 3. Hutton 51.

2. If an estate be made to the wife of A. for life, the remainder to the wife for life, this is not good, though A. dies, living the husband. 4 Co. 2. Hob. 151.

3. So if an estate be made to the husband for life, remainder to J. S. for years, the remainder to the wife for her jointure, this is not good, though the years are expired in the life-time of the husband. Hutton 51. Ward 32.

But if an estate be made to the husband for life, then remainder to the wife for the life of the husband, to support contingent remainder, remainder to the wife for life, this is a good jointure, though not within the express words of the statute, for it is within the equity and design of it. 4 Co. 3.

4. If a man makes a jointure to the wife of himself for life, and remainder to the son and his wife, and the heirs of the body of the son, this is no good jointure, though the wife hath an immediate frehold; for to be within the cases of the statute whereby dower is barred, the wife must have a sole property after the death of her husband, Winch 32.

A feoffment in fee in the use of the feeoffee for life, remainder to the use of his second son for life, remainder to the use of his third son; if either the second son dies, the remainder to the heir of the son; the father dies, the son marries, and dies; the wife is not by this fetlement barred of her dower; for this at the time of the creation was no certain provision for the wife's life, for the son might have married and died in the life of the father. 1 Sid. 3. 4. pin Brown.

A jointure limited to take effect immediately on the death of the husband shall take effect as well on a civil as a natural death; therefore if the husband enters into reliction, is banished, or abjures the realm, the wife shall have her jointure. Co. Lit. 133. 3 Mozley 185. 1 Hul. Rep. 407. 2 Vern. 104.

The estate must be for term of the wife's life or a greater estate. Therefore if an estate be made to the wife for the life of others, it is no good jointure; for if the survives such a marriage, as the may, then it would be no competent provision during her life, as every jointure within the statute ought to be. Co. Lit. 36 6. 4 Co. 3. 33. Bridgman.

If an estate be limited to the wife upon condition, her acceptance of such a conditional jointure makes it good; for the estate supports the wife well enough, and it is in her power to continue it during her life; therefore an estate limited to the wife's jointure is a good jointure; for it cannot determine but by her will. 4 Co. 3. a. 33.

3. The estate must be made to herself and to others in trust for her. This rule, my Lord Coke says, is so necessary to be observed, that though the wife should attend to a jointure made in trust for her, yet it would not be good; for if the statute only bars the dower when by it the provision (which was formerly an ufe) is executed in her. Co. Lit. 36 b.

But as the intention of the statute was to secure the wife a competent provision, and also to exclude her from claiming dower, and likewise her settlement, it seems that a provision or fetlement on the wife's behalf by whom it is affected, if it answers the intention of the statute, will be enforced in a court of equity.

4. The estate must be in satisfaction of her whole dower. The reason hereof is, that if it be in satisfaction of part only, it is uncertain for what part it is in satisfaction of her dower, and therefore void in the whole. Co. Lit. 36 8.

If an estate be made to the wife in satisfaction of part of her dower before marriage, and after marriage other lands are conveyed to her after marriage, the shall have dower of all the lands of her husband, notwithstanding the settlement is in satisfaction of part. 4 Co. 5.

5. An estate must be expressed to be in satisfaction of her dower; and how for a collateral recompense shall be a bar of dower or jointure. My Lord Coke says, that it must be expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of her dower's but averre, for this does not deem requisite, either within the words or intention of the statute. Co. Lit. 36 b. 33.

Therefore where an assurance was made to a woman to the interest it should be for her jointure, but it was not so expressed in the deed, the opinion of the court was, that it might be averred that it was for a jointure, and that such assurance was not transferable, Owen 33, and there said, that it had been so likewise ruled between the Queen and Dame Brancum. 10 Co. 33.

But that an estate to a wife for life cannot be averred to be in satisfaction of a dower or jointure, unless it be expressed to be so in the will, or there can be no averment contrary to the will, and consequently there can be no averment... be no averment contrary to the consideration implied in every devise, which is the kind of the tesoror. Cre. Eq. 36, 0. 9, s. c. it was, though and but it was, that her right to dower cannot be barred by a collateral reversion, since such collateral reversion is no proper conveyance of such right. Man. pl. 103.

A man devised his lands to his wife till his daughter come to age, and after to M. in tail, remainder over in fee; and devises further, that M. should pay after her age of nineteen years to his wife 12 l. per annum in recompence of her dower, and if the failed in payment, that then his wife should have the land for her life; the wife before her daughter came to nineteen brought her writ of dower, and recovered a third part; and after the daughter came to nineteen, and for non-payment of the 12 l. the mother entered; and the question was, if her entry were lawful; and argued that it was, and that by bringing of her writ of dower she had not waved the benefit to have the fee simple hereditary, or to make a gift of it, but her title accrued after, for non-payment of the 12 l. But it was adjudged, that she having recovered a third part in dower, she should have the rent by the will; for it is against the intention of the will that she should have both, and the acceptance of one is a waiver of the other. Cre. Eq. 128. Gapping v. Herdson.

One felled in fee of lands held in foage, and of other lands in tail held in capite, devises by will in writing the third part of all his lands to his wife in recompence of her dower, and dies; the enters into the third part of the fee-simple lands without bringing her writ of dower, and applies the maintenance of the wife to the support of the 8. of jointures; which flows that she took this by the devise, as a jointure within that statute, and that taking by the devise she could have no more than the devisee had power to dispose of, which was only his fee-simple lands; and she by entering into a third part thereof the husband's intention to have it as a jointure, (for otherwise she could not enter till assignment by the heir or screenshot;) but in this case the being barred only by reason of the statute, as the book says; it appears, that before that statute she would not have been barred of her dower by such devise. Dyer 220. 4 Co. 4.

An act of London, who had a great portion in the chamber of London, the husband dies before taking it out, but makes his will, and devises this money to her wife, provided that she should not claim her dower; and yet after his death she brought her writ of dower, and thereupon a bill was brought in Chancery to have her realte her dower, or renounce the devise, and for an injunction in the mean time, but could not prevail; the money belonging to her in her own right by the custom, for want of the husband's letting the property thereof; and tho' he had, yet it was admitted it would have been no bar of dower, being totally collateral. This case was heard in Chancery. The court ruled that the coffee house had forfeited the money by suing for dower. 2 Vent. 340. and 1 Chin. Chapps 181. Phineas's cafe.

On this distinction it has been often ruled in Chancery, that if lands, money, goods, &c. are devised to a woman, without laying in lieu or satisfaction of dower, they must be delivered to her, and cannot be considered as a bounty, and implies a consideration in itself, but if it be laid in lieu or recompence of dower, there the wife cannot have both, but may wave which the pleader. 2 Chin. Co. 24. 2 Vern. 365. Priced. Chin. 153.

A devise legacies to his wife out of his personal estate, and devised to her part of his real estate during her widowhood, and devised the residue of his estate to trustees for twenty-one years, for payment of debts and legacies, and the remainder of the whole estate he devised to the plaintiff, (who was his godson, and of his name, but a remote relation,) for life, and to his first and other sons in tail; and my Lord Chancellor Somers decreed, that though it was not devised to be in lieu and satisfaction of dower, yet as it may be plainly collected to be so intended, (he having made a disposition of his whole estate,) and as a collateral satisfaction, may be a good bar to dower in equity, though not at law; that the first either take her dower, and wave the devise, or accept the devise, and wave the dower; but this decree was reversed by Wright, Lord Keeper, and the decree of reversal affirmed in parliament. 2 Vent. 365. Lawrence v. Lawrne. Adv. Eq. 218-9, S. C. and vide 1 Vern. 463.

J. S. Infeftment of the wife belonging to the manor of Whitechurch, in which manner there is the following cufion, viz. that the first wife of every tenant should have her free bench in all the lands whereof her husband was ever feised during the coverture; the second wife a moiety, and the third a third part so long as she kept her husband above ground. J. S. in consideration of a marriage and marriage portion, covenants with trustees that within two months after the marriage he would settle all his lands to the following uses, viz. As to part of the lands, to the uses of himself and his wife for their lives, remaining to the first wife, &c. in tail male; and as to the remaining lands, to the use of himself for life, remaining to his first wife, &c. with a proviso, that the lands so settled on the wife should be in lieu of her curtail estate; and one of the points in this case was, whether this jointure not being made expressly in lieu of her dower, but only laid in the proviso, and the being an infant at the time of making the articles, and not a party to them, would be excluded from claiming her free bench; and it was held, that the should be obliged to abide by her jointure; and the cove of Vaste and Langdon was cited, where a sum of money was settled upon a woman before marriage for her provision and that therefore the Master of the Rolls was of opinion the husband should have both that and her dower; but the Chancellor reversed the decree; and confined her to her fettlement. Mich. 6 Geo. 2. Jordan v. Savage. 3 Ber. Ab. 226.

6. The estate must be made during the coverture. This is the very words of the act of parliament require, and therefore if a jointure be made to the wife during the coverture in satisfaction of dower, the may waive it after her husband's death; but if the enters and agrees therein, the is concluded; for though a woman is not bound by any act when she is not at her own disposal, yet if she agrees to it as made at liberty, it is her own act, and she cannot avoid it. Cre. Lit. 164.

If a jointure be made to the wife before coverture, and the husband and wife alien by fine, the wife shall not afterwards be endowed of any lands of her husband's; for since the quitned her dower when she was at her own disposal, she can claim nothing but the jointure; and that she has passed away by the fine levied; but if the jointure was made during the coverture, and then the relinquished it by fine, yet the shall have her dower of the other lands; for the acceptance of a jointure during the coverture is no bar of her dower, and the pawning of it by fine cannot be construed as acceptance of property in them, since they are capable of being disposed of, but to bar her dower in those lands. Cre. Lit. 36. Bull. 163.

The husband after marriage settled lands to the use of himself and wife in tail, for her jointure, and during the coverture part of the lands were evicted, and the husband died, and the wife entered into possession of the lands, and upon a reference out of the court of wards to the two Chief Justices, it was resolved, that she should have a recompense for the part evicted. Mar 717. pl. 1002.

A feignory was granted to the husband and wife, and their heirs, the tenant attorns, the husband dies, and the feignory forgiven to the wife, and leaving the wife and a son in tail of dower, in bar of which the heir pleads acceptance of homage from the tenant; and this was held a good bar; for though the might have dispaired to such effect during 4
the coverture, yet by the acceptance of homage the husband cannot be prohibited her; and this estate differs from the estate by the heir in paius and her acceptance; because if he gives her a wrong estate, and she accepts thereof, this is no bar of her rightful estate; but here the having two titles, either as a purchaser to have the whole, or as a wife to have the third part, her acceptance of the other being done by her own free will, because she cannot have both out of the same land. 3 Leon. 272. 3 Co. 27.

If lands are given to husband and wife, and the heirs of the husband, who dies, the wife may disaffire to this estate made during the coverture, and then it will be an estate to the husband and his heirs as heirs, and to the wife have her share. But if this estate be made to the husband and wife for the life of the husband, remainder to the right heir of the husband, it should seem she cannot in this case disaffire, because the estate upon the husband's death is determined and gone, but this by this contrivance all women may be delated of their dower as to estates purchased after the marriage. 4 Black. 352-3. 3 Co. 27.

If an estate be made to the wife for her jointure during the coverture, the remainder to J. S. in fee, and the wife waves this jointure, J. S. shall have the remainder; for here was a particular estate at the time of creating the remainder, so that it has the circumstances of a remainder, being the residue of a particular estate then in being; and since the particular estate was defeasible by an act that could not hurt the remainder, the remainder upon such defeasement of the particular estate comes in being. 2 Bl. & Bl. 29.

A covenant to stand seised to the use of himself in tail, the remainder to his wife for life, the remainder to B. in tail, and then he makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and this wife for their lives, as a jointure, the remainder to C. and dies without issue, the wife is remitted; for where a later and defeasible, a former and indefeasible, in the same person, there must be a remitter. 3 Co. Lit. 348. a.

But in this case the wife hath two titles, both waivable by her, the first indefeasible by any third person, the second defeasible by a third person; for upon her claiming by the second title the waves the first, and consequently the remainder in B. commences, and he shall have his action, and therefore must be in her former title, to save the contention and trouble of the action. 2 Co. Lit. 348. a.

But if an estate be made to the husband in tail, the remainder to the wife for life, the remainder to the right heirs of the husband, the husband afterwards makes a feoffment in fee to the use of the husband and wife for their lives, the remainder to the right heirs of the husband, the husband dies without issue; the wife may claim by which the pleas, and is not remitted unless annul, because there are not two titles, the one indefeasible and the other defeasible by a third person, but both equally firm; for the right heirs of the husband upon the waves of the first estate by the wife can claim nothing in the land contrary to the feoffment of his ancestor, and therefore that estate which the wife claims is indefeasible; and no stranger is prejudged by being put to his action. 2 Co. Lit. 357. Dyer 351.

But if the makes no election, the shall be supposed to be in of his elder estate, because every one is presumed to choose what is most for his benefit. 2 Red. Abr. 422.

If the heir has an old right before the coverture, and afterwards takes a jointure of the same lands, the shall be remitted. Crou. 340.

An estate vested to the husband for life, remainder to him, except such of the lands as the husband should devise; this exception is repugnant to the grant, because the settlement might be avoided by the husband devolving the whole. Hob. 72.

2. How for the all of a jointress or her husband's all may defeat her of this provision; and how for he is intitled to the jointure, there is a court of equity. It has been already observed, that if a man makes a jointure on his wife before or after marriage, and they both join in a fine, that he is so far bound thereby, that if the jointure was made before marriage the is barred to claim dower in any other lands of the husband's; but if the jointure was made during coverture, the may claim dower in the other lands. Co. Lit. 56. Dyer 358.

But if a wife joins with her husband in a bargain and sale of the land by deed indented and inrolled, yet it shall be so far to the husband's prejudice as if the wife cannot be examined by any court without writ, and there is no writ allowed in this case. 2 Lees. 673. Hob. 234. But if a seme covert joins with her husband in levying a fine to raie a sum of money by way of mortgage, this shall bind her; yet in this case the doth not absolutely depart with her estate for life, but there results a trust to her husband, which will be sufficient to reintail her in the jointure. 3 Co. Can. 162.

If tenant in tail of a trust makes a mortgage, or acknowledges a judgment or statute, and then levies a fine, and settles a jointure, the jointreis shall hold it subject to, the mortgage or judgment, in the same manner as if the mortgagor or confuor had been tenant in tail of the jointure, and after the mortgage or judgment had levied a fine, and made a jointure, because the subsequent declaration of the use of the fine is merely the act of the tenant in tail, and he cannot by any act of his own make a subsequent conveyance take place of a precedent, and the tenant in tail has a right under the statute so as tenant in tail got by the recovery or fine, and that fine was subject to all the charges he had lain upon it. 1 Chan. Co. 119. 120.

If a man before marriage articles to settle a jointure on his intended wife, and the marriage is consummated, and the husband dies before any settlement made, an execution of the articles will be decreed in equity. 2 Vent. 343.

So where A. gave a voluntary bond after marriage, to make a jointure to his wife, and he made a jointure accordingly, and then the wife delivered up the bond, and the jointure being evicted, the court held that it should not be evicted, for the personal estate and the lands were not sold, and there were no creditors affected by it; for the delivery of the bond by a seme covert could no way bind her. 1 Vern. 257. Beard and Nashel.

So if a jointreis brings her bill to have an account on the real and personal estate of her late husband, and to have a satisfaction thereupon, for a defeat of value of her jointure lands, which the had covenanted to be and to continue of such value, and the defendant insists that this is a covenant which founds only in damages, and properly determinable at law; th'o' it be admitted that a court of equity cannot regularly affect damages, yet it is proper for the court to say, if there were no such action as a court of equity, the personal estate and the lands would be valued at the value of the defect of the lands, and report it to the court, which may decree such defect to be made good, or send it to be tried 'at law upon a quantum demanunt.' 4 Vent. 15.

If there be a jointreis, and a covenant that her jointure shall be of such a yearly value, and it falls short, that the estate be not without impeachement of wafe, yet the man commit waste so far as to make up the defect of the jointure. 1 Abr. Eq. 241-2.

J. S. made a settlement on his eldest son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to one of them to appoint any of the lands not exceeding 100l. per annum to any wife he should afterwards marry, for a jointure, (the father being under an apprehension that he was then married to a woman which the father dislik'd, and had not intention his son should provide for;) the father died, and the son married that very woman, (th'o' there was strong presumptive proof the complaint was made that the lands were not of that value, nor request to make it up, and died; upon issue upon a bill brought by the widow to have the jointure made up 100l. while or children was not to be considered as a voluntary covenant, and therefore decreed the deficiency to be supplied by the circumstances mentioned in the last, and her neglect in not requiring it during coverture; for the laches of a feme covert cannot be imputed to her.

If a bill is brought by an heir at law, or any other person, against a widow or jointure, the juryman is under pretence that his ancestor was only tenant for life, &c. and he seeks for a discovery of deeds and writings, whereby he would avoid the title of theointure, he shall never have such a discovery, unless he lays his bill submits to confirm her title, and then he shall, in the absence of form, be estopped from acting in some made after marriage. Journeys accompt. (Dictum computare) Is a term in the law, to be thus understood: If a writ is abated without the default of the plaintiff or defendant, but merely by default of the clerk, either for false Latis, variance, or other just cause, or by default of the defendant, as for want of a good summons; in all these cases the plaintiff may purchase a new writ, which if it be purchased by journeys accoutns, that is, within as little time as possible after the beginning of the first writ, and (as the space of fifteen days has been held a convenient time for the purchase of it) then this second writ shall be as a continuance of the first. But where the first writ abated by the default of the defendant himself, as by mislaking the name of the tenant or of the vail; or where it abated for non-tenure of his whole, as it ought; because the first writ was brought without any manner of cause; in all these cases the plaintiff may have a new writ by journey accounts. This writ must be brought in the same court where the first writ was, and of the same quantity in that writ contained: It must be between these who are parties to the first; as where one of the plaintiffs or defendants dies; but in no case where there is but one plaintiff. Nor will it lie, except where the first writ was adhered and returned on record. See Co. Rep. 6. fol. 9. Speaker's cafe, and 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Journeys accounts.

The defendant pleaded in bar a judgment had against the interlace, in an action of debt upon bond in the court of Exchequer in Ireland, and upon demurrer, there judgment for the defendant in C. B. and affirmed in B. R., upon a writ of error in the court of B. R. in England, the principal question was, whether debt lies in Ireland upon a judgment obtained in B. R. in England, and all the court inclined strongly that it does not lie; that Ireland is to be considered as a foreign nation, and upon such a subordinate party, so, not part of the realm of England; that acts of parliament made here, extend not to Ireland, unless particularly named; much less judgments obtained in the courts here; nor is it possible they should, because we have no officers to carry them into execution there; for tho' mandatory writs issue the same, the officers of the court of, Ireland, remedy do not, as appears in Vaugh. 290. Befides debt on a judgment is a less action, and must be brought in the same county where the judgment was obtained; a fieri, not in a different kingdom. Accordingly the court were of opinion to affirm the judgment; but the case stood over for another argument. Mich. 11 Geo. 2. Osnow v. Ramph. In Easaier term following the plaintiff in error declining to speak to it again, judgment was affirmed, nifo, &c.

Isth. (From the French i6fier, i emeore.) It hath divers applications in the Common law; sometimes being used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profit growing from amerciments or fines; and sometimes for profits of lands or tenements. 10 El. 2. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 39. Sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join, and put their cause to the trial of the jury: And yet in all thefe it hath but one signification, which is an effect of a cause preceding, as the children are the effect of the marriage between the parents; the profits growing to the King or lord, from the punishment of any man's offence, is the effect of his transgression; the point referred to the trial of twelve men, is the effect of pleading or procels. Ilsue in this signification is either general or special; general ilsue feemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury, to bring in their verdict, whether the defendants have done any such thing, as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. For example; If it be an offence against any statute, and the defendant plead Not guilty; this being put to the jury, is called the general ilsue. And if a man complain of a private wrong, which the defendant demeth, and pleads no wrong nor dishonour; and this being put to the jury, it is likewise the general ilsue. Kitchin, fol. 225. See Dufit, and Student, fol. 158. The special ilsue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both parties join thereupon, and go either to a demurrer, if it be quotidius juria, or to trial by the jury, if it be quotius factis, 4 Hen. 8. 3. 18 Eliz. c. 12. 1. Where the words issue, or heirs of the body, in a will give an estate by purchase or definite.
2. Where the words issue, or heirs of the body, in a deed give an estate by purchase or definite; and where the same words are only a description of the person.
3. In what cases the general issue may be pleaded.

A. devised in fee of Black-ace, Green-ace, and White-ace, has issue a son and two daughters, and devises Black-ace to the ton and his heirs, Green-ace to the eldest daughter and her heirs, and White-ace to the youngest daughter and her heirs. It is said, as his child died without issue of his body, then the other surviving shall have totam illam partem, &c., between them equally to be divided. A dies, the eldest daughter dies leaving issue, and then the son dies without issue. The words totam illam partem give only an estate for life. And per Grady J. Tho' it was objected, that such estate for life in the surviving youngest sister is defeated by descent of the son, as to now the estate limited by the will is void; it may be answered, that tho' now upon the matter it be void, yet ab initio it was not so; for it became void by matter of later time, viz. by descent of the fee-simple; for if one of the daughters had died without issue in the life time, her moiety as her land back to the son and the other sister, there is no coparcenary; for the son has all the fee, and the moiety of the estate is executed, and the other moiety exspectant, and the sister has a moiety for life, and then the devise not void. And per Shute J. If both daughters had survived the son, they should have fee in Black-ace, but not by the will, but by descent in coparcenary. 2 Les. 129. Mich. 29 Eliz. B. R. How-kins's case.

B. devises a term to A. for life, and after to the issue of A. and for want of issue of A. to B. was adjudged a good remainder to B. in B. R. lately, but revered in Cam. Statute, and a difference taken between such limitation to children, and to the issue; per Lord Keeper. 2 Clun. Cafes 212. Mich. 27 Cas. 2. in the case of Warman v. Seymour, cited as the case of Piers v. Reresby.

A. devises a term to his wife, and after her death to A. for life, and after to the issue of A. and for want of issue of A. to B. was adjudged a good remainder to B. in B. R. lately, but revered in Cam. Statute, and a difference taken between such limitation to children, and to the issue; per Lord Keeper. 2 Clun. Cafes 212. Mich. 27 Cas. 2. in the case of Warman v. Seymour, cited as the case of Piers v. Reresby.

A. devises a term to his wife, and after her death to A. for life, and after to the issue of A. and for want of issue of A. to B. was adjudged a good remainder to B. in B. R. lately, but revered in Cam. Statute, and a difference taken between such limitation to children, and to the issue; per Lord Keeper. 2 Clun. Cafes 212. Mich. 27 Cas. 2. in the case of Warman v. Seymour, cited as the case of Piers v. Reresby.

B. devises lands to his second son and his heirs for ever, and for want of such heirs, then to the right heirs of A. A. died, the second son died without issue, living the eldest son adjudged, that the second son has the estate fail, and no more, because the words (and for want of such heirs) are void in point of limitation, and import no more than want of issue; because the second son could never die without heirs fo long as his brothers, or any heirs of his father were living. Therefore the heir at law in this case shall take by defeat, and not by the will. 1 Salter 323. Trin. 12 W. 3. B. R. Nottingham v. Tennison.

C. and B. in trust for C. for life, with power to make leaves, and after C.'s decease in trust for the heirs male of the body of C. Cooper Ch. decreed only an estate for life to be conveyed to C. and to his heir E. sons in tail male. But Harcourt K. reverfed that decree, and decreed an estate-tail; though he had not endeavored the effect. In these articles founded on the agreement of parties, the husband in such case might be only tenant for life; but in a will you must take the words as you find them. Pach. 1711. 2 Fern. 670. Baisv v. Coleman.

2. Where the words issue, or heirs of the body, in a deed give an estate by purchase or definite; and where the same words are only a description of the person.

Where the heir takes any thing which might have been vested in the ancestor, he shall be by defeat. Arg. 1 Rep. 98. Pach. 21 Eliz. in Shelly's case.

The word heir does not serve for a name of purchase if he be not legal heir, nor the word issue. The word son or daughter is more strictly extended. So in A. the estate is purchased and will, though they are bartsafers. Jenk. 203. pl. 27.

An use of a term for years to husband and wife, and after to their issue, they then having none, is all one, as if limited to them and the heirs of their bodies, and the issue takes nothing as a purchaser; per Lord Keeper. 2 Clun. Cafes 212. Mich. 27 Cas. 2. in the case of Warman v. Seymour, cited as the case of Piers v. Reresby.

A. posessed of a term for 2000 years, in consideration of marriage, &c., with M. demised to trustees for 1700 years part of the 2000 years, out of which 1700 years, a term of 99 years was particularly limited to A. for life, and the remaining part of the 1700 years was declared to be for a proportion of A. and M. and their children, if A. and M. or any of their issue should die in their lives, remaining to the heirs of the body of A. on M. they both died, leaving issue three daughters, B. C. and D. and got an assignment of the whole term, and took administration to A. B. brought her bill. And the question was, if the child should have a third part with C. and D. And though it was insuficient for them, that the trust of the whole term vested in A. and was executed in him, and that the children, though heirs of his body, could not take in this case; yet the Master of the Rolls conceived, that in regard, a particular term of 99 years was taken out of the 1700, and particularly limited to A. that the trust of the whole term, as to the 1700 years was not executed to A. and cited the case of Oakes v. Chafford, and Thebrume v. Campnon, and the case of Warman v. Seymour, where, by advice of judges, an alienation being to one for life; and then to her issue, it was held, that the issue took by purchase, and issue was not taken to be a word of limitation to vest the whole term in the mother. And yet in legal understand ing, issue is a word of limitation, and not of purchase; and therefore conceived that though in the principal case, the word (heirs) is not properly a word of purchase, yet there being a particular estate for life, during a particular term, decreed A. the limitation to the heirs of his body after his death, on a marriage, and carry it to all the children equally; and the rather, because it was declared in the deed, that after A.'s death, the trustees should execute estates to the person and personas respectively, that should be interested, according to their respective shares therein, which the wed, that the children should stand to the other shares. 2 Fern. 23. Pach. 1637. Word v. Bradley.

A. posessed of a term for years, settles it in trust for marriage for himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband; A. dies, leaving B. a son; per Somers C. Wed. 1791. Itinerant, (itinerarii,) Travelling, or taking a journey. Those were anciently called justices itinerant, who were fent with a commission into divers counties to hear such caufes especially as were termed pleas of the Crown, and the journeys themselves were called iters. See Judges in eye.

Judities, Was first instituted by Boniface 8th in the year 1300, who granted a plenary indulgence and remission of sins to all those who should visit the churches of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Rome in that year, and stay there fifteen days; and this he ordered to be observed once in every hundred years, which Clement 6th reduced to fifty years in the year 1350, and to be held upon the day of the circumference of our Saviour. Urban the 4th, in the year 1388, reduced it to every 23 years, that being the age of our Saviour. And that every age might partake of this benefit, Sixtus 6th, anno 1475, reduced it to every twenty-five years.

One of our Kings, viz. Edward 2. caufed his birthday to be observed in the nature of a jubilee, when he was fifty years old, and not before or after: And this he did by releasing prisoners; by pardoning offences, and discharging good men, making good laws, and granting many privileges to the people. And because when a jubilee was first instituted, it was ordered to be observed every hundred years; therefore

Judges, (st. Juste, Lat. iudicis,) A person who is in very importance, who doth determine any cause or quifition, real or personal. Jofeph. The commiffions of the judges are bounded with this express limitation, Facio quod ad iurisprudentia pertinent sedegnum legem & confuetudinem Angliae. The judge at his creation takes an oath, that he shall indifferently minifter justice to all othermen that shall come before him, and that he shall not forbear to do, though the King by his letters, or by express word of mouth, should command the contrary. Et it is a maxim in the law, quos non debet de iudeo in proprio coitu. King Henry the Fourth, when his eldest son for the Prince was by the Lord Chief Jusice for some great misdemeanours, committed to prison, thanked God, that he had a son of that obedienc, and judge fo impartial, and of such undoubted courage: Thifory is well known, and may be read at large both in Stowe and Daniel, in vita H. 5. Fortunio in his book de Laudibus Legum Angliae 53. Speaketh of a judge, com- plaining of a judgment given against a gentleman who was accused by her own woman, without any other proof, for murdering her husband, was thereupon concerned and burnt: The man, who accused her being within a year convicted for the same offence, confess that his misfreh was altogether innocent of that very fact. But this judge (as the fame author adds) Supet fagre quinque saepe in vita sua animam ejus facit postergum. In 7 H. 4. the King demanded Cofaigne justice, if he law one in his presence kill’d, &c. and another (which was not culpable) should be indicted of this before him, what he would do in this cafe? Which he answered, that he ought to render the judge against him, and to relate the matter fully to the King to procure him a pardon; for there he cannot acquit him at and give judgment according to his private knowledge. But where they have a judicial knowledge, there they may and ought to give judgment according to that. See the like doctrine approved by Lord Thurlow, in his dissenting opinion.

12. for it is a manifest Extradition that a man can be agent and patient in the same thing, and what Lord Coke says in Dr. Benham's case is far from any extravagancy; for it is a very reasonable and true saying, that if an act of parliament should ordain, that the same person should be judge and party, or, as it is the same thing, judge in his own cause, would be a void act of parliament; per Hale Ch. J. 12 Mod. 687.
This is a ground in the feudal law also, as appears in the Prelections of Wm. van Trenck, cap. 17. f. 401.
